The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

VICE PRESIDENT MARSHALL'S CREED OF AMERICANISM.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on the 7th instant the National Press Club of Washington invited the Vice President to be their guest. On that occasion in delivering an address he presented a creed that expressed his opinions with regard to Americanism at the present time. It is so beautifully expressed and in such terse American language that I should like to have it read from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

"I believe that the American Republic as instituted by the fathers constitutes the finest system of government ever ordained among men and affords the machinery for the righting of grievances without resort to violence, tumult, and disorder.

"I believe that every inequality which exists in the social and economic condition of the American people is traceable to the successful demands of interested classes for class legislation, and I believe, therefore, that practical equality can be obtained under our form of government by remedial legislation in the interest of the American people and not in the interest of any body thereof, large or small.

"I believe there is no justification in a government, where officials are elected and laws made by the people, for a minority to threaten bloodshed and anarchy unless the majority shall submit to the will of the minority.

"I believe that America belongs to American citizens, native and naturalized, who are willing to seek redress for their grievances in orderly and constitutional ways, and I believe that all others should be taught, peacefully if we can and forcibly if we must, that our country is not an international boarding house nor an anarchist café.

"I pledge myself to the support of these principles by my voice, my vote, and, if need be, by my fortunes and my life, and I promise my country to train my children in this most holy faith."

APPEAL OF RUSSIAN SOCIETIES.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent to present an appeal from 39 Russian societies in the United States, and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the appeal was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Russian Appeal.

Whereas, the supreme council of the peace conference in Paris has practically decided to enter into negotiations with the Bolshevist officials in Russia;

Whereas the supreme council has decided to meet the Bolshevist delegates as well as the delegates of the Russian loyal factions opposed to the Bolsheviki, on the Princes' Islands, on the 15th of February, 1919;

Whereas in the opinion of the loyal Russian organizations the Bolsheviki, in signing a separate peace with the central powers at Brest-Litovsk, have committed an act of high treason toward Russia as well as toward the allied cause in general;

Whereas, further, it has been proved that the Russian Soviet officials were on the pay roll of the Imperial German Government;

Whereas during the Bolshevist rule in Russia unspeakable terror has been going on and thousands and thousands of innocent men, women, and children have been murdered by the Bolsheviki without any trial, and taking into consideration that the Soviet terror was condemned by President Wilson on the 21st of September, 1918, in his address to all the neutral governments;

Whereas the Bolsheviki have abolished all the fundamental principles of liberty and civilization in Russia;

Whereas the Bolshevist rule has proved to be the greatest and most irreparable misfortune in Russia's history;

Whereas it is contrary to the national dignity of the peoples of Russia to meet the allied representatives somewhere in the backyard of Europe;

Whereas the very idea of a joint meeting at which representatives of Trotzky on the one hand and the loyal Russians on the other would meet constitutes an offense to loyal and honest Russia:

Resolved, To appeal to public opinion of the United States and the allied nations and to emphasize:

(a) That the loyal Russian organizations in the United States believe that the above decision of the supreme council at the peace conference in Paris is a fatal and historical error which might affect in a most harmful manner the civilization of the whole world;

(b) That the above decision of the allied governments is apt to strengthen the Bolshevist cause at the very moment when Trotzky's régime is on the verge of a complete collapse;

(c) That, notwithstanding the decision of the supreme council, the loyal Russian organizations feel their duty and will continue their fight against the Russian Bolshevist traitors; and

(d) Finally, that we are deeply convinced that the loyal Russian delegates should meet the allied representatives either in Paris or nowhere.

Executive Board of the General Committee of Russian National Defense (comprising 39 Russian organizations, societies, political groups, and professional unions, 5 Karpatho-Russian organizations and the consistory of the Greek Orthodox Church, with 250 branches in the United States and Canada); chairman, A. D. Semenoffsky; vice chairman, Lieut. Boris Brasol; members, Lieut. Commander P. E. Stogoff, Col. N. N. Koch, Rev. L. Tourkevich, Rev. P. Popoff, representatives of the Karpatho-Russians, Gataliak and Cherniak; secretaries, Capt. N. Vishnevsky, V. Shumsky. Voluntary Association of the Russian Army and Navy Officers in the United States; president, Col. I. Sidorkin. Union of Russian Engineers; president, Count S. Shullenberg; secretary, Engineer Osolin.

THE REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I simply wish to say that I am aware that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] desires to address the Senate on this report, and I myself intended to take some time in discussing the matter. I really did not want the conference report to be agreed to so hurriedly as was indicated yesterday. I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if he wishes to go on now?

Mr. PENROSE. I have no set speech to inflict upon the Senate. I have a few remarks to make about the conference report. I can go on now or I will be satisfied to have the Senator from Utah go on for a while and then I can take the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator, I think, yesterday announced that he desired to address the Senate before I did, and I think he had better proceed now.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I set forth my views very fully when the revenue bill was pending before the Senate prior to its reference to the committee of conference, and I do not know that I have much of anything to add. I should like to call attention, however, to some of the particular features of the bill as it comes from the conference committee.

Before discussing details I want to express my regret and concern that this bill has been the vehicle for irrelevant legislation. If that practice is to continue, Mr. President, a revenue bill will become a menace and a danger while it is passing through this body. Certainly the power of taxation is not meant to be used as a method of regulating the manners and habits of a great Nation. It is bad enough to have a 100 per cent tax on brass knuckles, because some people do not think that brass knuckles ought to be encouraged.

It is bad enough to have a discriminatory tax, in the paragraph relating to firearms, of an additional 15 per cent on pistols, because perchance there are some people in the community who think pistols lead to disorder and aid murders and burglaries, notwithstanding the fact that a very great number of people, and among them experts in the study of crime, say the possession of a pistol by the householder is a protection to him and his property and decreases crime. All the manufacturers of firearms were incensed and upset because, apparently, there was an unjust discrimination against pistols. These, Mr. President, are minor features of the bill, but illustrate the tendency to correct manners and control the habits of the people by taxation, which, to my mind, is a most dangerous practice to get into.

These punitive or corrective taxes are almost smuggled into the measure. Public attention is not concentrated on them. I take it, that if a bill were brought out in the open to control the use and manufacture of pistols there would be a tremendous and a legitimate opposition in the United States to any such legislation. In the secrecy of a committee room, however, a discriminatory tax can be put on, of which the American people have no knowledge, without any public sentiment behind it, but simply to gratify a few mistaken theorists.

But to come to the larger phases of the abuse, Mr. President, the bill, as the Senate will recall, during the closing hours of the debate, became the vehicle for a number of matters of general legislation. An amendment placing a punitive tax on campaign contributions was offered. A legislative body, like an individual, occasionally gets in a wayward mood, and I think the Senate that afternoon would have adopted almost any amendment of a general character to this bill. Anyhow, this amendment, which I do not hesitate to say is a freak amendment, was adopted by the Senate.

Congress nearly every year has legislated on the subject of campaign expenditures. The present law is quite rigorous. Congress can legislate in the future upon the use of money in politics and concerning expenditures in campaigns. But, Mr. President, it certainly reaches the height of absurdity for us to be called upon to retain it in a revenue measure carrying crushing burdens upon the taxpayer, the largest tax bill in the history of civilization, so far as we have any record. It seems humiliating to me to be called upon to consider, even for a few weeks, an amendment of this character. Its absurdity was shown upon the first examination when it was discovered that its author had made it retroactive.

Immediately the alarm signal was sounded in the Democratic and Republican camps, and the chairmen of both national committees viewed with horror, and naturally so, the thought of having a tax of 100 per cent imposed as a retroactive measure upon campaign contributions, made by contributors properly and legitimately interested in the success of one or the other of the two great parties; contributions made according to law, and made solely to promote what the contributors deemed, from their point of view, to be policies for the best interests of the country.

When the absurdity of this retroactive feature was realized everyone dropped it. The suggestion was then made that it should apply only to the future. Its author argued that money is now spent under existing law to a very large extent without publicity or without compliance with the requirements of law. But how much more, Mr. President, would the law be evaded if, in addition to regulation and penalty, a prohibitive tax should be imposed? If money heretofore has been spent in too large amounts in secret and surreptitious ways, the condition would be tenfold worse with an additional tax of 100 per cent imposed. Anyhow, the attempt to put this general legislation in the revenue bill failed, with the active or tacit consent of all present and taking part in the proceedings.

I am ready, Mr. President, to vote in this body and to go as far, I believe, as any Senator toward regulating campaign expenditures, and to go nearly to the point of forbidding them entirely, for the older I grow, and the more I reflect upon political conditions, the more I am convinced that the electorate to-day, with the benefit of 30 or 40 years of common-school education, are intelligent; that no campaign can be won which does not rest upon an appeal to their intelligence and reason, and that the old-fashioned methods, which required money, very largely have disappeared; but, anyhow, I do not want to make this bill ridiculous—a bill which will be read in Paris and all over the world as the peak of American taxation, representing the sacrifices of the taxpayer for the war, and to meet the requirements of demobilization—by having it appear that American statesmen did not have the courage or the wisdom to eliminate a freak amendment from a bill of this colossal importance.

Then the measure was made the vehicle for the child-labor amendment. Mr. President, I am not going to argue the merits of the child-labor law. The Northern States very largely within the last few years have adopted very stringent child-labor laws. This amendment does not impose any further restrictions concerning the employment of child labor than now exist in Pennsylvania, in all the New England States, and, so far as I know, in most of the large manufacturing States of the North. The opposition to the Pomerene amendment came from the South, where labor legislation of this character has not progressed to the same extent.

In a very large mail concerning the revenue bill, I do not think I received a single letter from the North protesting against this amendment, but many were received by me from the South. The vote on the proposition on the floor of the Senate showed that the opposition in this body came very largely from Senators from Southern States.

I am willing to concede the merits of the amendment, but, Mr. President, I only want to call the attention of the Senate, by this particular instance, to the danger of making a revenue bill the vehicle for these purposes. Here is a law which the Supreme Court of the United States declared unconstitutional; which that court declared exceeded the powers of Congress, even under the fiction of interstate commerce legislation, which covers such a multitude of sins; yet we are practically embodying into law, by the power of punitive taxation, a matter which the Supreme Court has declared to be beyond the power of Congress to do. Still the amendment remains in the bill; unquestionably it will be retained by a very large vote in the Senate, and I am now only calling attention to the evils of this practice.

The so-called "bone-dry" amendment then was added to the bill. I shall not argue the merits of that amendment either, but a revenue measure ought not to be made an agency for bringing about legislation affecting the police powers and the habits of the community. I call attention to these irrelevant amendments, Mr. President, in the hope that the practice will not be pursued, and to the fact that it may be necessary to amend the rules of the Senate so that amendments to revenue bills shall be confined to matters relating strictly and legitimately to the raising of revenue.

Other new legislation, which was added to the bill or modified in conference, may be referred to. While open to the same technical objection, yet there was some pertinence in its being considered. I refer to an amendment providing a bonus for officers and enlisted men in the military or naval forces of the United States. The Senate provided the bonus should be equivalent to one month's salary. The purpose is that the payment of the bonus shall be made immediately upon discharge, and to have provided one month's pay would have involved matters of calculation resulting in endless delay. So the conferees adopted an amendment providing a flat bonus of $60, which, roughly speaking, is two months' pay for an enlisted man, and they made the bonus apply, as a measure of democracy, to officers and enlisted men alike. Careful provision was made to protect the payment of this bonus from the intrigues and wiles of the claim agent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to ask the Senator whether, in the case of that amendment, the conference committee did not increase by 100 per cent the appropriation which was made by the Senate amendment?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Can the Senator point me to any rule or precedent which justifies such action on the part of the committee of conference? My understanding is that they have power to reduce but never to exceed the amount provided for in an amendment or which is required to carry it into effect.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the conferees were most careful not to violate the rules of the Senate or of the House of Representatives in exceeding their powers as conferees. So careful were they to avoid even the appearance of transcending their powers that they held a special session after the bill had been completed and its consideration finished. They spent the greater part of a day examining a number of amendments, which some of the conferees were fearful might have crossed the border line. As a result important and most meritorious amendments, in two or three instances, were dropped from the bill because it was feared there might be just a little appearance of exceeding the limits of the conference.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not mention the fact if it were not for the RECORD, but I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania now that this amendment as proposed in conference is a violation of the rule of the Senate. I am not going to invoke the rule; I do not believe that any other Senator will do so; but I should dislike to have the RECORD show that the statement that the insertion of this amendment by the conferees was not a violation of the rule of the Senate had been made, and that no statement was made to the contrary.

The last amendment which was made to our rules, as the Senator from Pennsylvania well knows, virtually says that conferees shall not add to provisions agreed to either by the House or the Senate. That is the substance of the rule. This amendment provided that officers and enlisted men should receive at least $60, increasing the amount from $30 to $60. The House not having acted upon the matter at all, the only question for the conferees was as between $30 and no compensation whatever.

However, I simply rose at this time, so that the RECORD may show that there was a difference of opinion in this matter, but not for the purpose of invoking the point of order against this item.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah is entitled to look at the amendment from his angle. On the surface it is open to some doubt; but the conferees thought, upon a further examination, that the fact that the bonus had been changed from a month's pay to a flat amount, with an equal sum to officers and men, so modified the entire proposition that it could be adopted fairly by the conferees, bearing in mind the very great difficulties encountered in a conference dealing with a bill of the encyclopedic character of a revenue measure; and, above all, it was thought that the patriotic purpose to be served by providing the bonus immediately would be an argument that would overcome any shadow of doubt which might exist in the House or Senate as to the propriety of this amendment to the measure.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that the last statement made by the Senator is the only possible reason that could be given for the item being in the bill. His first statement was a complete reason why it has violated the rules of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, we will not argue it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that, while the original amendment was confined to the payment of one month's salary, it included both officers and enlisted men. The salary of an officer for one month is very much greater than the pay of an enlisted man for one month; and in ascertaining the amount required by the Senate amendment, which the conference report further amended, we had to take into consideration the allowance the officers would receive as well as the allowance which the enlisted men would receive.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator inform the Senate what the proportion of officers and enlisted men is?

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, the number of enlisted men is very much greater, but the salaries of the officers are several times greater than those of the enlisted men.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that; but does not the Senator know that the effect of this amendment, as amended by the conference committee, is to increase the amount of the appropriation necessary to carry it out by over a hundred million dollars?

Mr. SIMMONS. It would increase it somewhat, but not very materially, I think.

Mr. SMOOT. By over a hundred million dollars.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator's estimate is entirely too great; I do not think it would increase it that much. The pay of the enlisted men is not the same in all cases; it is one amount in this country and another amount when services are rendered abroad; it is $30 for service at home and $36 for service abroad. The salaries of some officers are very high; and if an average were made, I think, while it would probably be not quite as much as $60, it would be very near that amount. I suggest to the Senator that this is not a case where the House had fixed a rate.

Mr. PENROSE. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senate alone had fixed a rate. It was a case where the Senate alone had acted. This is an amendment to a Senate amendment; and I think, so long as an amendment is resonably germane, the conferees have very large latitude in redrafting it as to rates and as to the substance of the provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish, in that connection, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will allow me——

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me one word further, I am not going to say that the amendment is not in some respects of doubtful power, but the committee fully considered that question, and they resolved the doubt in favor of their power.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to that at all, Mr. President, as the Senator knows. The old contention, under the rules of the Senate before the rules were amended, was that when the Senate struck out all of a House bill and inserted a new provision, the whole subject matter was open and any amendment could be agreed to in conference. The result of that was that the most vital legislation was enacted by conference committees, and not by the House and by the Senate. It was for that reason that the rules were amended.

Mr. PENROSE. I remind the Senator that the great abuse was in connection with the military bill, and was due largely to the action of the House conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. It was not only in connection with the bill to which the Senator refers, but there was hardly a bill that passed Congress that was not absolutely changed when it came back after having been acted upon by the conferees.

Mr. NORRIS. Tariff bills, for instance.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; some of the most vital questions coming before Congress. Then the Senate was in this position: It either had to accept legislation by the conferees or it had to defeat the whole subject matter, and sometimes the subject matter was so vital and the necessity for passing it immediately was so great that both the Senate and the House had to yield to the action of the conferees.

I am glad the Senator from Pennsylvania made the statement he did, that the change in this provision was based alone upon the ground of patriotism and a desire to do a just act to the soldier. That is the only reason that can be given in justification of the change that has been made.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, the proposition is that the Senate rules prevail where patriotism does not conflict with them. My criticism of the whole situation is that the amendment to tax campaign contributions, which I presented and which was adopted by the Senate, was one from which the Senate committee could not under any circumstances depart a jot or tittle; but with regard to the other amendment the rules were of no consequence, notwithstanding the fact that the amount of the appropriation was increased by over a hundred million dollars. That is another instance of straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

Mr. SMOOT. My object in bringing this matter to the attention of the Senate was in order that hereafter when a conference report is made upon some bill, when Congress has ample time to discuss it, say, months before final adjournment will take place, this may not be pointed to as a precedent. I am perfectly willing to take my responsibility in saying that I do not make a point of order against this provision because of the fact that it does take care of our soldiers more as they should be taken care of than the provision which originally appeared in the bill. With that statement I am perfectly content that it shall remain in the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not think it amiss at all for the Senator from Utah to call attention to the importance of enforcing the rules concerning matters in controversy between the two Houses. It has been the subject of very great abuse within the last four or five years, to an extent unknown before that time in the history of Congress, and we can not be too careful about it. I think, however, if there is one piece of legislation where liberality in the construction of the rules regulating a conference might apply, it is to a revenue bill of this character, so filled with complications and details.

But, to proceed.

A great outcry was raised in the country, Mr. President, as soon as the provisions of the bill became known after its passage through the Senate, against the so-called King amendment requiring detailed reports of all war contracts. In my opinion, this amendment was adopted by the Senate without due consideration. It will be recalled that it was not even read to the Senate. The preparation of copies of these contracts, it was discovered, would impose an expense of thousands of dollars, and in some cases perhaps more, upon great business concerns. The ramifications of contracts and subcontracts were such as to make it almost physically impossible, and it was not apparent that any really good purpose would be served by this provision. Consequently, the conferees amended the King amendment by providing that this information could be obtained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, if he desired it in any individual case, and also provided a penalty of fine and imprisonment upon any taxpayer who declined to furnish the information.

I think, Mr. President, attention ought to be called to several important amendments affecting the income and the profits taxes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but if he will permit me to ask a question at this point, as he is about to take up another amendment, I will not interrupt again.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been told that just before I came into the Chamber the Senator, in discussing the campaign-contributions amendment, stated that it was opposed not only by the chairman of the Republican National Committee, but by the chairman of the Democratic National Committee. Am I correct in that?

Mr. PENROSE. I think I said something to that effect. In fact, I did not find a Democrat or a Republican who at heart was for the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be; but my question concerns only the Senator's statement regarding the chairman of the Democratic national committee.

Mr. PENROSE. I was told that he was greatly disturbed by the retroactive feature of the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Possibly.

Mr. PENROSE. He viewed with horror the prospect of having that 100 per cent tax imposed upon some of the very large contributors to the Democratic campaign fund.

Mr. THOMAS. I merely wanted to ascertain whether my information was correct as to the Senator's statement regarding Mr. McCormick.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I did not talk with the gentleman himself—I do not know him—but I was so told. In fact, I think I can say without exaggeration that I have failed to find a Republican or a Democrat who, in confidential conversation, does not brand the amendment as a joke.

Mr. THOMAS. I think a great many who opposed it did so not because they were afraid of its jocular nature, but because of the possible results of the statement upon the subject required to be made by the amendment to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, that may be, Mr. President.

Important changes were made by the conferees in the provision affecting the computation of the net income. The Senate bill authorized the taxpayer to deduct a loss sustained in one year from the net income of the preceding or succeeding year, this provision applying to losses sustained in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1916. This beneficial provision, designed to allow business concerns to do what they have been allowed to do in Great Britain for a long time—that is, average their income for three years, thus offsetting losses against gains—was restricted by the conferees to recognition of net losses sustained in any taxable year beginning after October 31, 1918, and ending prior to January 1, 1920. I sincerely regret that this very meritorious amendment put in by the Senate and which, as I say, is simply the same as the law of Great Britain, was thus curtailed. Hardly had the conference adjourned when several Senators came to see me with taxpayers who were excluded by the curtailment of this amendment and who presented cases of very great hardship; but nothing could be done. I sincerely hope that before January 1, 1920, is reached—prior to which date, in every probability, some new revenue measure will be pending—an opportunity will be afforded to strike out this restriction and to embody in revenue legislation a provision such as was contained in the bill as it passed the Senate.

The admirable provisions of the Senate bill allowing a deduction on account of falling inventories were liberalized by the conferees so that taxpayers will be permitted, under proper safeguards, to take this allowance immediately upon making their returns, without waiting for the Treasury Department to pass on the case and authorize a refund.

We all know what refunds from the Government Treasury mean, Mr. President. The waiting is long and indefinite, and often hopeless. Refunds always are long in coming, even when the taxpayer is plainly entitled to them. When the taxpayers of the country come to read the bill and notice this relief provision, and the one already referred to concerning the three-year period, and many others, I think they will be very much gratified at the care which has been taken to adjust, equalize, and ease the burden of these very high taxes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may ask the Senator a question, some time ago a member of a prominent commercial firm of my State wrote me with reference to the readjustment feature which the Senator from Pennsylvania is now discussing, and he was then of the opinion that it applied to individuals and to corporations, but not to partnerships. My understanding is that these provisions will give the same relief to partnerships that they give to corporations and to individuals. Am I right?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; that is my understanding.

One of the most important features of the bill, as it came from the House and passed through the Senate and appeared in the conference committee, was the paragraph relating to consolidated returns. The House failed to provide for the consolidated-returns proposition. The Senate amended the bill so as to permit consolidated returns on the same lines as they already are permitted by construction and methods of administration in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. Under the amendment adopted by the conferees the important Senate provision authorizing consolidated returns was both extended and restricted. Under the conference provision a subsidiary organized after August 1, 1914, and not a successor to a then existing business, will be separately assessed and taxed, and the consolidated returns can be made only by domestic corporations, whereas the original Senate provision required the consolidation of domestic and foreign returns in certain cases. On the other hand, the Senate restriction which confined the consolidated returns to corporations "engaged in the same or related business" has been stricken out and a liberal provision inserted by which a domestic corporation which owns a majority of the voting stock of a foreign corporation can credit against dividends received from such stock a fair proportion of the tax paid in foreign countries by such foreign corporation. In other words, Mr. President, as the conference committee amended the consolidated returns paragraph the mushroom corporations established for the particular purpose of getting war contracts practically are exempted from the consolidated-return privilege; but the old and well-established corporations, existing prior to 1914, stand on the basis which they now have under Treasury construction.

I shall refer to only certain features of the war-profits and excess-profits taxes as modified in the conference.

The profits taxes remain substantially as formulated in the Senate bill, the important changes all involving war contracts; that is, Government contracts made between the beginning of the war and the armistice. The Senate reduced the House rates of the excess-profits taxes from 35, 50, and 70 per cent to 30 and 60 per cent for 1918 and 20 and 40 per cent thereafter. The conferees made a slight change in the excess-profits tax rates for 1918, retaining the 30 per cent bracket and changing the 60 per cent to 65 per cent, but continued the 80 per cent war-profits tax and the higher excess-profits tax rates on all profits derived from war contracts.

Mr. President, I regret that the conference committee felt obliged to raise the rate from 60 to 65 per cent. The further I proceed with the consideration of this measure the more I am convinced that these taxes reach the danger point with regard to the maintenance of industrial conditions in this country; but the House conferees thought the 65 per cent rate made a more uniform proposition and the Senate yielded. While there are not many corporations falling within this bracket, the increase will operate as a hardship on some.

To my mind, Mr. President, the wisdom of this discrimination against war contractors is very doubtful. Of course, there are profiteers who ought to be taxed as heavily as possible, but among the business concerns which undertook work for the Government are many that lost money, or accepted less than their ordinary profits, and displayed in every way a fine sense of patriotism. Thousands of concerns—hundreds known to me personally in Pennsylvania—went into this war work at the express request, if not command, of the Government. Ordinarily they would not have diverted their activities from their normal business, but under the circumstances they were glad patriotically to obey the request or order of the Government. I really can not imagine that the profiteers exceeded the real patriots, and to stigmatize as profiteers an entire class holding war contracts, many under compulsion and many at a loss, does not seem to me to be entirely just.

A similar change was made in the conference in connection with the war-profits credit or deduction for new corporations; that is, corporations organized after January 1, 1913. The House gave new coporations a deduction of 10 per cent of their invested capital for the taxable year. The Senate liberalized this and made the deduction of new corporations the same percentage of their invested capital for the taxable year as was earned by corporations in the same general class of trade or business during the prewar period. The conferees adopted the Senate method, but excepted newly organized subsidiaries and corporations whose principal income is derived from war contracts. Similar action was taken with respect to the so-called relief provisions, which permit the profits tax in any case of exceptional hardship to be fixed by reference to the experience of representative concerns. This amendment, to my mind, is a most admirable one. The Senate greatly increased the classes of cases entitled to this relief. The conferees amalgamated all these classes into a single, general class, but denied the relief to corporations whose principal income consists of profits derived on a cost-plus basis from war contracts. Relief also was granted to certain partnerships doing business with invested capital which reorganize as corporations prior to July 1, 1919. Such partnerships are authorized to pay income taxes, profits taxes, and capital-stock taxes for 1918 as corporations in lieu of the income taxes to which, under existing law, the members of the partnership would be liable. This extends immediate relief to a class of partnerships in which the exigencies of business require most of the profits to be reinvested and which, under existing law, have been taxed much more severely than their competitors organized in the corporate form.

This amendment, Mr. President, put into the bill at the last hour, furnishes, in my opinion, a striking illustration of the relief provisions abounding in the measure. There was a particular case, typical of many others, in which it was discovered that some seven or eight hundred thousand dollars of taxes would have had to be paid by a certain partnership in excess of that required under the corporate form, thereby involving a most rank and indefensible discrimination between one concern as a partnership and, perchance, a competitor as a corporation. This amendment was put in giving such a partnership the option of becoming incorporated and paying the profits taxes as a corporation. I only refer to this as a fine illustration, to my mind, of very many similar provisions put in the bill to correct inequalities; not put in to favor any individual, but to relieve the hardship of inequality which the legislator can not defend or explain to the injured taxpayer.

Some of the best features of the Senate bill had to be sacrificed in the inevitable compromises which accompany a mixed settlement of this kind. The Senate changed the estate tax to an inheritance tax, thus making the tax dependent upon the size of the legacy or inheritance and not upon the size of the entire estate. This real reform has been lost, and the bill returns to the existing estate tax, with some reduction in the rates. There is a little comfort in the thought that the worse the form of the Federal tax, the sooner, in all probability, will this source of revenue be given back to the States, to which it properly belongs.

Similarly the Senate amendment repealing the zone system for second-class mail matter was lost, and the conference committee restored the provisions of existing law.

This zone paragraph was referred to yesterday afternoon and fully discussed. I was earnestly in favor of the Senate amendment; I think it should have been agreed to; but I feel certain we would have had no revenue bill if the conferees on the part of the Senate had not yielded on this point. There could be no doubt about the impression conveyed to the Senate conferees that the bill, for all practical purposes, would not be reported back to the House unless the Senate conferees yielded, and, in view of the absolute necessity of the Government to have the money, and the very numerous meritorious provisions in the bill, the Senate conferees felt they had nothing to do but yield and let the law remain as it is for the present.

At the same time the Senate amendment reducing the rate of postage on first-class mail matter to the prewar rate was accepted by the House conferees.

What I consider, Mr. President, as one of the most unfortunate occurrences in the conference committee was the inability of the Senate conferees to secure concurrence in the Senate amendment concerning the taxes on insurance companies. These taxes, as they stand in existing law and under the House provision in the pending bill, are uncertain and unscientific, and productive of litigation rather than revenue. In fact, information was conveyed to the conference committee that the great bulk of the large insurance companies, being so certain of their legal position under professional advice, felt they would all be involved in court proceedings and had refused to pay a dollar to the Treasury in the form of taxes.

The Senate offered a plan of insurance taxation that was equitable, definite, and simple. The Senate plan would have produced more revenue than the provisions of existing law, which are in substance repeated in the bill as passed by the House. However, another Congress in a future revenue bill will have to place the taxation of insurance companies upon a sound and scientific basis.

Mr. President, it seems to me that no discussion of the revenue bill at this time would be complete without some reference to the character of the expenditures. The revenue bill was framed under the noblest impulses of patriotism, while the war was at its height, and when men were willing to make every sacrifice. No one could complain that the greater part of his income was being taken by the Government when he saw the one-legged and one-armed soldiers walking the streets, or went through the hospitals and witnessed the evidences of sacrifice made by men for their country. But after the armistice many did not realize that the war was not really over, and the enthusiasm subsided considerably.

Instead of the bill carrying $8,000,000,000, the Finance Committee of the Senate was able to reduce it to $6,000,000,000. A large part of that reduction is more apparent than real, because it comes from the loss of taxes on intoxicating beverages, which, for so many years, together with the tax on tobacco, were the main source of internal revenue in this as in every other civilized country of the world.

Then, several hundred million dollars were given up on account of the relief provisions, which, necessarily, reduced the revenues of the Government to come from the taxpayer.

But, Mr. President, the bill was moving along, and the average sentiment was that it should pass, until men began to awake to the wasteful expenditures of Congress for every kind of chimerical, ill-considered, and ill-advised purpose. People said—and when I make this remark I have reference to the sentiments expressed in thousands of letters received by me from, and in conversation with, taxpayers—what is the use in raising revenue if it is to be poured like water out of a bucket into the gutter? What nation, however wealthy, can stand expenditures like these?

Only the other day the Senate passed a hundred-million dollar appropriation for the so-called famine sufferers in Europe. Nearly half the Republicans voted against the bill. Many who voted for it did so with the greatest reluctance. There was no information before the Senate on the subject. A vague telegram from the President was the only testimony. There was no definite information as to how the money would be spent. The allegation was made by a prominent man of Chicago, in a telegram which I had read in the Senate, that pretty nearly a third of the money already had been spent without authority of law. There was a refusal to insert in the bill a provision that the money should be expended by a commission appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and under the obligation of an oath of office. All proposed amendments were ruthlessly voted down by the majority and the money handed over to be spent by some international commission, the American representative of which is not a citizen of the United States and has no identity with this country that I can find, except that he was born here, and he may never return. He certainly is not within the jurisdiction or reach of the arm of Congress.

One prominent taxpayer wrote to me asking that I help defeat this revenue bill and to insist, if there were a large number of people anxious to squander $100,000,000 in that improvident way, that it might be well to float a famine loan and let those so greatly interested in the cause subscribe to it instead of spending the people's money.

Mr. President, I am not going to refer to the many foolish projects and wasteful expenditures that occurred during the war. When a house is on fire economy is not consulted. Anyhow, people became largely unsettled during the war, it seems to me, in their mental processes. If we are to survey the world at the present time between here and Paris, I am not so sure that common sense or sanity has entirely returned even to many of the Anglo-Saxon race.

I shall do no more than refer to the fanciful project of appropriating $50,000,000 to discover minerals, to say nothing of similar propositions. Money has been poured out in a kind of debauch by those who seem to have lost all idea of what a billion dollars means. I think it was Charles M. Schwab who said in a speech at the Hog Island Shipyard, when impressing upon his auditors the vastness of a billion dollars, that it represented $1 for every minute since the birth of Christ. One dollar for every minute since that time gives us some idea of the measure of a billion dollars. Yet we put that sum into an appropriation bill now with the same carelessness that we might have exercised in putting $100,000 in a bill 10 years ago.

I merely wish to call the attention of the Senate to the most casual survey which I have made of propositions floating around in this Chamber and in the House of Representatives since the ending of the war, all of which have the purpose of extracting money from the Public Treasury. They are made without any authority of a budget system, apparently without any consultation with anybody else, and without any basis of investigated fact, to gratify the whim, caprice, or fad of some theorist; and yet many of them have passed this body notwithstanding the protest of a few of us. I do not doubt that nearly all of them, if time afforded, would pass both branches of Congress, because I have failed, since the declaration of war or even since the armistice, to discover any bill carrying an item of money that did not get a majority vote. They illustrate the vicious and uncontrolled tendency of minds, completely unsettled by the war, to continue the carnival of waste.

I hardly feel that I am keeping up to the high standard of expenditures when my eye catches a reference to a modest item of $50,000 asked for by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes. The amount is modest, but just why the Government should go into the business of sinking artesian wells puzzles me. I think that, while the amount is almost beneath the dignity of a Senator to notice, I might be permitted to refer to the proposition as preeminently of the freak variety:

> The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to investigate the arid and semiarid conditions where they exist in the northern part of the State of Montana, in the vicinity of the Canadian border, for the purpose of discovering favorable locations for the sinking of artesian wells.

When the Secretary thinks he has discovered a favorable location, the bill says he may go ahead and sink the well, which is a good thing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator if that is not confined to artesian wells on the national domain, the property of the Government?

Mr. PENROSE. It does not say so. It says "the northern part of the State of Montana," and "the northern part of the State," I suppose, means land of the State.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the bill itself show that it is for the purpose of sinking artesian wells on the public domain?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think so, but even if on the public lands I do not see why the Government should go into it at this juncture.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to remind the Senator that there is a very good precedent for the Senator from Montana asking for this money, for he will remember that it was proposed that we sink artesian wells in the Trinity River in order to make it navigable.

Mr. PENROSE. I am glad the Senator called my attention to that. I remember, when the projected improvement of Trinity River to make it navigable was under discussion in this body, that the then Senator from Montana, Mr. Carter, humorously urged the sinking of artesian wells along the river in order to fill it with water.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I am in full accord with the Senator's criticism of that bill, but I wish to remind him that several similar bills have been introduced and some of them have passed, of course, as amendments to appropriation bills, at the instance of both Republican and Democratic Senators, and the money has been expended or is being expended for the purpose on the public domain. I voted against all of them, and I expect to continue to do so, which perhaps is one reason why they continue to pass.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not doubt this bill will pass. Some morning the Senator from Montana will rise when no one is in the Senate and ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the measure, and it will pass almost before the Secretary can read it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a favorable report on it from the department.

Mr. PENROSE. There is often a favorable report from a department. They hang together for the plunder about as close as it is possible to do. This appropriation is not for public lands, as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] suggests, but for the State of Montana; and why they should bore for water there any more than in Pennsylvania is rather puzzling to me.

The department looks with favor on the bill. I want to say that the Secretary of the Interior has a great tendency to look with favor upon any appropriation, and he is quite indefinite in his estimates.

I called the attention of the Senate some time since to another bill of the Senator from Montana regarding which the Secretary of the Interior stated that one, two, or three million dollars would be very nice to help them start the project. I will come to that in a few minutes.

Then I have another choice production from that distinguished statesman, the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], "to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes," which likewise is reported favorably from the committee. This bill provides for $5,000,000. Five million dollars, at the request of the Senator from California, to permit the Secretary of the Interior to range over the country and stimulate the production of food, whatever that may mean. The report does not indicate just how this stimulation is to occur, but I do not doubt that the money will be expended.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], with a very praiseworthy desire to promote the welfare of the wage earners, puts in a bill providing for a complete new official staff. We all know what that means. He starts with a director at a salary of $5,000 a year, which, I can foresee, if the bill should ever pass, would be raised the following year; and he asks for $750,000 to carry out his particular notions regarding the relief of wage earners.

All these bills are pending, Mr. President. They are on the calendar or likely to be reported from committees. Most of them are on the calendar, and they inevitably will pass if they are ever brought up in this body.

Then the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has a bill, which has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which committee is a fertile source of favorable reports on all kinds of lavish appropriations. He asks for an appropriation to establish experiment stations in engineering and in the other branches of the mechanic arts in connection with colleges established in the several States and Territories. As to just what genius conceived the idea that we want experiment stations in engineering in connection with colleges I am not advised. I have received a good many letters protesting against this bill as an interference with the land-grant State colleges, many of which are largely endowed, and liberally helped by State legislatures; but the Senator from Oklahoma would like to begin with $15,000 per annum for each State and Territory. I have not added that up, but I easily can see how it will expand, and will involve a very large sum in the future.

The senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] presents a measure creating a bureau of farm colonization, to make a national survey of all public lands suitable for farming, to develop, establish, and maintain in a practical manner rural colonies and farm homes for qualified families. As to just what that phrase "qualified families" means I am not informed. This measure is based upon the argument of the war, as set forth in the preamble. The bill, Mr. President, calls for $500,000,000 to carry out the peculiar notions of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMMONS. Which one of the Senators from Illinois?

Mr. PENROSE. There could be only one Senator from Illinois who would introduce this bill, and that is the senior Senator [Mr. LEWIS]. I did not suppose there would be any doubt as to the identity of the Senator.

Then, Mr. President, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], for whom I entertain very high esteem, has a bill pending, which has been on the point of getting up several times, making an appropriation of $20,000,000 for improved highways. That bill seems like a rather modest performance now, in view of the $200,000,000 which was retained in the Post Office appropriation bill for that purpose the other day.

The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] has a bill which he was near passing one day—I am not sure whether it has not been passed. I opposed it, and I think the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], opposed it very vigorously—a bill to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States. This is another emanation from the Secretary of the Interior, of whose ability I have a very high opinion, but, nevertheless, these expenditures must stop some time.

I think these charges of there being so many million illiterates in the United States are absolutely without foundation, but still the assertion is made. Such an assertion can have no other foundation than that they include as illiterates infants in arms and inmates of institutions for the mentally defective. I think I know something about the condition of the great mass of the people in Pennsylvania, and in other States of the Union, and deliberately to say that there are eight or ten million illiterates in the United States is to make a statement, in my opinion, without any foundation; it is simply an argument to get an appropriation.

This bill provides for the establishment of a new department—always an alluring proposition—with $100,000 for the first year and $50,000 for each succeeding year. The amounts are small, but the possibilities of growth to the one-hundred-million-dollar mark are so great that I thought the measure worthy of being called to the attention of the Senate.

Now, I come to another bill introduced by the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], which, likewise, has been recommended by the Department of the Interior. This bill provides for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands, and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes. I remember in connection with this bill, Mr. President, that the Secretary of the Interior, or somebody who happened to know about it, said if we went into this scheme in the way we ought to do, we should have four or five billion dollars to properly carry it out. Hardly had the proposition got very far and filtered through the minds of the public, when all of us were overwhelmed with protests from farmers against the measure. The State Grange of Pennsylvania only the other day officially protested, and the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] put communications into the RECORD protesting at length against the folly of this proposition; yet it comes recommended by the department, which is pretty nearly the same thing as being recommended by the administration. Originally it carried an appropriation of $2,000,000, but the committee made it $1,000,000 to start with—$1,000,000 for a visionary proposition, Mr. President, that could not be carried into effect until the returning soldier would be an old, bent man, too enfeebled by age to work on a farm—a measure protested against by every agricultural interest in the United States; yet this bill for $1,000,000, being such a small amount of money, no doubt would pass the Senate in the confusion of the moment if it were brought up some morning with the indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior.

We are gradually getting up in this desultory survey, Mr. President, to nearly $2,000,000,000—to $1,000,000,000, anyway. Nearly every one of these bills is from a department, has official sanction, and is likely to pass. Certainly the task of opposing them is invidious and generally is unsuccessful.

I have before me a bill introduced by the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] for the commencement or prosecution of public works in order to provide increased opportunities of employment during the period of demobilization and industrial readjustment, and for other purposes. Mr. President, I do not doubt the patriotic motives of the Senator from Iowa in introducing this bill. I know of his earnest desire, as shown by his acts, to alleviate the condition of the laboring people in the United States; but, as I have told him personally in speaking with him about this bill, while I do not criticize the purpose of it or the patriotism which induced its introduction, I simply criticize the measure as being an independent attack on the Treasury without any concerted attempt to find out how much money is available and how it should be distributed. Each Senator comes along with his pet project, in very many cases an absurd project; but whether it is absurd, or meritorious, like this one, surely no Public Treasury can stand anyone coming along, fixing the amount he wants, without an estimate and without full knowledge of the facts, and having the money desired allotted to the scheme. This bill starts off with $100,000,000, and there is a further attractive provision in it for $300,000,000 more to provide for advances, making $400,000,000 in all that, under a plausible argument, may be separated from the Public Treasury. Whether or not it is ever to be returned to the Treasury I do not know; but my experience is—and I think the experience of others will vindicate me in the assertion—that when cash is once separated from the Treasury it seldom is returned.

Regarding the lack of employment, this $400,000,000 is for what at present, in my opinion, is a needless purpose. The matter of unemployment is greatly exaggerated. I understand the Department of Labor reports this week that some 250,000 or 300,000 men are unemployed. Why, Mr. President, that is a very small number of men unemployed in a country with nearly 11,000,000 wage earners. I have studied this question somewhat. Last summer I happened to spend the night in a little county in Pennsylvania, and, upon asking about conditions there, I discovered that some eight or nine hundred men had gone to the war and that a thousand or so more had gone to Philadelphia, New York, and elsewhere to work in munitions plants and had thus been taken away from the farms. With the curtailment of production or the shutdown of munitions plants these men will not be able to return immediately to the farms, where they belong. Many of them made such enormous wages during the war, and up until a recent period, that they do not want to work and do not have to work, but are looking around the country enjoying themselves. I do not think the returning soldier, coming back from France, wants to begin working 8 or 10 hours a day the minute he gets here. He goes home the hero of his town, is fêted by the inhabitants, and welcomed by his relatives. He is entitled to look around a little and enjoy himself before he takes up the hard tasks of life. I think the statistics of the employment agency are remarkable in showing how little lack of employment there is.

I represent in part in the Senate one of the greatest industrial States, if not the greatest, in the country—a seething mass of organized labor, toilers, and wage earners in textile mills and steel plants—and I would be the first to know of unemployment. I think I can safely make the assertion that unemployment in that great industrial area is, up to the present time, in no way reaching the danger point. This $400,000,000 is proposed to be taken from the Treasury for the purpose of relieving a condition which is almost normal, it may be said, when the problems of readjustment are considered.

The senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], with his attention firmly fixed upon the $1,250,000,000 necessary to keep up the price of wheat, permits himself to be diverted to the very great urgency of eradicating the tick which infests southern cattle. He has a report from that fertile source of appropriations, the Committee on Agriculture, recommending an appropriation of $3,000,000 to eradicate the tick. That, of course, is a pastime while waging the great battle for the $1,250,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if that is a new tick or the same old tick?

Mr. PENROSE. I am afraid it is the same old tick, which has been swarming around cattle since the earliest days of man's association with animals, and which will continue to infest cattle, as the Almighty has foreordained, long after the Senator from Oklahoma and I are forgotten. I have no evidence that in the lapse of many thousands of years cattle are not thoroughly accustomed to the tick.

Then, here is a little resolution. This, by the way, is a minor matter, but it shows the almost Shakespearean quality of the senatorial mind, which takes in every variety and aspect of the human comedy, so that nothing from the tick to an earthquake in Porto Rico escapes its notice. Notwithstanding the fact, Mr. President, that the island of Porto Rico is relieved of all war taxes in the revenue bill, and at the same time enjoys the inestimable privileges of American citizenship; and notwithstanding the fact that the inhabitants of that island practically have a great advantage over citizens of the United States residing here, from the point of view of taxation, it is seriously proposed that we appropriate $300,000 on account of earthquakes in Porto Rico. I halted this resolution one day on the floor of the Senate when it was brought up by the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. It did not seem that the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was exactly possessed of jurisdiction to recommend the appropriation, and the matter was dropped. Whether or not the resolution subsequently was passed in my absence I have no information, and I am not concerned as to whether it has passed or not, because I know perfectly well, if still pending, that it will pass some day when I am not here.

Mr. President, I need only refer, because the event is too recent to require any extended discussion, to the extraordinary appropriation of $200,000,000 for roads carried in the Post Office appropriation bill. The debate on this appropriation was so extensive, and the exceptional, unfair, and improvident character of the appropriation so evident to any man of the most ordinary intelligence, who was not prompted by sectional self-interest, that I do not think it necessary to detain the Senate any further about it.

I have already referred, Mr. President, to the $100,000,000 appropriation for the alleged famine-stricken people of Europe, and I shall not expatiate on it. It is a good fund to exploit Mr. Hoover and the Wilson administration; and from that point of view doubtless will find its supporters.

I ought to state that I am gradually drawing toward the close of what I wanted to call to the attention of the Senate; but before I go any further I wish to say that up to this time I have been speaking only of some of the bills pending in the Senate. They aggregate over $2,000,000,000. I will drop the other figures as insignificant. Bills are pending here on the calendar, most of them with the sanction of departmental recognition, liable to pass any day, calling for almost a third of the revenues contemplated to be raised under this revenue bill, not to mention the current expenses and the actual obligations of the Government.

I shall now refer to several matters of this character pending in the House. Here is a little proposition from Mr. LEVER, a bill to enable the President to carry out the price guaranties made to producers of wheat of the crops of 1918 and 1919, and to protect the United States against undue enhancement of its liabilities thereunder. I have not examined this bill very carefully. Doubtless other price-fixing bills will be reached by me; and, as it only provides—oh, Mr. President, I was mistaken. I thought this bill provided for only a million dollars. I find it provides for a billion, and therefore is entitled perhaps to a passing comment.

This, I find, upon further examination, is the great bill to provide a billion dollars—or some say a billion and a quarter; that is immaterial—to keep up the price of wheat. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] deliberately stated in the Senate—and I want to say that I agree with him; I think he, perhaps, knows more about the question than any other Member of this body; certainly he knows more about it than I do, but I can appreciate a good argument when I hear it—that this price fixing had been folly from the beginning, sheer waste, and had cost the farmers $800,000,000 in actual losses; and now, pursuing this folly—and I am not prepared to say that we can get out of it—we are called upon to appropriate $1,000,000,000, one-sixth of all the taxes to be raised from the groaning taxpayers in the United States, to make good the folly and the dilettanteism of Hoover and his administration of the food question.

Then, of course, Mr. President, we have floating around the lump sums, and I have not, as yet, been able to locate exactly the amounts left of these lump sums, or whether they can be refunded into the Treasury. The President, as I understand, has had $150,000,000 in a lump sum, and the Secretary of the Navy, according to my recollection—I may not be entirely correct—some $50,000,000. I really think, now that the war is over, that some auditing and accounting of these lump sums should be obtained, and the balance remaining, if any, returned to the Public Treasury; that hereafter expenditures should be made under authority of law, and not at the whim of a bureau autocrat or Cabinet officer, or even of the President. Congress, perchance, declines to authorize the purchase of a radio station or a telegraph system, and defeats the appropriation, whereupon the word goes forth that the purchase will be made out of a lump sum already appropriated. The lump sum covers everything, at home and abroad, from here to Paris.

Now, Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to about $8,000,000,000 of appropriations that I have not as yet reached, asked for by somebody.

A Representative from Alabama in the House, Mr. BANKHEAD, comes along with a bill to promote the education of native illiterates. I have referred already to one bill relating to illiteracy, which has the insidious purpose of starting a bureau. This measure, however, comes right out into the open and asks for $13,000,000—I should say $13,500,000—to educate illiterates; and I think a large part of the money would have to be expended in locating the illiterates. [Laughter.]

Here is another measure, introduced by an eminent statesman in the House, a joint resolution asking for $100,000,000 to relieve distress among wageworkers. As the average wageworker has been making two or three times the wages of the average clergyman, lawyer, or physician in the town——

Mr. THOMAS. Maybe that is the reason he is in distress.

Mr. PENROSE. That may be, but it seems to me that this distress, up to the present time, must be largely a matter of hallucination. The only real thing about the bill is the one hundred millions.

Then we have a measure that already has gotten as far as the conference committee on the Post Office appropriation bill, so its prospects are bright—a bill to provide two hundred millions for roads.

Then there is that ingenious project, the reclamation of swamp lands wherever they can be found. The modest sum of $100,000,000 is proposed for this purpose by Mr. BYRNES, an associate from an adjoining State of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee here in the Senate—$100,000,000 to reclaim swamp lands. This bill, I am glad to say, is in no way sectional. At first glance I thought maybe it was for the benefit primarily of South Carolina, but I did that State an injustice. I am satisfied that it really aims to reclaim swamp lands wherever found, even if they have to be advertised for. [Laughter.] This measure has the sanction of the Secretary of the Interior, and I suppose will pass some day when it comes up in the Senate under the conditions which have been prevailing.

Here is a bill which candor compels me to admit was introduced by one of my Pennsylvania colleagues in the House of Representatives, but I have the less hesitation in admitting it in view of the fact that he is a Democrat and was not reelected to the next Congress. He wants $1,000,000 with which to distribute war trophies. Just how the million dollars is to be used in the distribution of war trophies I do not know, but I suppose some one will be found ingenious enough to invent a way to spend the money. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I might suggest that with such a sum war trophies would be made the subject of manufacture, as the demand would be very great.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; I have no doubt of that, and perhaps a bill will come along for an appropriation to encourage the manufacture of war trophies. [Laughter.]

Here is a bill to provide for the common defense and general welfare—a most excellent beginning—but closer examination discloses the fact that it applies more particularly to Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota. It urges their immediate relief from the drought. I do not know whether it is the prohibition drought, Mr. President, or the other kind. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. PENROSE. Well, it is sufficient. Has the Senator any idea what would be required to cure the drought in those half dozen States?

Mr. THOMAS. It depends on what kind of a drought the Senator refers to. That is the reason why I wanted to know the amount.

Mr. PENROSE. Well, assuming any kind of a drought?

Mr. THOMAS. It would take a good-sized appropriation to destroy the prohibition drought in that section of the country.

Mr. PENROSE. The bill carries $50,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that might do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PENROSE. It would help. It is for the general welfare, but particularly for Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator to state the author of the bill? I live out there, and I do not want to lie under suspicion?

Mr. PENROSE. It is pending before the Committee on Agriculture, a very good committee, and I expect will be favorably reported to the House in due course.

Mr. THOMAS. It is a House bill? Then I am exonerated.

Mr. PENROSE. It is a House bill—the Senator may want to follow it up. It was introduced by Mr. BLANTON. The Senator may be acquainted with him.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I am not.

Mr. PENROSE. That is unfortunate.

Mr. THOMAS. That is doubtless true.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, I have here another bill, which I am compelled to admit was introduced in the House by one of my colleagues from Pennsylvania. But I sustain the shock when I realize he is a Democrat. This is to provide for the emergency arising out of the demobilization of soldiers, sailors, and marines, and the discharge of workers from war industries and other occupations, and so on. It is unnecessary to read the full title, which is ample, but it is sufficient to say that $100,000,000 is asked for by Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania.

Then we have the bill to authorize the Post Office Department to acquire and extend the telephone system in the District of Columbia, for which $7,000,000 is requested—an unwarranted proposition, because everyone knows that the telegraph and telephone systems have broken down lamentably under present Government control, and the railroads have suffered a scandalous demoralization. I seldom send a telegram that I do not corroborate it by writing a letter, and I am not certain that either of them will reach its destination within a reasonable time.

Now, Mr. President, here is a gem which appeals to the loftiest aspirations of patriotism. It is a bill to provide for the local commemoration, in his home county, of the supreme sacrifice made by each soldier, sailor, marine, and aviator while in the service of the United States during the present war, likewise introduced by Mr. BLANTON.

One is reluctant to criticize an appropriation coming under such a patriotic guise, and I do so with hesitation. I hope that some day every one of these brave men will have a monument; but in the stress of the moment I can not but pause and respectfully criticize when I read that $50,000,000 is wanted for monuments to which the townsmen of these gallant boys would deem it a privilege to be able to contribute, and thus put up far better monuments than could be erected by a bureaucrat here in Washington, wastefully expending the public money.

Then, some genius, feeling that we are not doing everything we should to express our joy at the wonderful achievements of the war, suggests the propriety of appropriating $2,000,000 for an arch of victory here in Washington; and, in order that the matter may not be delayed, he thinks $50,000 ought to be immediately available.

Here is a bill for a monument to Theodore Roosevelt, in the form of a museum of history and art, to cost $5,000,000. Mr. President, I say in all seriousness that I, as much as any other American, think the American people should construct a splendid monument to the memory of Col. Roosevelt; but what I criticize about the measure is that I have no information that it comes from any consultation or conference with the members of Col. Roosevelt's family, or his friends, or with any committee having memorials in charge, but simply represents the independent notion of Mr. HICKS, the gentleman introducing it, and, for aught we know, it may pass some morning without the authority or sanction of anybody.

Then we have a bill to provide further for the national security and defense by making an appropriation for the purchase of iron ore, coke, coal, limestone, and other materials essential to the manufacture of iron and steel and for constructing, equipping, maintaining, and operating blast furnaces and steel plants and mills for the Government of the United States. That bill is pending before the Military Affairs Committee of the House and calls for $50,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that several authorizations for Government munition and other similar plants have never been carried out, and some such projects which the Government has undertaken have proved wretched and lamentable failures.

Then we have a joint resolution here which says in the preamble:

> Whereas the railroads of the United States are unable to handle the food products and the coal supply of the United States.

A rather treasonable assertion, Mr. President, in view of the many statements of self-glorification and protestation issued by Mr. McAdoo and others. I am one of those who believe that the railroads have reached a deplorable, scandalous, and inexpressible condition of inefficiency, but I did not suppose anyone would be bold enough to make a statement of this character in the preamble of a joint resolution asking for $10,000,000.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

Mr. PENROSE. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is the Senator aware that the railroad administration is now asking for $750,000,000 more?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. In addition to the $500,000,000 appropriated for a revolving fund which does not revolve?

Mr. PENROSE. I was aware of that.

Mr. KELLOGG. And it was stated here the other day by the director general that they are owing the railroads now something like $650,000,000, and probably they would owe them $380,000,000 when everything is settled up to the 1st of January, 1919.

Mr. PENROSE. I say in all candor that I think the Bolshevist government in Petrograd could have run the railroads better than the representatives of the American people have run them during the period of Government control.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania allow me?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. LEWIS. I suggest to the able Senator that those who are at the head of the operation of the railroads throughout the United States are the same gentlemen who have been operating those railroads during all the time in the last three or four years preceding the taking of them over by the Government, with the single exception of one or two offices here in Washington, where they do not operate the roads at all.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator ought to know that his statement is utterly devoid of foundation.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator would know if it were true.

Mr. PENROSE. On the contrary, Government ownership, in my opinion, has been largely a process of educating Mr. McAdoo and others to be railroad men, a very expensive educational process on the part of the American people, and I do not know that any of them are railroad men yet.

Mr. LEWIS. I will state to the Senator that he must see that in the management of the transportation of freight and passengers the heads of the management at the different depots, either in Philadelphia, Chicago, or elsewhere, are the same gentlemen who before held the same offices under private railroad management.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LEWIS. Can the Senator give me an instance to prove that I am in error to the contrary?

Mr. PENROSE. I now abhor the condition of the railroads to such an extent that I purposely stay away from them.

Mr. LEWIS. Therefore the Senator has no acquaintance with the subject as to who runs them and who conducts them.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if the Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me, I can give him the names of many railroad presidents who have been removed and not allowed to run the railroads and where other men have been put in their place—Mr. Fairfax Harrison, of the Southern; Mr. Samuel Rea, of the Pennsylvania; Mr. Marvin Hughitt, of the Northwestern; and many others.

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to except to the statement of the Senator from Minnesota. The Senator has made a statement, and I call the able Senator's attention that the presidents named only assumed to direct the financial policy, and many others directed the issue of watered stock and bonds. The railroads have been run by superintendents, general managers, passenger agents, traffic heads, and men who are in the yards. I ask my able friend if he does not know that that class of gentlemen are still in control of all the roads of which he has knowledge?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will state to the Senator that I know nothing of the kind. Mr. Marvin Hughitt is not a man who is issuing watered stock. He has run one of the most conservative and best roads in the country; he is one of the ablest and highest-minded railroad men in the country; and there are many others like him.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Marvin Hughitt is not the subject of debate. He is an acknowledged exception.

Mr. KELLOGG. The railroads have been run by regional managers and by appointees by the director general in a concentrated system in Washington. I am not complaining about the management, because probably it has been as good as you could get when you change the entire management of the system and try to concentrate it and make it over in a short time.

Mr. LEWIS. I join issue with the able Senator. Mr. Marvin Hughitt is referred to as a railroad president. The Senator might recall to his mind the St. Louis & San Francisco Railroad, the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, the Chicago & Alton Railroad, and many others, and recall their presidents and their past conduct.

What I beg to impress upon the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Minnesota is that these regional directors, those who are charged with the active operation, are the gentlemen who were the officers of the roads before we took charge of them and continue in their management. Therefore the criticism of my able friend is in harmony with similar criticisms heard all over the country, and ought not to be based upon the assumption that we have changed the management of the roads.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I should like to say a word with respect to that matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The proposition has come here for the extension of the Government control of roads for five years. The experience had in the last year is not fair to the Government. Wages in all occupations have been greatly increased. It was in war times, where there was no opportunity to get to a normal basis nor to a proper operation of the roads. I think every person in the country feels that there ought to be a test without regard to whether he believes in governmental ownership of railroads or not, and that a fair test can be had at this time better than any other time. It takes about five years for the purpose of making such a test.

I hold myself free, if the conditions were such that the operation would not be in the interest of the masses of the people, to reject the proposal, and if it were shown to be in the interest of the masses that the Government can operate them to better advantage and at cheaper rates, then it seems to me it would be wise to consider seriously the permanent control of the roads; but, Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. How much have rates been cheapened?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know that they have been cheapened any, because we have had——

Mr. KELLOGG. How much have the rates been increased?

Mr. SHAFROTH. There has not been a fair test. There is one feature in the matter by which all men in the Army can travel at 1 cent per mile, which is ridiculously low.

Mr. KELLOGG. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But low rates for soldiers is evidently a matter that is sanctioned by the people of the United States. There can be no denial of the fact that there are certain economies that can be made in railroad management, and they have been made. The saving in coal in transporting freight by a short line instead of a long line will be great, as well as the high salaries of officials. For instance, there is a consolidation in the city of Denver of about 10 or 12 railroad offices downtown in a high-priced rental district——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I decline to be interrupted by such a trite argument as that. It is a fleabite. In my opinion the consolidation of the ticket offices in the great cities was an absurdity.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It seems that there is a great saving in the cities by it.

Mr. PENROSE. I deny that there is a saving. The ticket offices, in many cases owned by the railroads, have been standing idle and unoccupied, and to say it is a saving is simply a resort to meretricious and misleading bookkeeping.

Mr. SHAFROTH. They have but one ticket office in Denver where they formerly had 12, and quit paying rent on 11. That necessarily meant a saving as to the ticket offices, and where there are a large number of persons engaged in soliciting freight——

Mr. PENROSE. They are several hundred millions behind, and everybody in the United States is bitterly condemning the management of the railroads by the Government.

Mr. SHAFROTH. As a matter of fact, there were thousands of men employed by the railroads for the purpose of soliciting freight over their lines, and now no expense of that kind can be made, because the Government is disinterested as to which line the freight shall go over.

Mr. PENROSE. And the railroads are losing in freight rates.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. PENROSE. I will permit an interruption for anything except a defense of the consolidation of the ticket offices.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That is one of the economies, and there are many other economies. Whether or not governmental control of railroads can be made a success I do not know, but I think now is the time when we have the opportunity at the least expense to the Government of testing it, and if it is not a success it can be turned down.

Mr. PENROSE. Did the Senator ever before witness such a spectacle on the railroads as a dirty and ill-kept dining car with available spaces scribbled with scoffing remarks addressed to the management?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not know——

Mr. PENROSE. That is what I have seen.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I do not understand that there is anything of that kind.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator has not been traveling lately.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have traveled some in the last six months and I have found just as courteous treatment as I ever found at any time. I have gone four times over the Pennsylvania Railroad from here to Chicago.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is easily satisfied.

Mr. KELLOGG. If the Senator from Pennsylvania will permit me——

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. The classified accounts of the operating expenses of the railroads this year, including general office expenses, transportation expenses, maintenance of way, and all the other classified accounts, show not one single account less than it was last year or any economy whatever.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I am not taking into account in this very desultory statement the enormous losses on account of the maladministration of the railroads. I am taking only a good-humored survey of the scattering, irresponsible proposals on both sides of the Capitol to extract money from the Treasury. If we undertook to estimate the losses by reason of this inefficient administration they would, in my opinion, approximate a startling sum of money.

When we consider the property which has been destroyed, or the values which have been greatly curtailed and reduced—I am not going to argue the effects of it—millions of dollars wiped off the books as an asset to the community or the individual by the destruction of steamboat lines and short-line railroads, the steamship lines having been withdrawn from the transportation business, or the short-line roads scrapped because the railroad management deflected the traffic, which they had been relying upon, in order to keep up the showing of the trunk lines, we see to what extent this inefficiency has gone.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me one moment, speaking of the matter of the destruction of property, there is a line that has been rendering excellent service from Boston, Providence, Philadelphia, Baltimore, to Norfolk and on to the Southern States as far as Savannah—the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co.—which has been in existence for 60 years and has been of very great value to all those States. The Railroad Administration took the line over. They not only took the line over, but they took over $600,000 of cash they had in their treasury. This line was fed, of course, by arrangements made with the railroads. They stopped those, and that naturally deprived the line of business. They now have handed the ships back to the company with the business gone, and they have omitted to hand back the $600,000 they took in cash from their treasury.

That industry has been wiped out, so far as I can make out. All the Senators from the States affected have been trying and trying in vain to prevent the destruction of a useful line which for 60 years has given all the seaboard States on the Atlantic a good water service for water competition. That is merely an illustration. I am sorry to have interrupted the Senator so far.

Mr. PENROSE. I am very glad the Senator from Massachusetts has called attention to the scandalous and harrowing case of the Merchants & Miners' Line. I should like to ask him whether any reason was presented for failing to return the cash to the treasury? It is usual to return cash, is it not?

Mr. LODGE. No explanation was given of that that I know of. The explanation for their returning the line back was that the company asked too much for leasing it. They could have leased it at any price they wanted if they had been willing to lease it. I believe their plan was to do the transportation either by rail or by using some of the ships that had been built and which they were afraid to send across the ocean to carry freight, and those ships would be run under the name of another line—the Old Dominion.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator permit me on this very subject?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have, I believe, a little later information than the Senator from Massachusetts has. A number of us, among them the Senator and myself, addressed a communication to the counsel for the Railroad Administration, and we received an answer. Then, later on, with the president of this company, at the request of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who could not come, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], and myself were called into conference. It was impossible to get all those who had signed the letter, and we undertook to represent the balance of you as best we could.

The insistence upon suspending operations was based upon the claim of very heavy losses now in operation. A proposition is being submitted to-day by the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co., and we have just prepared a letter urging that they do not suspend operations. I have just brought it into the Senate to request of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] to join the Senator from Rhode Island and myself in signing it as representing the Senators. I will read the letter, because I am sure it will meet with the Senator's approval.

Mr. LODGE. I had not heard of this last thing. I saw the letter to which the Senator referred from the counsel of the road, which gave us no satisfaction whatever, but up to the point at which I had arrived I think I stated the case correctly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not questioning that, but I thought I would read the letter.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I am glad to know that we are still struggling.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (reading)—

FEBRUARY 12, 1919.

Judge JOHN BARTON PAYNE,
Counsel United States Railroad Administration,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are familiar with the proposition being submitted to you by the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co.

In connection with the proposition we desire to urge the importance of the continued operation of this system of coastwise transportation. We are impressed with the loss which would be caused our entire system of transportation if this coastwise line is discontinued, and especially with the injury to the communities served by it.

May we not suggest that, controlling all the railroads, the Government director can cause ample freight to be given to this and the other water-transportation systems. Normally it is more economical, and should be preserved in an organized state for the benefit of the public. We are referring, of course, now to the coastwise ships serving especially the Atlantic and Gulf communities. The entire cost of this transportation—the rates and the business to be done—is so within the control of the transportation administration of the Government that we earnestly hope such steps may be taken as will continue the operation of this coastwise line.

Very truly, yours,

We are just on the point of sending this additional letter to them, and we assumed in signing it we were representing all who wrote the original letter.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly. As I remember, I think Senators from six or more States signed the letter and we got a most unsatisfactory reply.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is in a little more satisfactory condition now.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad it is. This letter, it seems to me, is little more than the expression of a hope. I sincerely hope it will lead to something.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The matter has been opened up again, and that an adjustment can be made with the company I believe is clear and is most probable; but we were expressing the opinion that if the Government adjusts these differences with the owners it ought to continue operations for the benefit of the public.

Mr. LODGE. Of course it ought.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is what we sought to express in this letter.

Mr. LODGE. It is a great disadvantage to the public to have that line wiped out.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I have not the slightest confidence that a repetition of the letter, signed by a half dozen Senators from these coastwise States, will have any effect upon the situation. For the time being and under the present régime that line of transportation for freight and passengers is out of existence, deliberately destroyed by the policies of the American Government, a line which, for three generations, regardless of weather, fair or foul, has carried the seacoast commerce and passengers from Georgia to Massachusetts and from Pennsylvania to New York. It is extinguished to-day as a result of the railroad management of the Government; and, to add a rather humorous phase to it, such as we occasionally read about in some of the performances of the Bolsheviki in Petrograd, the line, after being ruined, is politely returned to the owners with an empty treasury. It has been withdrawn from the port of Philadelphia, where it was a source of great relief to commerce and also a matter of pride to the people. It would have continued another hundred years or more to prosper and grow had sound economic conditions prevailed, but the idiosyncrasy of the railroad management has destroyed it. I venture the assertion that property values, to an enormous amount, have been destroyed within the last three years, or have been greatly depreciated.

We have been moving along steadily to destroy values, as in the case of railroad securities, and to destroy property physically, as illustrated by the Merchants & Miners' Line. I begin to wonder at the robustness and strength of the American Nation, and how its commerce and industry must be built upon an imperishable foundation, that it can withstand all this bad economic, ruthless, and injudicious treatment.

But while this digression has been profitable it hardly bears upon the subject I have in mind, except to emphasize the fact that while we are engaged in propositions calculated to squander the money of the taxpayers, we are at the same time making very substantial inroads upon the taxable values and incomes from which we must get revenue. I for one think it time to call a halt, and if these wasteful appropriations can not be stopped before the 4th of March, at least the attention of the American people can be called to them and perhaps some relief afforded in the new Congress and under another party after March 4.

Mr. President, no system of taxation could be devised by the ingenuity of man, and no country, however rich it might be, could bear the taxes that would be commensurate with these wild, extravagant, and wasteful expenditures.

Now, here is a small appropriation for an unnecessary project—the establishing of marketing departments in agricultural colleges in the several States of the Union.

I have not had an opportunity to inform myself as to just what purpose the author of the bill has in mind, but it has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and I assume it will be only a question of time until it comes out with a favorable report, because it involves an appropriation of $250,000. This particular bill has been making its way obscurely through the House and Senate. Already I have received hundreds of letters from produce dealers and dairy and food people of Pennsylvania protesting against the passage of the measure. As to just what good purpose is subserved by it beyond the wanton expenditure of money I am not advised.

Here is another interesting measure referred to the Committee on Agriculture which, doubtless, will be favorably reported from that fertile source of expenditures. It provides for the purchase of seed grain and feed for live stock, to be supplied to farmers and stockmen, and to create boards in the respective States to assist in carrying out the provisions of the act. It is true, the bill provides for an appropriation of $50,000,000, but I have no idea that amount will be an obstacle to its favorable report by the members of the Committee on Agriculture.

Then we have a bill "to establish a Government experiment integral of industries." I am at a loss to know what the title means. The phrase is new to me. I, perhaps, am unduly ignorant. I fail occasionally to keep up with the progress of the times and, particularly during this period of international consciousness, as the term goes, to keep pace with new phrases and new terminology; but I notice that the bill calls for an appropriation of another $50,000,000. So I assume there must be some argument, plausible at least, for the enactment of the measure.

The fanciful phraseology, characteristic of this period of international consciousness, is well illustrated by section 3, which says that a commission shall be established on creative economics, an admirable phrase, Mr. President, and fraught with possibilities to the league of peace and to our future international civilization. I pause and wonder when I reflect upon the genius of the inventor of that phrase "creative economics." Still, he had a stern purpose to the ultimate goal and he provides for $50,000,000 to carry out the objects of the commission.

They are "to plan and construct a government economic experminent integral"; and, in order that ample explanation shall be afforded of the word "integral," he says "or unit of industries"—if that makes it any clearer; it does not to me—"for the purpose of testing, independent of existing commercial interests and by scientific methods, the merits or demerits of another system of industry not adjusted to the economic principle of mutual repression and plunder"—how familiar!—"the social contract of which shall be the donation of labor power by all employees, and the donation of the products of labor power to all employees under the rule of the common good."

This man is a genius, Mr. President. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to devote any of the lands or natural resources owned by the Government to the commission of creative economics.

But why detain the Senate longer by explaining the purpose of this commission? Its name speaks for itself, and the imagination can picture the plans.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the able Senator allow me to merely interrupt to ask him who is the author of that measure?

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator from Illinois indorse that proposition?

Mr. LEWIS. I ask the Senator to let me know who is the author of that bill?

Mr. PENROSE. The bill discloses the fact that Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota is the author of it.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota of the Senate or Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota of the House?

Mr. PENROSE. I am referring now to House bills, but I assume that many of them will come here to the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. We are prohibited by certain rules of the Senate to express an opinion which we might have concerning matters in the other House. I have no doubt when they arrive here we shall then get the opinion of the Senate.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no doubt I have a right to express my opinion about legislation which is pending.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to say that I am merely commenting upon the loss we may have to suffer from not having the opinions of some others.

Mr. PENROSE. The bill will doubtless come over here. I do not know whether the Senator from Illinois will be for it or not. He can state that better than I.

Leaving the domain of "creative economics," Mr. President, we now come, in view of recent experiences, to a choice morsel which has been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives. This bill provides an appropriation of $500,000,000 to promote the ownership of transportation systems. I suppose some of them, like the Merchants & Miners' Line, could be bought pretty cheap at this juncture; but whether or not $500,000,000 will cover the whole situation, I am not informed.

Here is another measure, "a bill to provide transportation, storage, and marketing facilities for and to regulate commerce among the States in live stock, meats, and other products derived from live stock or the slaughtering of live stock." This commendable purpose, Mr. President, can best be realized, in the opinion of the author of the bill, by an expenditure of $500,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS. Who is the author of that?

Mr. PENROSE. That eminent statesman, Mr. SIMS.

Then we have a bill "to create a department of education and human welfare"—definite and specific and all practical purposes clearly defined—"and to arrange for the cooperation between the Federal Government and the States in the encouragement and support of education, and for other purposes." It provides for "broadening the scope of education, of democratizing it so that it will include and promote all human activities." Whatever that phrase may cover I am at a loss to understand, but that is not material. The extraordinary feature of the bill is that there is no definite appropriation to carry out its provisions. Just what the purpose of the author was in leaving the really interesting part of the measure in an indefinite and chaotic condition I do not know.

Then we have a bill for rural sanitation. I can not lay my hand immediately on that measure, though I thought I had it. Rural sanitation is a good thing, and it looks better when an appropriation of nearly $3,000,000 is asked for to launch the Government in this enterprise, and an annual appropriation of $1,400,000 thereafter.

The items I have read, Mr. President, many of which are pending before committees or are sanctioned by departments, or have been reported favorably, aggregate $2,880,480,000, or nearly $3,000,000,000—half of the amount proposed to be raised by the pending tax measure!

There are a number of other items confronting us and to be reckoned with. I will not say that the items I am going to read are all unnecessary, but they will convey to the taxpayer some general idea of the bill he has got to foot as the result of incompetence and waste or, in some cases, as the result of the war.

Amongst what I might term inevitable objects is the construction of hospitals, which it is estimated will require $30,000,000. Whether or not that estimate is well based, I do not know.

Then we have the interest account on the national debt of $1,000,000,000 annually at the very least.

We have the propositions in connection with the merchant marine, which are to some extent imaginary, but they call for an expenditure of $650,000,000.

Then we have the loss of $800,000,000 in the operation of the railroads, a loss which I attribute to the account of blundering and inefficiency.

We have the very general estimated expense of demobilization of $500,000,000, which, of course, is inevitable.

We have the proposition for aircraft mail service, amounting to $50,000,000, a service that I think could very well wait until the stress of expenditure is over. Anyhow, it is a good deal of a luxury and more or less of an experiment. Yet, apparently, there is a disposition to spend money for it, at least until the 4th of March shall have arrived.

Then there are Government contracts put down at $1,500,000,000—a wild guess as to the amount that will be required.

I have already referred to the European food bill. The war-risk insurance requires $150,000,000; the Employment Bureau wants $14,000,000; and the bonus to soldiers, which we all indorse, requires $255,000,000, making an additional amount for some necessary purposes, but some unnecessary or ill-advised, of $5,049,000,000. This, and the miscellaneous, visionary, and needless items already mentioned, aggregate $7,927,480,000, or nearly $8,000,000,000, which, added to the amounts floating around here in the Senate, to which I have already referred, makes $10,000,000,000 actually asked for by Senators and Representatives with solemn countenance and earnest demeanor, frequently supported by a department. I have yet to see one of these measures fail of passage when its consideration could be reached.

Mr. President, the air is full of suggestions for enormous expenditures. Here is $10,000,000,000 picked up in the most casual way by looking through the calendars of the House and Senate. Every departmental report contemplates squandering money somewhere.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. In view of the facts which the Senator has pointed out; also in view of the new propositions with reference to the Navy, which I understand involve the expenditure of almost a billion dollars; and also in view of what we are going to have to do in connection with wheat, what excuse is given for cutting down the taxes for the next year? How do those in authority now say that we are going to meet these largely increased expenditures which have been made—certainly since the bill passed the other House, and I think since the committee reported the change in the taxes for the next year?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the inquiry of the Senator from Washington is very natural. I can not answer his question. The whole situation is so chaotic and so characterized by lack of system that I, standing here on the minority side, with no responsibility for legislation, am unable to answer the Senator's question. There is no remedy, unless the majority party and those in control of the executive departments of the Government lend a helping hand to check this wasteful extravagance.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Is there any other way to meet these additional expenditures except by the sale of bonds?

Mr. PENROSE. There is no other way except by the sale of bonds; and, in my opinion, if this debauch of expenditure and carnival of waste continue, the sale of bonds up to the limit of toleration of the business world will not meet all the requirements.

Mr. JONES of Washington. So that this apparent reduction in taxation, which is proposed in this bill to take place in another year will have to be made up through the sale of interest-bearing bonds?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; money will have to be borrowed to the limit of toleration on the part of the taxpayers; and, instead of getting the benefit of reduced expenditure by the armistice and the completion of peace, our expenditures will keep on soaring and will show little difference from the enormous amounts expended while we were in the agony of war.

I have said, Mr. President, that this is merely a casual survey of some $10,000,000,000, not to mention the destruction of assets or the reduction in their value, thus curtailing the ability of the taxpayer to pay taxes.

Nearly $1,500,000,000 ultimately will be lost to the Treasury by prohibition. I am not arguing the merits of that policy one way or the other. The American people have, by an overwhelming sentiment, indorsed the proposal; but the fact remains and confronts those engaged in revenue legislation that the revenues are reduced.

The relief measures to which I referred in my opening remarks, for the correction of inequalities, inequities, and hardships, sacrifice several hundred million dollars of revenue which, otherwise, might have been raised but which, under the circumstances, can not be fairly collected.

Mr. LEWIS. Will my eminent friend allow me a suggestion? May I ask the Senator if he would not make clear, in connection with his very able exposition, that the bills to which he is directing attention—most appropriate attention—are not bills which have been passed; that they are not bills for which appropriations have been made; but are mere proposals from different Members of both Houses for things which they hope, but for which at present there has not been any legislation granted at all?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Allow me to suggest to the Senator, however, that wiping all of those suggested bills out of consideration, there will be vast appropriation bills that we know must be passed before the close of this session, or in an extra session, that will amount to over $10,000,000,000; but if the bills referred to become laws, instead of the taxpayers of the country having to meet $10,000,000,000 next year, they will have to meet $20,000,000,000. I will say frankly to the Senator from Illinois the country can not do it and will not do it; and if Congress appropriates all the money proposed to be appropriated by the various bills which have been referred to to-day by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I say that the country will rise in its might and power and drive from public life every man who approves of such propositions; and I hope they will do it if anything like that happens.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I express my thanks to the very alert Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] for his explanation and his statement. I have to say, since the Senator says that the amount of $10,000,000,000 will be appropriated, that it must be assumed, in view of the intelligence of this body, coupled with its patriotism, guided by a genius such as the Senator from Utah, when such appropriations shall have been made, they will have been made for some just cause and for purposes that can be justified; otherwise, they will not be passed. It will not be assumed that the other measures, such as the Senator from Pennsylvania has humorously, but in many instances most appropriately, described as little less than ridiculous, would pass a body of this kind or pass the House. Therefore, the fears of the Senator from Utah that the appropriations will be multiplied to the extent of the sums suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I think, are groundless, and we ought to make clear to the American public right now, that these expressions of the able Senator from Pennsylvania are based upon the possibility of such bills passing, and not that he wishes to let the American public understand that these bills have passed. He did not have that in his mind nor was that his intention.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, many of the measures carrying the vast sums referred to by me have passed Congress; many more are earnestly recommended by the Secretary of the Interior and other heads of departments, and many of them are on the calendars awaiting favorable action by either body. Experience is the best and only test we have in this world as to future conditions; and we all know that so far not a single bill has failed, no matter what the purpose or the amount.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I think as to those measures the passage of which is hoped——

Mr. PENROSE. Can the Senator name a single appropriation bill, or item of appropriation, which the majority has defeated in this Chamber? I challenge the Senator to do so. He can not do it.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say to the Senator that the items that are defeated by the majority party are defeated in the appropriate committees when they are wrong and should not be passed. It is only when they are right and practicable and best that the committees send them in here and the Senate passes them, because it is right to do so.

Mr. PENROSE. The only test is the longing and hunger for appropriations.

Mr. LEWIS. Ofttimes there is a hunger which should be satisfied because it is right, Mr. President, as a longing—I might say, more than a longing—a dessert; but let me say to the Senator that as to those measures to which he has referred, which their authors hope will pass, we can apply the Scriptural injunction, "Many are called, but few are chosen."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not wish the Senator from Illinois to get the idea that I said I had a fear that the people of this country were not going to pay the just obligations incurred by the Government in carrying on the war. I say frankly to the Senator that the greater part of the $10,000,000,000 which the people of America must meet next year has been brought about by the war; but that does not make it any easier for the American people to raise the amount of taxes necessary, particularly so when we take into consideration the conditions existing to-day and realize the extent to which we have already strained our credit.

The Senator will readily admit, I presume, that it was much easier to raise the first $5,000,000,000 than it was the second $5,000,000,000 or the third $5,000,000,000; and as $5,000,000,000 sums are added by way of taxation it becomes harder. The Senator, of course, will admit that. All I want to do is this: I want the American people to know the obligations that they have got to meet, and I want them to prepare to meet them, because they must be met. I also want the American people to understand that the time has come when there must be a halt called on the extravagant expenditures of public money.

As the little foxes spoil the vines, so these little million-dollar appropriations, as they are now called, are going to ruin the credit of the business and of the country itself if we do not stop them.

I remember, Mr. President, the time in this Chamber when an appropriation of any sort that carried a million dollars was scanned with the greatest care and had to receive an explanation that was satisfactory to every Senator in this body before there would even be a chance of securing a vote upon it, while to-day it is not desired to secure consideration of any appropriation of less than a million dollars; in fact, about the only way to get an appropriation through Congress is to make it more than a million dollars.

I know that the Senator will not charge me with trying here to appeal to the passions or the prejudices of the people; but I am alarmed, Mr. President, over the financial condition of our country. I can not see how the obligations of the Government are going to be met unless the strictest economy is not only practiced by Congress and the executive departments of the Government, but by all the people in the land.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator give me his audience a moment while I respond to that?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to say to the public that there is no man in this Chamber who has more sedulously given his attention patriotically to seeking to hold expenditures down to just levels than has the Senator from Utah, but what I wish to have him know is that if the bills referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania and the amounts for which they call shall be held up before the country as appropriations that have really been made, as distinguished from mere demands, the country would be of the opinion that such vast millions have already been appropriated as would stun them, as would paralyze their initiative, and discourage every undertaking.

Now to the Senator's observation. It is true that in the past there was close economy, but gradually there grew that very thing which the Senator from Utah says exists—a general indifference. Previous administrations to the one in power, however, were those that encouraged the growth of those vast expenditures. We may say, as the scriptural warning, the fathers ate the sour grapes, the teeth of the children are set on edge; so we have come into power to find the custom, and, unhappily, instead of repealing it entirely, as the Senator says, we are repeating it.

Now, I will ask the Senator a question, in order that I may obtain the Senator's judgment. We have large expenditures to meet, and great appropriations are in view. I have a proposal to make to the American public in my position as a Senator, and not carrying any further weight than that. There are $7,000,000,000 due to the American Nation from foreign nations. These nations, I suggest, could issue their bonds, those bonds to be turned over to the United States, and then the United States to use those bonds through the Federal Reserve System, the Federal reserve banks issuing $7,000,000,000 of money based on those bonds, which are security for money loaned. The $7,000,000,000 thus being secured would be money of the United States and would lessen the taxes to that amount. I ask the Senator if that is not an appropriate method of securing that fund and avoiding further taxation?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I have in my office a bill in process of preparation—I think I will have it completed to-night, and if I do I shall introduce it to-morrow—to carry out the very suggestion the Senator has made, although not along the exact lines the Senator has suggested, providing that the obligations of foreign Governments for our loans to them be changed into a bond obligation and used by the Federal Reserve Board as a basis for the issuing of Federal reserve notes. I want the Congress to pass a law authorizing the Federal Reserve Board to issue Federal reserve notes against those obligations. If our Government, now that the war is over and it is not likely that we will be compelled to advance more money to foreign countries, will request those foreign countries to issue for the obligations which they have given to our Government in the shape of notes—because that is what they are—bonds in serial numbers of denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, I believe that such bonds can be sold in the market, and I do not believe that our Government will have to carry the present obligation, which now amounts to nearly $8,300,000,000.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I hope I may be permitted to continue my remarks. I shall finish in a moment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator to excuse me. I understood the Senator had yielded to me.

Mr. PENROSE. I appreciate that, and I was perfectly willing to yield, but this controversy has taken a little longer time than I think is fair to me. I merely wish to conclude my remarks.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not fair to the Senator to interrupt him so long, and I wish to apologize.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania refuses to yield further.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want an apology. I know the Senator from Utah is going to take the floor in a few moments in his own right, but if he desires to go on now I will yield further.

Mr. SMOOT. I may discuss the question when I get the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is an offender himself. Here is a bill introduced by him on February 25, 1918, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which committee never has failed to act favorably on an appropriation. The measure creates a bureau of farm colonization, and appropriates $500,000,000 as a beginning. I should like to ask him whether he intends to push that measure?

Mr. LEWIS. I have an idea that if the Senator observes the heading of the bill he will see that it was tendered "by request."

Mr. PENROSE. Then the Senator is not familiar with the subject of the bill?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I am familiar with it; but I think the Senator will see that that particular measure was tendered "by request"——

Mr. PENROSE. It is not so stated.

Mr. LEWIS. Merely that it might be sent to the committee for their examination in connection with other measures which at that time they were considering. May I call the Senator's attention to the fact that it was a proposal to advance money to immigrants coming to our country?

Mr. PENROSE. No statement appears on the bill that it was introduced by request.

Mr. LEWIS. Then that has been omitted. I do not wish to say that it does not possess virtue; but I must say to the Senator that, having introduced it "by request," I have not examined it as fully as I would have done if it had been a measure introduced on my own initiative.

Mr. PENROSE. It is usual when a bill is introduced "by request" to have that fact indicated in the heading, and it is not so noted in this case; therefore I got the impression that the Senator was carried away with the splendid and inspiring thought of spending $500,000,000 to create a bureau of farm colonization.

Mr. LEWIS. No; the Senator from Illinois is only carried away by the powerful oration and glittering criticism of his eminent friend, who, in his satire, discloses a legitimate criticism of some of those measures.

Mr. PENROSE. It is very consoling to me, Mr. President, to realize that I can subtract $500,000,000 from the ten billion to which I referred; because the Senator from Illinois conveys to me the thought that, in vulgar parlance, he is "side-stepping" his bill and does not intend to press it. That to me is a most hopeful sign. Whether it is due to the appalling aggregate of misguided appropriations which I have tried to bring to the attention of the Senate this morning, I do not know; but if it has sunk into the minds of Senators that the time has come to call a halt my labors to-day will not have been in vain.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I will have the Senator understand that I do not side-step anything when I confront him; I back it up.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator is confronting his own bill now, and displays a lack of enthusiasm for it which is rather impressive.

I now refer to extra offices which have been created. I suppose they were necessary during the war, anyhow; but we have only to go through and along the sides of these great temporary buildings scattered throughout Washington, or through the departments, to see the large number of employees crowding the corridors and cumbering up the rooms, and, in many cases, actually hunting something to do. That demoralized situation has been alluded to frequently on the floor, and I do not intend to enlarge upon it now. I simply want, as a part of my remarks, to refer to the fact that in the Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, 82,719 new offices were created, requiring $47,371,231 to pay the salaries; and in the second session 191,307 new offices were created, requiring $110,925,428 to defray the expense, making a grand total for the present Congress of 274,026 new offices created, requiring an expenditure of $158,296,659. I venture the assertion, and I say it deliberately, and I have been corroborated in it by conversation with members of these volunteer boards down here—dollar-a-year men, so called—that perhaps one-half of these offices were needless, and the result of inefficiency and improvidence.

The air is full of propositions for expenditures, most disheartening. Here we pick up the morning paper and observe that the Secretary of War is going to send a commission over to France to take care of the liquidation of—the $30,000,000,000 war from which we are slowly emerging. * * * The adjustment of all claims, both for and against us, which doubtless will aggregate many millions of dollars, will be considered immediately and will not be permitted to drag along for years or perhaps generations.

That opens up a prospect of expenditure.

Then I note that the Department of Commerce is talking about spending some $200,000 in connection with trade with Spain, Italy, and the Balkans; that it is to be energetically pushed to promote the work of obtaining new fields in which to sell American goods. Is that comparatively large expenditure, Mr. President, authorized by Congress? Has it been sanctioned by a favorable report from a committee, after a full hearing on the subject? No.

We read further in the article that the expenditure is to be taken care of out of the special fund of President Wilson. Did Congress vote this special fund to promote trade in Bulgaria or was it appropriated for the purposes of the war? The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has returned to his seat. I should like to inquire of him, Is there no way of saving us from the waste of this enormous special fund? Can it not be gotten back into the Treasury, so that presidential expenditures hereafter may proceed in an orderly way, under authority of law?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that that question came up before the Appropriations Committee; and the sentiment of the committee was that, as long as the fund was appropriated to the President with no limitation whatever on it, to be spent in any way that he wished, they felt that it would be a very inopportune time to repeal that law. The only way in which it can be done is by act of Congress repealing the appropriation that was made for any purpose that he may see fit to use it for.

I will say to the Senator that the Commerce Department is not the only department of our Government that has received funds from that sum. I called attention here the other day to five or six allotments that were made out of that fund, where the heads of bureaus and divisions came here and asked for these appropriations and Congress refused to grant the appropriations, and they immediately went to the President and the President gave them whatever they asked for out of the fund that was given to him. This is only one case. I will say that I asked for a statement to be made of the amounts that had been given to the departments, naming the departments and the amounts that had been given to each of them; but up to the present time I have received no answer to the request, and I do not expect to receive any.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether he, or the Committee on Appropriations, of which he is the leading minority member, has any information as to how much of this fund is left, or how it is being spent, or how it is intended to be spent?

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I do not think any member of the committee knows the balance that is in that fund. I certainly do not.

Mr. PENROSE. Has the Senator any idea of how much is left?

Mr. SMOOT. I heard that about four or five months ago there was some forty-odd million dollars in the fund; but I can not say how much of that has been expended since then, nor can I say that that report was correct, because I have never seen an itemized account of the expenditure of the fund.

Mr. PENROSE. Has the Senator any information as to whether itemized accounts are kept of these expenditures?

Mr. SMOOT. They must be kept somewhere, but the law did not require that they should be made public.

Mr. PENROSE. Could not a committee of Congress have access to them?

Mr. SMOOT. Not under the law. That would be entirely with the President. He may give it if he desires, and, if not, he is not compelled to do so.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I think the sooner Congress passes a law rendering the secret archives of this enormous fund available to the committees of Congress and to the American people the better it will be for this Government and for this administration. I do not intend to sit idly by and permit $150,000,000 of the people's money to be expended between here and Paris, and for every kind of unauthorized project such as promoting trade in Bulgaria, to which I have just referred, or to make good amounts which Congress deliberately has refused to appropriate, without at some time or other having information as to how every penny has been spent; and I do not entirely agree with the Senator from Utah. I know he is in the minority on the committee, but I do not see why this enormous fund, without restriction or restraint, should any longer be placed at the disposal of the President. He simply is a branch of the American Government, the head of the executive part of our Government. The war, for all practical purposes, is over, and how any legitimate purpose can be subserved or conserved by an ability to squander or spend $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 is beyond my comprehension, and, I think, will be utterly beyond the comprehension of the average American citizen when he wakes up and rubs his eyes and realizes what is going on.

Mr. President, I have spoken at greater length than I had intended. There is no use in my criticizing, at this time, expenditures made under the stress and inspiration of the war, many of which were needless and improvident; but I intend on some other day, as opportunity offers and I find time to investigate the different phases of the subject, to show the American people, on the floor of the Senate, the character of the ill-advised economic methods under which the war was fought, and the wastefulness and extravagance of many of the appropriations.

I only want to refer now to the bill to stimulate agriculture, carrying $11,000,000, largely devoted to the suppression of coyotes and squirrels. When the war was at our door and the most heroic efforts were required to float the liberty loans, the Senate found time, in the midst of the stress and strain and agony of the war, to devote a whole day to the extermination of coyotes and squirrels, at an expense of some $11,000,000, under the guidance of the majority party.

The enormous appropriation of $162,500,000 to the food and fuel production and distribution is water over the dam. I shall not refer to it further except as a wasteful appropriation, largely for bad economic methods, which the historian of the future will employ to exhibit a high standard of folly on the part of civilized people.

There is no use in my referring to the $150,000,000 given to the President for which no accounting has been made, because that already has been commented upon.

The enormous sum spent by the Shipping Board, $1,806,000,000, is largely waste. The policy of the Government should have been to require the building of these ships in existing yards and to have held contractors rigidly responsible for results instead of constructing enormous plants, like the Hog Island Shipyard, under a wasteful cost-plus contract, and demoralizing the labor market by hiring clerks and mechanics at soaring and fanciful wages in competition with normally paid labor engaged in similar occupations right along the Delaware River. The whole proposition was ill-advised and unjustifiable from an economic and business point of view, and entailed, in my opinion, the wasteful expenditure of a large part of that nearly $2,000,000 appropriation.

I do not know how much has been appropriated for housing, due to alleged war needs. I notice one item of $100,000,000. It is a proposition that never had any merit, except in connection with certain restricted localities, and yet we have squandered several hundred millions of dollars in this connection unnecessarily, and wastefully, and the houses in most cases are now a dead loss to the Government. Clerks, perchance, could not be crowded for a few months, even if soldiers were content to sleep in the trenches and dugouts in France.

In closing, I only want to say that I intend to vote for this revenue bill. The sentiment in favor of its passage is, in my opinion, 60 or 70 per cent less than it was two months ago. That is due largely to the fact that the people have become alarmed, not to say disgusted, at the wasteful way in which Congress has been spending money, and have thrown up their hands and said, "If this kind of thing is going on, why should we make further sacrifices out of current revenue for taxes or in the way of subscriptions to liberty loans?" The future seems hopeless, and I firmly believe that to-day a majority of the taxpayers in every State in the Union—North, South, East, and West—would be delighted to see this bill fail. I believe they feel that no revenues can be raised under any bill which will meet the situation I have so casually sketched out. I am convinced, however, from my intimate knowledge of the bill, after nearly six months of very faithful and painstaking work, not missing, I think, more than one or two meetings of the committee during that long period, that the Government needs the money. The bill is defensible as a war measure, and it has so many very wise provisions in it for the relief of the taxpayer and for the correction of inequalities and hardships that I feel I am performing my patriotic duty in voting for it. I also feel I should perform another patriotic duty, and that is to do everything I can in behalf of economy and retrenchment; but I am rather hopeless of meeting with much success in these latter activities until after the 4th of March.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to express my sincere gratification over the change that has come over my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who, like all past offenders, has been converted, and converted to the principle of economy in public expenditures. I sincerely hope that with his valuable assistance we shall be able to effect many reductions in public expenditures which up to now have been impossible. I know that the Senator, when he advocates a policy, will devote himself to it with all his strength and all his mind and all his heart.

The Senator has deprecated, and very justly, the making of a number of appropriations which, to say the least of it, might have been postponed; but I want to warn the Senator that his present resolution will go barren of accomplishment unless he stays in Washington and gives his time and attention as zealously to the cause of economy as he has given it to the affairs of the Finance Committee. If he does that, he will have to change his past course and answer the roll call more frequently.

I have observed during a somewhat short experience in this Chamber that the Senator from Pennsylvania is always in close attendance when anything of an important nature is pending before the Finance Committee, but that his duties elsewhere—I presume his duties—are so onerous as to make his absence felt, and I am afraid felt more keenly hereafter than heretofore if it continues.

This Congress, Mr. President, met on the 7th day of December. If my recollection serves me right, the revenue bill became active about the 19th day of June. Between the 7th day of January and the 19th day of June last the Senator answered 20 roll calls and was absent from 102. I think if the Senator had been here during that period, and had lifted his voice against some of these appropriations, they might have been modified, if, indeed, they could not have been defeated. Since that time the Senator's attendance has been very regular, and he has devoted himself ably and capably to a consideration of all the features of the revenue bill.

I think the Senator—because he knows the fact—would have been a little more fair in discussing the matter of extravagance had he in some way apprised the Senate of the fact that the introduction of bills carrying appropriations is not a partisan practice. It is either bipartisan or it is nonpartisan. Perhaps it is both. A favorite amusement of Congressmen and Senators on both sides of the political house is the introduction of bills, of which up to this time more than 30,000 have been introduced and printed, and of which no doubt the great majority carry some sort of an appropriation. Indeed, I am aware of the fact that the Senator himself has frequently introduced, and will continue frequently to introduce, bills, especially for the increase of pensions; and, as the Senator from Utah has reminded us that it is the little foxes that spoil the vines, it is these little bills that in their aggregate go largely toward the depletion of the funds in the Treasury.

The Senator, of course, also knows that the great majority of the bills introduced for appropriations never leave committees. If they did, and were considered favorably, the result would be that more money would be appropriated every year, or as much, as the aggregate wealth of the United States amounts to. I am satisfied that if the Senator will take all of the bills introduced by everybody since the commencement of this Congress, he will discover that the total sum they propose to appropriate very largely exceeds the cost of the war.

Merely as a matter of diversion, in no sense by way of criticism, but merely as showing how universal is this practice of introducing bills for appropriations, of which even Pharisees like myself sometimes are guilty, let me call attention to five bills introduced since the 28th day of January by my distinguished friend the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], all for public buildings in his State, and aggregating $215,000. The Senator has done what all of us do; and I think these bills for public buildings could be duplicated on the part of a great many others, perhaps a majority of the Members of both Houses, if I only had the time to gather them together and present them in the shape of an indictment against the predominant party or against the minority party.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMITH of South Carolina in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly do.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the five bills which I introduced, with regard to public buildings in the State of Utah. If he will notice, they merely carry increases from a certain amount up to a certain amount, and the increase from the appropriations already made and authorized would not amount to what the Senator has stated. I wish to add that every increased amount that I asked for in those five bills was requested by the Treasury Department, and a statement was attached to the request that the reason for it was that they could not proceed with the construction of the building because of the increased cost of building material and the increased cost of labor; and in order to begin the work they have to have this increased appropriation.

I simply wanted to say that in fairness to myself.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not criticizing the Senator. I am simply referring to the fact that, while we are pretty black over here, we have not a monopoly of the appropriation appetite which has caused the gorge of the Senator from Pennsylvania to rise in disgust.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Pennsylvania, when he had the floor, asked the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] in a very defiant way to name a single large appropriation asked for which the majority had defeated. I think it is fair to ask the same question of the minority. What single large appropriation asked for has the minority defeated? I know of a great many that a solid minority vote would have defeated.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. How can a minority defeat any appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS. By staying in their seats.

Mr. PENROSE. Does that defeat the appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS. It would tend very largely to defeat the appropriation.

Mr. PENROSE. I voted against a large number of them, including the famine fund.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator did, and I give him credit for that. Not only that, but it confirms me in my belief that if the Senator will diligently attend hereafter he will be able to help a few of us who are not only in a painful minority, but painfully unpopular, in the effort to accomplish the same result.

I have here an amendment, offered by my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. CALDER], intended to be proposed to the bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department, which proposes to appropriate the sum of $6,000,000 for the purpose of building a very desirable improvement in the shape of a subway under the Hudson River. It is a good object, and comes from my very good friend, one of the representatives in this body of the great State of New York.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator commends that proposition; does he not?

Mr. THOMAS. Why, I think it is an excellent project, as are also many of the projects which have been introduced on both sides.

Mr. CALDER. It is an excellent project.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not condemn them all by wholesale. I think if we are going to spend public money for anything, that is one of the best possible things—I mean, for anything that may be said to be within the purview of a generous spirit on the part of the Government.

Mr. CALDER. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I have here an amendment, intended to be proposed by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], calling for $145,000 for the Cape Spencer, Alaska, Light Station; and for repairs and improvement of light stations in Alaska, $70,000 more. I have here another one from the Senator from Washington, introduced on the 31st of January, which provides that the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, shall investigate and report to Congress upon the feasibility and advisability of the construction of reclamation works for the irrigation of what is called "The Horse Heaven" section in the State of Washington, in Benton and Klickitat Counties—that is a very difficult word to pronounce properly—and which calls for a small appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the bill. I also have one here from the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], calling for an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the erection of a public building at Duluth, the State if Minnesota.

These, Mr. President, are just a grab by the way, so to speak. If I had spent two or three weeks upon the subject, as the Senator from Pennsylvania has done, I have no doubt I could duplicate in bills introduced by my friends, the members of the Republican Party, every bill that he has mentioned and criticized as emanating from the majority.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Washington with pleasure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wish to call the Senator's attention to one amendment which I introduced, and which I intend to press as vigorously as I possibly can, proposing to appropriate $50,000,000 for carrying on reclamation projects in the West.

Mr. THOMAS. There we see the honest confession of an honest man. The Senator from Pennsylvania should also have been just enough to have stated what I think he must know, that the $50,000,000 appropriation, designed for the purpose of securing needed valuable and unusual minerals during the war, will not be expended at all except in so far as the amount which may be necessary to reimburse those who, upon the strength of it, have incurred expenditures and obligations which the Government is at least morally bound to recognize.

Mr. President, on this matter of extravagance, there is no reason why the pot should call the kettle black. Democrats have been extravagant. Republicans have been extravagant. In voting these appropriation bills I have not observed any party spirit whatever. A few have been disposed, at times at least, to register their votes in the negative, but I do not know of any appropriation which has been intended for general expenditure that has not received generous and hearty support on both sides of the Chamber.

Now, just a word and I will yield the floor. We have been informed, and I have made the prediction myself several times—the nonoccurrence of things predicted emphasizes the fact that I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet—that the people would soon rise and smite us in their wrath. I wish they would. But the trouble is that the people's appetite for Uncle Sam's money is as universal as is our habit of giving it to them. They demand more than we do give them. I do not know of a crossroads in the United States that is not clamoring for money for a public building. I do not know of a State in the Union that was not hungry for the $200,000,000 we appropriated the other day. I do not know of a State in the Union having a stream too wide for a man to run and jump over that does not want an appropriation from the public money to be expended in order to make that stream navigable.

The difficulty is with the people in the final analysis of this subject. When they really do demand economy and demand it in such way as to impress their Representatives and Senators, they will get it. They will never get it until they do, and not then unless a budget system is adopted whereby the estimates and the appropriations may go together, when Members of the Senate and House shall be deprived of their present privilege of offering bills carrying appropriations of large sums.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Out of order, I ask permission to give notice of an amendment I intend to propose to the rules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read the notice.

The Secretary read as follows:

Notice is hereby given that after one day from the presentation of this notice I shall introduce the following amendment to Rule XXV, relating to the standing committees of the Senate:

Resolved, That Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "Provided, That with the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress no standing committee of the Senate shall consist of more than 17 members."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is going to proceed to discuss the conference report. I think we should have a larger attendance, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator does that, let me ask him if he intends to press the motion of which he has just given notice?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; I am going to do so the next day. I have to give one day's notice, and then it will go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator expect to ask this action during the life of the present Congress?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think, in view of the fact that the Senator's party expects to have control of the Senate at the next session, he had better pretermit consideration now and postpone consideration until that time.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator I violate no confidence when I state that the Republican conference expressed a preference for it, and I understand it will receive favorable action by the Committee on Rules in a day or two.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 15539. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. KIRBY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] are detained on official business. I desire also to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the revenue bill has kindly agreed to yield to me for a few moments to enable me to present the conference report on the second deficiency appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah has the floor. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sure it will take only a moment. I submit the following report.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) "making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: On page 3 of the bill, in line 4, strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator what are amendments numbered 2 and 4? I have not the bill before me.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The House made an appropriation of $9,000 of the appropriation of $25,000 for carrying on in the District of Columbia the work of the commission in France, as provided in the deficiency appropriation act of July 8, 1918. The Senate cut down the appropriation to $5,000, but we yielded to the House conferees. They insisted that it does not increase the appropriation and simply authorizes the expenditure of $9,000 in the District of Columbia instead of in France.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, we give the full $9,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That is right. The Senate conferees yielded.

Mr. SMOOT. What is amendment numbered 4?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Amendment numbered 4 struck out the appropriation of $23,000 made by the House for the purchase of boxes, book rests, chairs, and so forth, in the Treasury Department. The Senate struck that out.

Mr. SMOOT. And the Senate conferees yielded?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senate conferees yielded.

Mr. SMOOT. Was there any additional reason given to the conferees why that should be done?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. They have only $160 available for this purpose. The Secretary of the Treasury stated that that was absolutely inadequate, and would leave him very much embarrassed.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is convinced that the appropriation ought to remain.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; I am convinced of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the report.

The report was agreed to.

BIRTHDAY OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on this particular day, fraught with such memories to the American people, it seems to me that something has been forgotten. I recognize that in these modern times pure Americanism may not be wholly so popular as once it was, but lest we forget, Mr. President, I want to read a very brief address delivered November 19, 1863:

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrete, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Mr. President, as a mark of respect to the memory of the American, Abraham Lincoln, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from California to withhold the motion that I may address the Senate for a moment on the subject?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it was my intention to address the Senate for a moment upon this sacred theme, but since the able Senator from California has appropriately tendered the immortal address of Lincoln at Gettysburg, I ask the Senate to indulge me for but a moment while I tender a tribute of a word, which I will do tersely, taking no more time than the conditions of legislation will justify.

Mr. President, if the angels bore messages to the sanctified spirits in heaven, the sacred couriers would bear to Abraham Lincoln the tidings that on this birthday the world paid the tribute of thanks to God that Lincoln lived and taught. The celestial realms this hour ring with peans that the gospel of Christ for the saving the souls of men for God; and the gospel of Lincoln for the saving the lives of men for liberty of life, at last fulfill the Scripture. These are "gospel to all men" and are "preached throughout the world." This day the ambassadors of peace to man and regeneration of worlds who sit in Paris are met in the name of Lincoln. In the name of his prayer they petition the Father of Justice to administer to men the liberty taught by Lincoln. Wherever men gather to preach to the text of freedom they speak in the name of Lincoln. Wherever nations are assembled to enforce right among men and justice to civilization they dedicate their petition in the spirit of Lincoln.

Mr. President, for 50 years the great revolutions and reforms have marched under the banner of Lincoln's declarations against wrongs. Every bugle blast calling the children of men to arise and strike for freedom from corruption from within and oppression from without, trumpets in Lincoln's name. From the United States the example that lifted men to action and inspired nations to immortal deeds were born of the urge of Lincoln on the spirit of life. The emancipation of the blacks by Lincoln to equality of liberty, the call of Roosevelt for integrity of character in public office, and the cry of Wilson for the end of tyranny through all the earth is but the prayer of Lincoln voiced by the patriots of the American Republic. All now march as the conquering crusader over the world gathering converts of kings and slaves until all the world rejoices in the saving grace that God has given mankind through the works of Lincoln, Roosevelt, and Wilson. All speak the creed of Christ, do the will of God in the regeneration of man to liberty and brotherhood through the undying deeds of the imperishable Lincoln.

As one of the Senators, a representative of Illinois, Mr. President, I delight to be privileged to pay this tribute to the distinguished patriot of my State—this immortal statesman of my country.

Mr. JOHNSON of California rose.

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment, if the Senator from California will yield. It will be impossible for me to speak on this day after listening to the reading of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] of the most wonderful speech that was ever delivered by mortal man and by the greatest American, living or dead. Therefore I am perfectly willing to forego at this time what I had to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate do now adjourn out of respect to the memory of the great American, Abraham Lincoln.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 13, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 12, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, ever working in and through Thy children for the betterment of mankind. Many are called but few are chosen, since few are willing to meet the crucial test, the heroic, the sublime sacrifice. To be great is to be humble. To follow the path of duty is to be brave, noble.

We lift up our hearts to Thee, on this natal day, for the life, character, and public service of Abraham Lincoln—the greatest miracle of modern times.

Born in poverty, reared in penury, with little opportunity for even a primary education, yet by dint of his own efforts he became the greatest among the great. The truths he uttered, the message he brought in his faultless rhetoric and logic live and will live through all time.

He belongs to the ages. May we cherish his memory, emulate his virtues, tell his story round the fireside, in our schools, churches, and in all public places to coming generations; to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is recognized to read Lincoln's Gettysburg address. [Applause.]

Mr. RUBEY (reading)—

"Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. FULLER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House of Representatives, it is well that we should pause for a brief moment from the strenuous duties of this session to recall something of the life and services of that greatest of Americans, Abraham Lincoln. His life, his character, his greatness is more apparent and grows brighter and brighter as the years come and go. To honor him and his memory is but to honor ourselves. To follow his precepts and his example is to glorify our country and its institutions. As we listened to the reading of that wonderful Gettysburg Address, we could realize how the very soul of a great man and of a great people could be expressed in few words—but words that grip the heart of a Nation. The great oration of Everett on that occasion was received by the multitude with tumultuous cheers and applause, but his words are forgotten. Lincoln's brief address, following that oration, was received in silence—silence and awe, as profound as though the great audience had listened to a voice from another world; and the words of that address live to-day, and will live forever, as the expression of the hopes, the wishes, the ideals of the lovers of freedom and free government the world over. As Lincoln then said, "Let us here highly resolve, * * * that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth." We should here cherish that sentiment to-day and give to it its full meaning and expression. Abraham Lincoln represented that sentiment in all his life and all his public service. His greatness of mind and heart was not derived from modern education or from schools and colleges. It was from the very soil from which he sprang. He did not look over the people's heads. He sympathized with them in all their thoughts, their ideals, and their aspirations. He was of the people and for the people, and therein lay his greatness of soul and thought and action. In his sympathy with and love for the people, his kindness of heart, he came as near to the divine example of the Man of Nazareth as any other man who has made an impression on the history of the world. Coupled with his great heart the Almighty gave him also great intellect, that he might in the good providence of God lead a free people to higher and better things. Much may be found in the record of his life and teachings that we may well consider now in connection with the tremendous problems that confront this Nation and the world.

I recall one thing he often said. It was this: "Teach and practice economy; that is one of the first and highest virtues. It begins with saving money." I commend that advice to the majority in this Congress, and to the present administration, as being worthy of thoughtful and even prayerful consideration. I apprehend that the people of this country will soon be heard in very earnest commendation of this advice of Abraham Lincoln.

Gen. Richard J. Oglesby, of Illinois, then a young man, but afterwards a Senator of the United States and three times governor of Illinois, was on the most intimate terms with President Lincoln during his term of office. I have often heard Gen. Oglesby repeat the advice which Lincoln gave him, which was, "Keep close to the people, Dick, keep close to the people, and they will never mislead you." It was good advice to follow. Too many in this day of men in high positions look over the heads of the people and fail to appreciate the ultimate fact that all power rests with the people and that "the voice of the people is the voice of God."

We have just emerged from a great world war, another demonstration of the eternal conflict that has been waged for ages between autocratic power and the right of the people to govern themselves. Again in the good providence of God the people have won in the contest, but let us not forget that it is the victory of the people and not of any man or any set of men or of any clique or clan; and what the people have won in this last great conflict they will at every cost maintain and perpetuate. The brave boys of America who have been fighting the battles of humanity are coming home, some of them in health and strength, thank God, and others with cruel wounds as evidence of what the conflict has cost them. Let us now remember Lincoln's words: "With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive to go on to finish the work we are in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations." [Applause.]

To us mortals the ways of the Almighty are ofttimes inscrutable, but I believe that his guiding hand has ever been over this Nation, and that, as Lincoln quoted, "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." The great emancipator's work was done and God called him for his own, using the cruel hand of the assassin for the purpose. As Lincoln's life was ebbing away in the early hours of the morning in that little chamber on Tenth Street, in this city, the anxious watchers at the bedside stood with bated breath until that loving heart ceased to beat, when the great Secretary of War, Edwin M. Stanton, tenderly crossed the hands upon the lifeless breast as in awestruck tones he said, "He belongs to the ages." And so Abraham Lincoln sleeps to-day in the capital city of the State from which he came, and there thousands of freedom-loving pilgrims come, and will come for generations in the future, to pay tribute to the name of one of the world's immortals.

Illinois is justly proud of the immortal names that illumine its history all down through the hundred years of its statehood in this Union.

Not without thy wondrous story,
Illinois, Illinois,
Can be writ the Nation's glory,
Illinois, Illinois;
On the record of thy years
Abraham Lincoln's name appears,
Grant and Logan and our tears,
Illinois, Illinois.

[Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 83) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill S. 3392, from the Committee on the Public Lands to the Committee on Irrigation.

The SPEAKER. What is it?

Mr. EVANS. It is a reclamation project and clearly belongs to the Irrigation Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana asks unanimous consent to a change of reference for the bill S. 3392, from the Committee on the Public Lands to the Committee on Irrigation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the second deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1058).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 4.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended as follows: On page 3 of the bill, in line 4, strike out "$12,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Appropriates $6,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $12,000 as proposed by the House, for expenses of community forums and civic centers in public-school buildings in the District of Columbia.

On No. 2: Authorizes the use in the District of Columbia of $9,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $5,000 as proposed by the Senate, of the appropriation for carrying on the work of the Employees' Compensation Commission in France.

On No. 3: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the paragraph providing for the occupancy of the Navy Department annex by the Auditor for the War Department.

On No. 4: Appropriates $23,000, as proposed by the House, for furniture and other office equipment for the Treasury Department.

On No. 5: Appropriates $5,000,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000,000 as proposed by the House, for temporary employees of the War Department.

On No. 6: Provides for the restoration to their former positions of all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service, in the manner as proposed by the Senate, instead of in the manner proposed by the House.

On No. 7: Appropriates $2,614.84 for rent of buildings for the Navy Department, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,570.84 as proposed by the House.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, the statement deals with the seven amendments that were in conference, but it is in error in a slight degree as to amendment No. 1. The Senate struck out the provision put in in the House for $12,000 as a deficiency for community forums and civic centers. In conference there was an agreement for the restoration of the provision, but appropriating only $6,000. The statement makes it appear that the Senate had originally suggested $6,000.

In regard to the two other amendments of any magnitude, one increases the appropriation from four to five million dollars in connection with temporary clerks for the War Department. When before the House Committee on Appropriations they asked for $6,000,000. We gave them $4,000,000. They insisted before the Senate that they needed the $6,000,000, but the Senate agreed to allow them $5,000,000. I do not think anybody can tell with any degree of accuracy just the amount that is needed, but their representations were so pronounced that even the $6,000,000 that they asked for would supply them with hardly sufficient clerks, and in view of the action of the Senate in the reconsideration of the action of the House allowing four millions, the conferees acquiesced in the amendment allowing five millions.

The other amendment which is of importance is one in relation to the restoration of soldiers to positions that they held prior to their entering into the Army and giving them preference over civilian employees, provided they are qualified to do the work. The change made by the Senate was to strike out the House provision, which was a limitation on the expenditure of the fund, and by identical language as a separate provision to make it a substantive law, applying generally. The House conferees, believing that that was in accordance with the view of the House, as expressed in its limitation, agreed to the proposal of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember exactly the form of the amendment. I think there has been an amendment agreed to of that character upon several different bills, one on the deficiency bill, one on the census bill, and I am not sure but there was one on the legislative bill.

Mr. GARNER. There was.

Mr. MANN. I am very anxious that we should not get our wires crossed and put a provision in the census bill which will be in conflict with the provision in the deficiency bill, both of which may possibly be in conflict with some provision in some other bill, not to mention a bill that is now pending, reported from one of the committees, covering the whole subject. I thought the whole thing was covered in the census bill amendment that was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I agree thoroughly with the gentleman as to the desirability of having one enactment rather than a number that may be in conflict, and for that reason I questioned the wisdom of placing it in the form of a limitation upon this bill when the matter was pending in the House.

Mr. MANN. At that time the census bill had not been agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but a similar provision had been put on the legislative bill. It is my understanding that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, in dealing with the legislative bill, have put into it the exact amendment that they are putting here in the deficiency bill, and in order that the RECORD may show just what they have put in and what the House conferees agreed to, I shall read it, with the hope that those who are conferees on these other bills will see to it that the action that is taken, if any, shall be in accordance and not in conflict with this provision. The provision as it now exists reads as follows:

That all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions, if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

Mr. MANN. I think that is not in conflict with the provision in the census bill. This is applicable only to reinstatements?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The census bill provides in reference to original appointments all through the service.

Mr. GARNER. Giving the preference under the civil service?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. The effect of this was simply to take it from the form of a limitation as it passed the House and put it into the form of substantive law, and, therefore, the House conferees felt they were but obeying the wishes of the House in agreeing to the Senate amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, referring to the appropriation for the naval training station at the Great Lakes, the Bureau of Navigation has issued an order that all students at such institutions shall be discharged upon their own application. I find that that station and other similar places do not seem to grasp that order. I do not suppose the gentleman can, but I wonder if he might be able to tell us whether it is the intention of such places to obey this order or to continue to do as they darn please.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I assume that it is the intention of every department affected to obey the order. I have no personal knowledge touching the particular matter to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. Speaker, just one word more. The Senate did not affect the bill as it passed the House in any of its major particulars. It still repeals the appropriations and authorizations in the amount it did when it passed the House, and I again express the hope that the action of Congress taken in this pronounced way may result, as I believe it will, in the curtailment of unnecessary expenses and will be the medium of saving to the country moneys in very, very large sums.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask the gentleman, with reference to one of the minor amendments, amendment No. 7, referring to the rental of additional quarters for the Navy Department. The Senate strikes out the amount $2,570.84 and inserts the amount $2,614.84.

Mr. SHERLEY. That was a deficiency, and the amendment is simply to correct an error in amount. As the gentleman sees, it amounts to something under $100.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I find one or two typographical errors or omissions in the report, but I think they are self-explanatory. As stated in the report, the department submitted estimates when Congress reassembled on the first Monday in December which they afterwards requested should not be considered, because the estimates as then submitted were purely tentative, and asked for further time in which to make complete and final estimates. The committee waited for those estimates until the middle of January, when we finally received from the department their final estimates. Immediately upon the receipt of these complete estimates the committee proceeded to sit morning and afternoon and sometimes at night in order to complete this bill as early as possible.

As chairman of the committee I wish to say that I have had the full and complete cooperation of the members of the committee on both sides of the House in endeavoring to work out a bill as rapidly as possible, and I am glad to say that the committee comes before the House with a bill as to which we are in practical agreement. There may be one or two items of legislation in it about which there is some little difference of opinion, but in the main the committee has reported the bill unanimously.

Let me state to the committee in a general way the purpose of the Military Committee in drafting this legislation. The armistice having been declared on the 11th of November, 1918, and Congress having convened only a short time afterwards, necessarily the permanent policy of the War Department and the permanent military policy of Congress was undetermined. The result was that the committee finally reached the conclusion that the only thing that could be done at this session of Congress was to fix a limitation upon the size of the Army to be appropriated for the next fiscal year, with the express understanding that this is not to be considered the permanent military policy of the country.

The War Department, in considering the question as to how long it would probably take to demobilize the Army, recommended that there should be an appropriation for an Army of an average size during the next fiscal year of 28,579 officers and something like 509,000 enlisted men.

Mr. GARNER. Would it interrupt the gentleman if I should ask him a question?

Mr. DENT. Not at all.

Mr. GARNER. The next fiscal year begins July 1, 1919, and ends July 1, 1920, and this bill, if I understand it, appropriates money to carry an average army in this country, not counting what is in France, of about 537,000 men and officers. Does the War Department think you are going to have an average of that many men in the service from July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920?

Mr. DENT. Well, I do not know that the gentleman catches exactly the idea I was undertaking to convey. This does not indicate what is to be the strength of the Army at all, but it means simply this, that on the 1st day of July of this year, for instance, we may have 1,200,000 men in the Army, whereas on the 1st day of next May or next June we may have only 200,000 men.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman mean in the United States—within the boundaries of the United States?

Mr. DENT. In the entire service.

Mr. GARNER. Does this bill provide for the payment of troops in France?

Mr. DENT. Certainly; it provides for troops wherever they are.

Mr. GARNER. That is what I was trying to get the gentleman's attention directed to. This bill provides, then, for the payment of troops in France for the next fiscal year. Is there any money for the next fiscal year by which troops can be paid outside of this?

Mr. DENT. No; there is not. Of course, if there are troops in France, this bill will provide for the payment of those troops. Whether there will be any troops in France or not or how many I do not know.

Mr. GARNER. If there are no troops in France on the 1st day of July, 1919, it is inconceivable to me that you would have 1,200,000 men on that day.

Mr. DENT. There are bound to be some troops in France on the 1st day of July of this year. The committee was informed by the War Department and the testimony before the committee was that by February the department hoped to begin to return troops at the rate of 200,000 a month; that by March they hoped the monthly return of troops would reach 250,000; so that if you figure on 200,000 in February, this month, and 250,000 in March it will be impossible for us to bring back 2,000,000 men who are in France between now and the 1st day of July.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question right at that point?

Mr. DENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAZARO. Can the gentleman tell the committee how many men there were in the service when the armistice was signed and how many men have been brought back since the armistice was signed up to date, as near as possible?

Mr. STAFFORD. We can not hear the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. LAZARO. I asked the gentleman if he could tell the committee how many men were in the service on the day the armistice was signed and how many men have been brought back since the armistice was signed?

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. In Europe?

Mr. LAZARO. Certainly, in Europe.

Mr. DENT. I am going to put those figures in the RECORD.

Mr. KAHN. If my colleague will allow me, Secretary Baker published a statement in the Review of Reviews for this month in which he said there were 2,002,000 and some odd men that had crossed to the other side and were over in France, or Belgium, or Germany, or Russia, and that there had been about a million six hundred and some odd thousand left in the United States.

Mr. DENT. We had in round numbers on the day the armistice was signed something like 3,700,000 men in the Army.

Mr. LAZARO. On the other side?

Mr. DENT. No, in all. The latest figures I have as to the number that have been actually returned since the signing of the armistice is something like 175,000. I am going to put in the RECORD figures furnished me only this morning.

Mr. LAZARO. The question was asked for information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, we could not hear the reply of the gentleman to the question of the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. DENT. I said in round numbers we had in the military service something like 3,700,000 men when the armistice was signed and the latest figures that I have had of the number that have been returned up to date is about 175,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is just this difference in the statement made by the gentleman from Alabama and that made by the gentleman from California: The gentleman from California says that Secretary Baker in an article in a publication known as the Review of Reviews, which we may or may not see, has said that there were 2,002,000 men on the other side of the water. Now, if there are 2,002,000 men over there in France, in Germany, in Belgium, and in Russia, as the gentleman from California indicates, how many men have been brought back of those 2,002,000 men?

Mr. DENT. I said the latest figures I have been able to get were about 175,000 in round numbers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A hundred and seventy-five thousand out of a total of 2,002,000?

Mr. DENT. The figures as given to me are just a little over 2,000,000 men in France, enlisted men; a little less than 2,000,000 enlisted men, and with the officers making a little over 2,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Can the gentleman state whether the Secretary of War has given Congress or the Committee on Military Affairs any such figures as he has given to the Review of Reviews, as quoted by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]?

Mr. DENT. That is substantially right; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the fact is that, though the families of the soldiers in the United States are worrying about the return of the soldiers, and the soldiers themselves are anxious to get home, feeling that their work is done, many of them suffering and more of them dying in France, Belgium, Germany, and Russia, we have brought back up to the present time, since the signing of the armistice, from the 2,002,000 men over there, only 175,000 men?

Mr. DENT. That is substantially so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That accounts very largely for the fearful expense bills that we are obliged to incur and that this Congress and the people of the United States must pay in the way of taxation.

Mr. GARNER. Can the gentleman tell us the reason why there has not been more than 175,000 men brought back?

Mr. DENT. The reason they give is because they can not get the transportation facilities.

Mr. GARNER. Does the War Department give that reason?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Do they undertake to convey the idea that just as fast as transportation can be furnished they will be brought back?

Mr. DENT. Yes; and giving preference to the wounded soldiers.

Mr. GARNER. Let me ask the gentleman this question. I notice in the press reports that our fleet has just gone down to the southern waters to maneuver. Could not those vessels be used to bring troops back from France?

Mr. DENT. I can not answer that question. The gentleman knows as much about that as I do.

Mr. GARNER. Where could we get that information?

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. In addition to what the gentleman has said about the 175,000 men that have been returned, the Secretary of War stated that they first return the wounded, which require more space and more time to handle, and after getting the wounded soldiers back they would, of course, increase the numbers that could be brought back, because they could bring more men in the same space and it would take less time to handle them.

Mr. GARNER. Maybe the gentleman can give me the information. Does the gentleman know just why these vessels—the 15 that are going down to maneuver for several weeks—could not be used to bring the troops back?

Mr. FIELDS. I do not know why.

Mr. LAZARO. I wanted to ask a question for information.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman from Louisiana will yield to me just a minute, I wanted to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he knows anything about the truth of the statement that the steamship George Washington, which took the President over, came back with space and sleeping accommodations for a thousand men vacant?

Mr. DENT. No; I do not know anything about that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman may be permitted to make his statement consecutively and without interruption.

Mr. LAZARO. Can the gentleman tell the committee if they agreed on the number of the army of occupation—that is, from our standpoint—how many men we are supposed to furnish there until the peace treaty is signed; and, second, whether our allies are helping us in bringing our boys back home?

Mr. DENT. In answer to the first question of the gentleman, I stated, I thought, right at the outset that this entire program as recommended by the committee is purely a temporary proposition, and there is absolutely no understanding as to the size of the army of occupation that is to remain in Europe; and I am informed that the British are helping us in bringing our troops back.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. JONES. I notice under the legislative provision of this bill, if I read it correctly, that provision is made for enlisting volunteers for an army of 500,000 men and a little more. Is that in addition to taking care of the men who are already in the Army?

Mr. DENT. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES. It says that the Secretary of War is authorized, while making further provision for the national defense, to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States by adding a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men. Is that an additional force?

Mr. DENT. I will explain to the gentleman in this way: The purpose of that is to restore voluntary enlistments, so that, whatever the size of the Army we may have during the next fiscal year, it will be raised by voluntary enlistments in two ways—first, a regular permanent establishment under the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, which in peace times we limited to 175,000 men, and a temporary army to be enlisted for the period of one year only by voluntary enlistment, aggregating a total force not to exceed 509,000.

Mr. JONES. And this can be raised sufficiently to make it 500,000, regardless of whether or not the others are demobilized?

Mr. DENT. It could be.

Mr. JONES. Does the gentleman think that many are necessary while the others are being demobilized?

Mr. DENT. I do not think they will ever get them. It is just a method we arrived at for the purpose of fixing the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman has stated the number of men that were in foreign service at the time of the armistice and also the number of those soldiers that have been returned. Will he please state the number of men who have been discharged from the camps in this country and, approximately, the number still in camps?

Mr. DENT. I am going to put those figures in the RECORD, if the members of the committee will give me time.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Just prior to the signing of the armistice we were sending our soldiers abroad at the rate of about 300,000 a month. Since the signing of the armistice, of course, we have not sent any abroad. But with the same amount of merchant shipping and all the naval ships released from patrol duty, can the gentleman explain why we have only been able to bring them back at the rate of 60,000 a month, or only about one-fifth the number we were sending abroad just before the signing of the armistice?

Mr. DENT. I can give the gentleman this one reason that has been given to the committee, and that is that the British loaned us a good deal of their transportation facilities in order to get the men over there, their army being already on French soil; but the English have had to bring their army back, too, and consequently they have not been able to loan us as many ships as they did prior to the signing of the armistice.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The bringing of the British troops home presented but a small problem, their country being but a few miles away.

Mr. DENT. But they have to use ships.

Mr. RAMSEYER. What proportion of our men were taken over on American bottoms?

Mr. GARNER. I understand between 40 and 50 per cent.

Mr. DENT. About 40 per cent.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Then why can we not bring back at least 40 per cent in any one month of the number that we sent over prior to the signing of the armistice?

Mr. DENT. I can not answer any further than I have already answered.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman has said twice that the British loaned us their ships. Does he mean that, or did Great Britain rent them to us?

Mr. DENT. The situation is this: We expect to pay the British for the use of their ships, but the amount that we are going to pay them has yet to be determined.

Mr. KEARNS. Then Great Britain did not in any wise loan us the ships?

Mr. DENT. If we pay for them, I reckon it would still be a loan in one sense.

Mr. KEARNS. We would hire them.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to go ahead with my statement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman about some things in France, and I hope he will be patient with me. I would like to know if there is any provision in this bill, or if the War Department is now in possession of funds, to pay for damages resulting from the occupation of French territory by the American troops?

Mr. DENT. There is an appropriation made for that purpose; yes. You mean payment to private parties?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman to be patient because the country wants to know about these things.

Mr. DENT. I am always patient.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the gentleman is; but up to the present time we have been very liberal with the Committee on Military Affairs. It has had all that it asked for at the request of the administration. I want to know whether the gentleman knows whether we of the United States are paying the French authorities for the occupation of the trenches used by the American troops?

Mr. DENT. That report has been circulated, and it is absolutely false. That question has been asked by the Committee on Military Affairs of the War Department, and they have denounced it as an absolute falsehood.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been brought to me as a report——

Mr. DENT. The only property occupation expense that we are paying for over there is where we organize a training camp and use the property of a private person, just as we would occupy private property over in this country for training purposes. We have paid for that, but so far as the payment of rent for the occupation of trenches is concerned, that is said to be an absolute falsehood.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we paying for the ground on which those trenches are dug?

Mr. DENT. We are not.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Are we paying for the use of the trenches in any way—rental or fee simple?

Mr. DENT. We are not, if you can rely on the absolute statement of the War Department.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield a moment——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to ask the gentleman a further question if the gentleman will yield a moment. Why, when we are trying to get at facts, must we be interrupted all the time by members of the committee who do not want us to know these things?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I want to challenge the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DENT. I have answered the gentleman's questions positively and emphatically.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to find out how our money is spent in France and under what auspices. To whom may I go to get that information but to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman will pardon me and not be quite so fast——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has the floor——

Mr. McKENZIE. I might add, in connection with the statement as to training camps, that where we have training fields and have practice trenches we have paid rental for the ground and for those trenches, and we do that in this country.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman for that statement. Now, while we are paying the debt we owe to Lafayette——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to permit the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a speech in my time. I have yielded to the gentleman, but I decline to yield further.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am seeking information as to the waste of public moneys.

Mr. DENT. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then, when the time comes, I will make a speech in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LUNN. I ask in behalf of the chairman of the committee that he be permitted to make his statement without interruption.

Mr. DENT. It is very difficult for me to decline an interruption when a gentleman asks me a gentlemanly question.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The question I asked of the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. DENT. Most of these questions will be answered in the course of the debate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If it is ungentlemanly——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order, because the gentleman from Alabama declines to yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield to the Chairman. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is always a gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That answers the query I have in mind. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the general policy or plan which the committee adopted relative to this bill, with the distinct understanding, I repeat, that this is not intended as permanent legislation or as any permanent military policy, but as the only practical way under the circumstances by which we can arrive at the sum of money which should be appropriated in order to carry on the Military Establishment during the next fiscal year.

We carry in the bill some legislative features in addition to this. One of them restores voluntary enlistments in the Army, and that provision is to become operative immediately upon the approval of the act. It was stated by the Secretary of War and by the General Staff that many men now in the service are anxious to reenlist and to continue therein, but under the law, while they would have the right to reenlist, the period of enlistment is limited to the present emergency. This law restores the enlistment period as it was in the act of June 3, 1916, so that we can organize a permanent Army under that act by voluntary enlistment, which in peace times is limited to 175,000 men, and the additional army is a mere temporary army, to be raised by voluntary enlistment for a period of one year. That, we think, will take care of the military situation until the close of the fiscal year 1920.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Is it not contended by the military authorities that if they are given this provision for voluntary enlistment, it will enable them more speedily to demobilize the Army and let out of the service a number of men whom they can not now let out until they can get volunteers to take their places?

Mr. DENT. That is the contention of the War Department.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman permit one question there?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Do I understand that some enlistments in the Regular Army will be for the prescribed period?

Mr. DENT. For three years.

Mr. DYER. And that others will be accepted for one year?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. What percentage is for one year and what percentage is for three years?

Mr. DENT. There is no percentage fixed, except that under the act of June 3, 1916, known as the national-defense act, the peace limitation upon the Army is 175,000, but the war strength would be something like 275,000, about 100,000 more.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is not proposed under this bill to make the permanent military strength of this country 500,000?

Mr. DENT. It is not. It is intended by this bill to limit the permanent Military Establishment in peace times to what it is limited to under the national-defense act, 175,000 men.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. IGOE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if his committee went into the question of how many enlisted men are retained now by the War Department in positions in this country that could very well be filled by civilians? For instance, in the matter of the transport corps, which has just recently been authorized, there are thousands of men who are being retained because the department say they will have to get some other people to take their places before they can let them go. How in the world are we ever going to let those men out unless we provide for the employment of civilians?

Mr. DENT. The committee asked questions about that. Has the gentleman any suggestions he can make that the Military Committee can act upon?

Mr. IGOE. Yes; I suggest that you authorize the Secretary of War to spend money to pay civilians to do the work which is now being done by men getting $30 a month, because there are thousands of people now who will do those things.

Mr. DENT. What is the practical suggestion that the gentleman urges to be put upon this bill?

Mr. IGOE. The practical suggestion that I offer is this: That if the committee has not already provided money that can be used to pay civilian employees the provision be put in this bill and that the War Department be prevented from keeping men in the Army as enlisted men whose work can as well be done by civilians without any detriment to the military service.

Mr. DENT. Of course, as far as any appropriations for that purpose are concerned, they have already been had. There is nothing in this particular bill that covers a case of that kind. The committee has provided in this bill for the repeal of the Overman Act, except in so far as it might maintain field and tactical units.

Mr. IGOE. The Overman Act has got nothing to do with what I am talking about.

Mr. DENT. The Transport Corps is organized under it.

Mr. IGOE. Under the Overman Act?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask my colleague a question upon that point?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. And I will ask it also of the chairman of the committee. Would it not be well, and I would be glad to know if the chairman of the committee would object to putting in the bill a provision that none of the money appropriated herein shall be used for the payment of men in the military service for doing purely clerical work if civilians can be found through the Civil Service or otherwise to do that work?

Mr. DENT. I shall be very glad to consider an amendment along that line.

Mr. DYER. I think we ought to do that.
Mr. DENT. I will be glad to consider it.
Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from California, a member of the committee.
Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman think the suggestion of the gentleman from Missouri is fraught with a great deal of danger? These men are doing work a great deal of which is of a confidential character, and, of course, you must have a man who is subject to military discipline if he gives publicity to what is told him confidentially.
Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman allege that to be the rule in peace times?
Mr. KAHN. In peace times the conditions are altogether different.
Mr. DYER. I will say to the gentleman that not one in a thousand of the men who are occupying these positions and drawing $30 a month, for doing the work that a man ought to be paid $100 or $125 for, is doing any confidential work whatever.
Mr. DENT. I am simply suggesting to the gentleman from Missouri that if he will draw an amendment we will consider it.
Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENT. I will.
Mr. KEARNS. Does the gentleman know how many drafted men in the National Army are now being used to guard railroad property, bridges, and private property in the United States?
Mr. DENT. I do not. I supposed that that had all been eliminated, and that that was only during the period of the war.
Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman knows that there are thousands in the United States to-day doing nothing but guarding private property. If the gentleman rides on the railroads he will see them along the roads.
Mr. LOBECK. Railroad property now is under the charge of the Government.
Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter of legislation to which I desire to call the attention of the committee, and that is the invalidation of the order of the War Department requiring men in this country and in the service to wear a silver chevron. The committee thought that while the decorations ought to be preserved for those who did fight over the seas, it was unfair and unjust to discriminate against the men in this country who did not go over by requiring them to wear a distinctive chevron. We have declared that to be invalid.
Mr. STAFFORD. I did not grasp the reason why the committee decided not to allow a man who went over the seas and did service different from that of those in the cantonments to wear the distinctive chevron.
Mr. DENT. I stated that the committee has no objection to the man who did service over the seas, who actually fought, to wear his decorations, but it did not think that the man in this country ought to be singled out by requiring him to wear a particular chevron, indicating the fact that he stayed in this country or did not get a chance to go over the seas.
Mr. STAFFORD. The action of the committee does not prevent the man who went over the seas from wearing the gold bar?
Mr. DENT. No, it was not intended and it does not do it. The only other matter of legislation which I desire to call the attention of the committee to is the recommendation of the committee that all officers and enlisted men who are regularly recommended for promotion by their superior officers——
Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will pardon me, my attention has been called to the paragraph which, as I read it, forbids the wearing by any person who has seen overseas duty of a distinctive badge. May I read the paragraph?
Mr. DENT. I prefer that the gentleman should wait. If the language does not carry out that idea, I am perfectly willing to accept an amendment.
Mr. STAFFORD. I think the language is positive in forbidding the wearing of such badge.
Mr. DENT. I was proceeding to state that the last legislative feature of the bill to which I wish to call the attention of the committee is the recommendation of the committee that all officers and enlisted men who were recommended for promotion by their immediate superior officers, which was approved by competent military authority prior to the signing of the armistice, shall now be granted, and if they have been separated from the service they shall receive the promotion in the Reserve Corps.
Mr. DUPRÉ. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. DUPRÉ. In regard to the gentleman's last statement, how about those men who were recommended for promotion before it had become generally known that the Secretary of War had issued his order stopping promotion?
Mr. DENT. This applies to every recommendation prior to the 12th of November.
Mr. DUPRÉ. How about the man who was recommended, say on the 20th of November, before it became generally known that Secretary Baker had ordered all promotions stopped as of the date of the 11th of November?
Mr. DENT. It would not apply to any recommendations since the armistice was signed.
Mr. DUPRÉ. Although it might have been made in perfect good faith by a general who did not know of the order of Secretary Baker?
Mr. DENT. It is of that date; it may be that it ought to be corrected.
Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. DYER. The gentleman said he was going to put some facts and figures in the RECORD.
Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. DYER. Is the gentleman going to put in facts in reference to the personal strength of the air service, the number of camps in the air service in this country, and how many enlisted men and officers there are in each of these camps, and what the cost to the Government is for the maintenance, approximately, of these camps?
Mr. DENT. These facts have already been put in the RECORD by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], a member of the committee, furnished by the War Department.
Mr. DYER. I have in mind a camp in a Southern State where they have 200 enlisted men and perhaps half as many officers, which is costing the Government $30,000 a month, and yet the only work they are doing is looking after a few flying machines and some other Government property. That is my information. I do not know whether it is all true, but I want to find out about it.
Mr. GORDON. How does the committee know whether it is true or not?
Mr. DYER. If the committee does not know then it is pretty difficult for a Member of the House to get any information.
Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] put these facts in the RECORD, and I think the gentleman can find out from the gentleman from Kentucky what day he put them in the RECORD.
Mr. FIELDS. I put them in the RECORD of January 11, 1919.
Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman was speaking of taking care of the men recommended for promotion.
Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. RAMSEYER. Is the committee doing anything for the men who were in the training camps at the time the armistice was signed, and who were by their superior officers requested to complete the course, and who have since completed the course?
Mr. DENT. There is no legislation upon that subject.
Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman know what the War Department intends to do for those men?
Mr. DENT. No.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENT. Yes.
Mr. BANKHEAD. The report of the committee and the statement of the chairman of the committee indicate that it is the purpose of the bill under these authorizations to maintain a standing Army during the next fiscal year of approximately 500,000 men.
Mr. DENT. No; I did not state it.
Mr. BANKHEAD. That is what I gathered from the gentleman's statement.
Mr. DENT. I expressly stated just the contrary, that it was not the purpose of the committee to maintain any particular sized standing Army, but that this was a method by which we arrived at the amount to be appropriated, that we would appropriate for an average Army during the period of demobilization of something like 500,000 men.
Mr. BANKHEAD. I wanted to get a clear understanding, because I feel sure that Members are all interested in the permanent policy of the department.
Mr. DENT. I have stated two or three times that it is not the purpose of the committee to declare any permanent military policy by this legislation at all; that this was simply a method by which we arrived at the amount of money necessary to be appropriated, taking that as the average size that will probably be in existence during the period of demobilization.
Mr. BANKHEAD. The amount appropriated is based upon the estimate of maintaining during the next fiscal year a standing Army of 500,000 men.

Mr. DENT. It is paying for an Army during the period of demobilization that will average that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is on the assumption that you will have an Army of that size?

Mr. DENT. It will take that long, perhaps, to get rid of it.

Mr. WISE. I think there is some confusion on that point. It misleads me. The provision is that in addition to the Regular Army as now organized there shall be raised and organized an additional force of 500,000 men. In my judgment that is mandatory and calls upon the department to raise and organize an additional force of 500,000 men.

Mr. DENT. I do not agree with the gentleman from Georgia upon his construction of the language.

Mr. WISE. That is the language of the amendment.

Mr. DENT. I do not think that is the proper construction to give it.

Mr. WISE. It seems to me it should read that they are authorized to raise that many men, without saying that they shall, and that it is in addition to the Regular Army. The language of the provision is that in addition to the Regular Army as now organized under the act of June 3, 1916, there shall be raised and organized under the provisions of another act, which was the act of May 18, 1917, so many men.

Mr. DENT. But the gentleman should read it all—that it is not to exceed so many officers and men.

Mr. WISE. I am about to read it, if the gentleman will permit me:

That, in addition to the Regular Army as now organized under the provisions of "An act for making further and more efficient provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, there shall be raised and organized under the provisions of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, as amended, a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

That is the language of the provision—that in addition to the Regular Army as now organized under the act of June 3, 1916, there shall be raised another army under another act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The purpose of my inquiry was to clear this up.

Mr. DENT. I know what the committee intended. We discussed that in the committee and we reached the conclusion that it did not mean that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not read this to mean what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WISE] understands it to mean.

Mr. DENT. Nor I.

Mr. STEAGALL. It provides as follows:

That, in addition to the Regular Army as now organized under the provisions of "An act for making further and more efficient provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, as amended, there shall be raised and organized under the provisions of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, as amended, a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

As I construe this language, coupled with the former language, it is designed and intended to create only an aggregate force of that many men.

Mr. DENT. That is the construction the committee put upon it.

Mr. STEAGALL. Under both acts an aggregate Army of that size.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I see by the bill that there is an appropriation for the construction and repair of hospitals. A very short time ago we passed a bill here authorizing $10,000,000 for the construction of hospitals, and I would inquire whether or not there is anything in the bill that aims to purchase the lands upon which the cantonments are constructed?

Mr. DENT. There is not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was that brought before the committee?

Mr. DENT. The committee heard the Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War on the question of the policy of the War Department as to whether or not they would purchase the land on which these cantonments are located, and the committee has declined to make any recommendations on the subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. So it is not in contemplation at the present time. I see this is for the repair and construction of hospitals. Do they expect to use the hospitals at these cantonments?

Mr. DENT. They do expect to use them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many hospital beds is it thought would be required?

Mr. DENT. I have not those figures with me right now. I can give the figures to the gentleman when we get to that section of the bill, but I can not carry those things in my head.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Did the committee understand there are thousands of beds at the different cantonments around that are not occupied and that they have the nurses and the physicians and the complete service at these hospitals if they are needed?

Mr. DENT. I can give the gentleman full facts—and we went into a full investigation of that matter—when we reach that item in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The reason I inquired is that there is a very fine hospital in connection with Camp Custer in my district.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman want the Government to buy it?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should prefer to buy it rather than to build new buildings; anyone would do that as a business proposition.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. MASON. There have been some questions asked in regard to the return of soldiers from France, and I would like to ask the chairman whether there is any rule of the department, so far as he knows, in regard to what troops are to be used. I ask this question in good faith. Our colleague from Massachusetts returned the other day—I think he arrived about a week ago—and he stated here to many of us that the ship that he returned on had a large number of unoccupied rooms—I think he said rooms for a thousand more—that some staterooms had three beds and only one was occupied. I want to know if there is any rule of the department limiting the kind of ships that the boys are to be sent home on?

Mr. DENT. I do not know of any rule.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman does not know. Has the chairman of the committee any information which could be imparted to his colleagues with safety to the Government in regard to the plan of whether we will withdraw our troops from Russia or send more over for the defense of those who are already there?

Mr. DENT. No, sir; I have no information.

Mr. LOBECK. This bill provides for volunteer enlistment, does it not?

Mr. DENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOBECK. Did the committee have the approval of the National Security League? I just wanted to ask——

Mr. DENT. No. I understand, though, from the newspaper reports that Judge Parker repudiated his own baby yesterday before the committee. I do not know whether that is true or not.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman stated that at the time the armistice was signed we had approximately 1,700,000 men in the camps here? Is the gentleman prepared to state how many of that number have been discharged?

Mr. DENT. Yes; I am going to have that read into the RECORD right now.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And what policy obtains in reference to discharge of the others?

Mr. DENT. The policy is supposed to be to discharge them just as rapidly as practicable.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. DENT. All right.

Mr. LONDON. On page 58 is the provision for a new army which is to be raised and organized under the act approved May 18, 1917—that is, the draft act.

Mr. DENT. It is only to be raised by voluntary enlistment.

Mr. LONDON. Is it clear enough? Does the gentleman believe the subsequent provisions of the bill make it clear?

Mr. DENT. I think it does. That language was drafted by the Judge Advocate General of the Army in order to carry out the intention of the committee.

Mr. LONDON. What does this mean, that they shall be organized and raised under the provisions of the draft act?

Mr. DENT. That refers to the character and nature of the organization and the different units and the different kinds of organizations that were created by the act of May 18, 1917.

Mr. LONDON. Does the gentleman believe that the language should be made so clear and specific as to make no doubt about it?

Mr. DENT. I think it should be made so clear that he who runs may read; yes, sir.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. I think the point in the mind of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] is this, that the draft act provides for raising the Regular Army, that they shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, if they can, or by draft whenever the President decides he wants the men drafted. There is that alternative in the act of May 18, 1917, which the committee did not intend to carry in this bill.

Mr. DENT. The draft act?

Mr. GORDON. Yes. The question I suspect the gentleman from New York propounded is whether it is intended to confer upon the President the power, in case he can not raise by voluntary enlistment, to draft them.

Mr. DENT. It is not.

Mr. GORDON. Of course it is not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am very much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from New York, because I have no doubt that not only the War Department, by this act, is authorized to raise an Army under the selective-draft act, but there would be another alternative. The language indicates that fact. Further, this is not to be a Regular Army.

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. CARAWAY. You say all the enlisted force for the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistment, which differentiates the method by which you raise your Army of 509,000 men——

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. No; if the gentleman will look at——

Mr. CARAWAY. Pardon me; I am not asking the gentleman from Texas to correct me.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I beg the gentleman's pardon, of course——

Mr. CARAWAY. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I should not have answered that way; but does the committee intend that language to mean an alternative, that a certain Army shall be raised under the provisions of the act approved May 18, 1917, which was the so-called selective-draft act? Then you say your enlisted personnel of the Regular Army shall be by voluntary enlistment for a certain length of time.

Mr. DENT. We did not intend to do it——

Mr. CARAWAY. I wanted to be certain about that, because I am so satisfied it is the only interpretation that can be had.

Mr. DENT. If that is the way it is to be interpreted, I will insist upon an amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I call the chairman's attention to lines 13 and 14, on page 58, which read as follows:

And for the additional forces herein authorized by voluntary enlistments for the period of one year.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was the item to which I was going to call the gentleman's attention. That provides an additional force for the Regular Army by voluntary enlistment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have some figures which might be interesting to the House and which answer a great many questions that have been asked me; and if the committee wishes I would like to have them read from the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

Mr. DENT. Then I will reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] occupied one hour and five minutes and reserves the balance of his time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE]. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to make the request before I begin my statement that I be permitted to make it without interruption, when I will be glad to answer any question that I am able to answer.

I want to say that the Committee on Military Affairs has been criticized somewhat for its delay in bringing in this bill, but I want to add very frankly that it has not been the fault of our committee or the members of the committee. We have been unable to get the estimates, and, in fact, we have not got all of the printed hearings yet that were held by our committee. But nevertheless we have gone ahead and have done the very best we could under the circumstances to agree on the appropriation, which in many cases is but a guess. Many of the appropriation items contained in this bill are simply guesses on the part of the committee as to the amount that will be necessary for the next fiscal year.

The large items in this bill, as you will find by looking at it, are the items of subsistence of the Army, pay of the Army, and transportation of the Army. The latter item is $449,000,000, an enormous one. But the committee did not feel that it would be wise to curtail it, inasmuch as it covers the bringing of the boys back from Europe, and the paying of the transportation in France, the ocean transportation, and the transportation of the boys to their homes in various parts of the country. So we felt that it would be wise to err on the side of liberality rather than otherwise, and not subject ourselves to the criticism of not making sufficient appropriation to bring the boys home from France. That item we left large.

There is another very large item in the bill which takes care of storage. Some of you will wonder why such a large appropriation is made, but you must bear in mind that we have thousands of carloads of material and equipment in France that will be transported back to our country; that we have tens of thousands of carloads of material in the various cantonments of the country that must be stored and preserved; and to get the storage space and pay for the carrying of that, and the storing of it, will cost a vast sum of money. However, we feel that it is economy to do it.

I want to call your attention to another item in this bill—the item of the Intelligence Department of the Army. They came before our committee and asked for an appropriation of $780,000 for this one particular branch of the service, for which in peace times we had appropriated the sum of $11,000 to care for. In peace times this department of the Army was practically carried on by one man, but when war came it was greatly enlarged, and they asked us in the reorganization scheme of the Army to grant them 77 officers and 254 men. Of course, you gentlemen understand the Intelligence Department of the Army means the secret-service department of the Army. We felt that in peace times no such an amount of money was necessary. Therefore we cut the appropriation to $200,000, which, in my judgment, is excessive in peace times; but inasmuch as we are now passing from war back to peace, it might be well for one more year to continue this activity to some extent. Therefore we made what I believe to be a fair and liberal appropriation.

Another appropriation which is very much increased over that of last year is the appropriation for the National Guard; and I am sure there is not a man in this House but will remember the terrific fight that we had in 1916 against those who formed the policy of the Continental Army and who were determined to destroy the National Guard, the only military organization that is as old as our country. But we succeeded in defeating them and writing into the law of 1916 a provision which would bring the National Guard up to a real fighting force. Is there a man in the United States to-day who does not read with pride and satisfaction the story of the Rainbow Division, of the New England Division, of the Wildcat Division, of the Sunset Division, and of the Thirty-third or Prairie Division from old Illinois and other National Guard Divisions? [Applause.] We are proud of the record made by these citizen soldiers on the battle fields of Europe, and I hope the day will never come, no matter what may be our military policy in the future, when the old National Guard system or militia, which has stood by us in every trial through all our history, will not be maintained. [Applause.] We have appropriated liberally for the National Guard, and I trust that it will meet with your approval.

Now, gentlemen, I am not going to take up very much time in discussing this bill, but I want to say a few words in connection with the legislation contained in it, and about which the chairman of the committee spoke while he was on the floor. Let us look into this for a moment.

What is the military policy of the United States and how is it provided for by law? The only law that we have providing for a permanent Military Establishment in this country is the law of June 3, 1916, known as the national-defense act. That provided for a permanent and fixed Military Establishment in this country. When war came on we enacted special legislation for the raising of larger armies to fight our battles in this war. We provided for conscription. We did many things that would enable us to enlarge our Army. But now that the war is approaching an end, with the prospect of peace ahead of us, it is necessary that we get back to some permanent military policy for the future. The General Staff of the Army prepared a plan. They came before our committee and asked us to adopt a policy that would provide permanently for 28,579 commissioned officers in the Regular Establishment and 509,000 men. We said to them very frankly, "Gentlemen, we can not pass any bill at this session of Congress providing for a permanent Military Establishment in this country." The Staff then sent over a rider containing this proposition, but, in fact, meaning about the same thing, because we fixed the permanent Army of 509,000 men and 28,579 officers and enact permanently the Overman Act so far as the powers of the General Staff are concerned and which have enabled the General Staff to wipe out of existence some of the most useful bureaus which have been a part in the Military Establishmnt of our country, and creating no end of corps such as the Construction Corps, the Tank Corps, and I do not know how many more, some of them very useful.

But it centralized the entire power in that establishment. We said, "We can not do that. We will not do that." Then Mr. KAHN and the other members of the committee began to work to find out what we could do to tide us over for the present, at least, until the people of this country shall have had an opportunity to study and determine what the character of the permanent Military Establishment of this country shall be, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] presented to the committee a rider, which provides for the commissioning of 28,579 officers—the same number as was suggested by the General Staff—and providing for an Army of 509,000 men, to be raised by voluntary enlistment of from one to three years; and it has written in language which provides that in addition to the force now authorized by the act of June 3, 1916, there shall be raised additional forces which shall bring the number up to 509,000 men.

Now, what does that mean? That simply means that we are to have a Regular Army as provided for in the national-defense act, at war strength, and in addition to that we are going to add a sufficient number of men to bring it up to 509,000.

Now, I want to say to you, gentlemen of the committee, that I think you know me well enough to know from my position in the past that I do not favor in time of peace a large standing army in a republic. [Applause.] I am unalterably opposed to fastening on the taxpayers of our country a large fixed and permanent regular Military Establishment. But I am perfectly willing to do anything that will protect the interests of our country while we are passing through these troublous days, getting back to substantial peace, and therefore I am willing that for the next fiscal year we may enlist, if we can get the men, 509,000 men temporarily, to serve until 1920. I am willing that they shall have sufficient officers to officer that Army. But I want to tell you, my friends, that we have undertaken to guard this rider in such a way that it will be impossible for the War Department to fasten that number of men and officers onto the country permanently.

I do not know whether we have used language that will protect us in that, and I ask and I request that every Member of this House take that provision of the bill and study it carefully, and if there is a weak spot in it, if there is a possible chance that that language will enable the War Department to commission permanently in the line and staff of the Army of the United States 28,579 officers, we had better put in language about which there is no question, in order to be sure that we do not find ourselves with that large number of officers fastened onto us permanently.

There are now commissioned in the Regular Army of the United States a few over 10,000 officers. It is about 10,200, I think, and the Army that is provided for under the national-defense act is something like 300,000 at war strength. Now, to almost multiply that by three, giving us nearly 30,000 officers for an Army of 500,000 men, would be, to my mind, an unbalanced and top-heavy Military Establishment, even if we wanted one of that size. And I hope that if anyone in reading this can find a weak spot in it that will make it possible to add one single more officer to the line than the number provided for by the national-defense act he will assert himself and help us to write this law in such a way that when we finally arrive at the days of peace we will have the forces provided under our own national-defense act, the National Guard, and what other elements of national defense we may have, and will be able to sit down and think it over and determine whether or not we want to have a system of universal military training in this country; and if we do, God knows that I do not want a large, fixed, permanent Regular Army in our country.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will it interrupt the gentleman to yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under this provision authorizing the Army for the fiscal year for which we are appropriating to a strength of 500,000 men it provides that, in addition to the Regular Army, and so forth, under the national-defense act and under the selective-draft act of 1917, this force shall be maintained at approximately 500,000.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentleman this question: It is conceivable that the existing emergency may end the 1st of July this year if we declare peace. That, under the operation of the selective-draft law, would terminate the service of all men taken in under that act, as I understand it.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Suppose that all the men under the provisions of that act shall be entitled to discharge. How are you to raise this 500,000 men provided for in this act?

Mr. McKENZIE. I am glad the gentleman asked that question, because we would find ourselves without an Army at all if we did not take some steps to raise an Army within four months after the treaty of peace has been signed, because the men are all entitled to discharge and, whether they are in the Regular Service or in other service—and there are, as I understand it, only about 30,000 men in the Regular Army whose time has not already expired, and they would be entitled to go out—we would find ourselves when that time comes without an Army.

Now, what are we hanging our hopes upon? Simply upon this provision in the bill which provides that we must enlist men from one to three years to make up an Army of 500,000. Can we get them? I asked the Secretary of War when he was before our committee if he did not believe it would be wise, if he wanted an Army of that size—and he said he did, and he wanted the officers permanently commissioned in the Regular Army—I asked him whether it would not be wise to put into the law a provision for the conscription of the men. He said, "No; I think we will get the men without any trouble at all. They will come in."

But I want to tell you, my fellow countrymen, that I doubt if there are 500,000 men in this country who will be willing to enlist in the Regular Army in time of peace, and one of the things that we provided for, or attempted to provide for, in this rider is that the officers shall be commissioned only as the men are enlisted, and if we get only 250,000 men under that enlistment they can not add a single officer to the permanent roll of this country. And that is as it should be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman a question in regard to the rider he is discussing. It provides that this Army shall be maintained under the national-defense act and under the provisions of the act authorizing the President to increase the Military Establishment, which is the selective-draft law.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And it provides for—a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

By implication would not that make new legislation on the selective-draft law, so as to compel the retention in the service of men under the selective-draft law despite this prior provision?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I do not think so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Or authorize the drafting of new men under it?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; I do not think so. That language refers to that part of the law of 1917 which provided for the increase of the Army above the number provided for in the national-defense act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It says "under the provisions." It means all the provisions.

Mr. KAHN. It says they must be voluntary enlistments under that law.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This section does not say that.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Where does it say so?

Mr. McKENZIE. Further on in the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Further down in the section. Now, the very proposition which the gentleman speaks about was called to the attention of the committee. We recognize the fact that if we keep these men in France beyond the period of the war or the emergency, we are practically redrafting them. The committee did not want to do that, and therefore they provided that men should be enlisted into this temporary army by volunteering.

Mr. CARAWAY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question.

Mr. McKENZIE. I take pleasure in yielding to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am not going to vote for any act that in time of peace is going to authorize the drafting of boys into the Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not blame you.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, we know that no law should be written that requires construction. It ought to be clear and explicit.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. By reference to the act approved May 18, 1917, you reenact the provisions of that law that are applicable to this, do you not?

Mr. McKENZIE. Not necessarily; no.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then why refer to it at all?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is the only way in which we can enlarge the force above that provided for in the act of 1916.

Mr. CARAWAY. There is not a thing in the language in this act that says you are adopting only a part of the act approved May 18, 1917; but you say that they shall raise an Army under the provisions of the act authorizing the President temporarily to increase the Military Establishment of the United States, approved May 18, 1917. Now, in the language referred to below you say—

The enlisted force for the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years and for the additional forces herein authorized by voluntary enlistments for the period of one year.

Now, that refers to the 500,000 men for the Regular Army. That is under the act of June 3, 1916. The language that has been referred to says that this is not to be a conscript army, but that—

The enlisted force for the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years, and for the additional forces herein authorized by voluntary enlistments for the period of one year.

Now, it is the contention that this refers to this Army of 500,000 men.

Mr. McKENZIE. To the surplus; yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. But in construing a law I understand it is always the rule to construe it so that every provision of it may stand, if possible. Now, for the construction—

The enlisted force of the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years.

That is, if you enlist in the Regular Army, you shall enlist for three years, but if you enlist in this additional temporary force you may enlist for one year.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. But it does not say that is the only way you can raise the Army. You can undertake to raise it by voluntary enlistment, which enlistment shall be for the period of one year; but if you do not get it, then, under the provisions of the act of May 8, 1917, which you incorporate by referring to it in this bill, you can raise an Army of 500,000 men, and therefore you will be in a position to raise it by the selective-draft act. That is the possible construction. That construction will make each provision of the bill stand; and we know that when the War Department undertakes to raise an Army of 500,000 men by voluntary enlistment in time of peace it will not get 500 men. I have not seen a boy yet who has come back from the other side who would reenlist, and you have not seen one either.

Mr. PLATT. I have.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then they come from New York City and not from any other part of the country, and I would be willing to assert that the gentleman can not go out and raise a regiment in this country by paying a bonus for voluntary enlistment.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. The Secretary of the Navy says they are enlisting 1,600 men a week in the Navy and Marine Corps.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was not talking about the Marine Corps.

Mr. PLATT. That is the only place where they can enlist now.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Marine Corps has always been popular because it has always been sensibly administered, but nobody has heard of a boy coming back from the Regular Army who wanted to volunteer to get into the Regular Army again.

Mr. PLATT. He has not had a chance to.

Mr. CARAWAY. If he had a chance, you could not get him within a mile of the enlistment officer.

Mr. McKENZIE. If the gentleman from Arkansas is through, I will say to him that I have no quarrel with him. I think the language is plain enough that there can be no possible chance of conscription under it. But I want to say to him that if he has any doubt about it, if he will prepare an amendment I have no objection to it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would the gentleman have any objection to putting in at the end of the sentence in line 8 "providing that the personnel shall be raised by voluntary enlistment only," and then there will be no question about it?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would have no objection, and I do not think the committee would, for we do not propose to raise them by conscription.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Suppose this legislation in this paragraph should not be enacted at all, what would be our situation in reference to the army in Europe?

Mr. McKENZIE. It would be unchanged.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. After the proclamation of peace all the boys who were inducted and all of those who enlisted in the Regular Army since the war began would be entitled to a discharge in four months?

Mr. McKENZIE. Four months after the treaty of peace—as soon as it is practicable to get them home.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That would make it necessary to bring the boys right home?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And the Regular Army would consist of the men who had enlisted prior to our entrance into the war and such others as may now desire to enlist, and that law is on the statute books?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then, may I ask what is the matter with that?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will state to the gentleman from Mississippi, as I understand the law, if we do not enact this legislation at all, but simply make an appropriation, we will find ourselves four months after the treaty of peace is announced with no Army that we have a right to hold. We will have, however, an organization of the Regular Army complete in its officer personnel. We will have a thousand and some odd officers commissioned in the Regular Army, making it complete from top to bottom, and the only thing we would lack would be men. [Laughter.] I mean enlisted men. If we would provide, however, in this law for the immediate enlistment of men in the Regular Army, we could enlist up to 175,000 men in the line, as provided in the national defense act.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Would it take new legislation to authorize that?

Mr. McKENZIE. It would take new legislation to authorize the enlistment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. No; under the law as it stands now men can enlist in the Army up to 175,000 after peace has been declared. We would still have a Regular Army of 175,000 men if we put no legislation in the bill at all. Am I not correct?

Mr. McKENZIE. No; you are not. The Regular Army now in existence, with the exception of 20,000 men, would pass out.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. McKENZIE. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that the national defense act specifically provides for enlistment in the Army during the war, terminating with the war, so that if you enlist men now you could only hold them until peace is declared. So you have to amend the enlistment law.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. After the proclamation of peace the men go out in four months.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They go out immediately, and the four months is to get them back from Europe.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. We have four months to get them back home. They may all be back in four months after peace is declared. Then we have authority to hold those who enlisted prior to the entrance into the war, up to 175,000, without any further legislation. That is a consummation most devoutly to be wished.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois five minutes more.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. This Army that you are trying to raise by virtue of the bill is an addition to the Regular Army; am I right?

Mr. McKENZIE. No.

Mr. KEARNS. Then, what do you mean, in line 21, by saying "in addition to the Regular Army"?

Mr. McKENZIE. That would mean the difference between the Regular Army and that provided in the national defense act.

Mr. KEARNS. But they all belong to the Regular Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; temporarily.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There can be under existing law no personnel of the Regular Army except that laid down in the provisions of the national defense act of June 3, 1916, and amendments thereto. That is what we start with here, 175,000 men, going along to what is specifically prescribed as a temporary army, in the aggregate making 509,000 men.

Mr. IGOE. Will not the 509,000 men be an addition to the 179,000 men?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. No; what you start with is the Regular Army, and the difference between that and 509,000 men would be complete.

Mr. McKENZIE. If my colleague would permit, they would not be in or, rather, attached to it for a temporary period.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They are called the temporary Army.

Mr. KEARNS. I want to know whether these 509,909 enlisted men, when enlisted, are going to be a part of the Regular Army?

Mr. KAHN. A portion of them are.

Mr. KEARNS. What portion?

Mr. KAHN. One hundred and seventy-five thousand as a maximum.

Mr. KEARNS. And the others are not going to be?

Mr. KAHN. No; they are in the temporary Army, enlisted for only one year by volunteering.

Mr. KEARNS. Then I want to call the gentleman's attention to line 11, which provides that the enlisted force of the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. And these others need not be raised by voluntary enlistment?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman should read a little further.

Mr. KEARNS. I am reading what the bill says. The gentleman from California says a part of the 509,909 men will be a part of the Regular Establishment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. In this bill you give the War Department authority to raise by voluntary enlistment those that belong to the Regular Army.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. But the bill says nothing about those men who are going to belong to the other portion.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; it does. It says that the temporary force shall be enlisted for the period of one year.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that we would like to hear the reasons and the theory upon which the War Department and the General Staff predicated the necessity in time of peace for an army of 500,000 men, whether you call it a standing army or an emergency army.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman that they said—and I think it is their contention—that in a nation of this size, with our many scattered possessions, an army of 509,909 men and 28,579 officers is not an army too large to properly care for our possessions in the United States and our insular possessions in time of peace; and they base their judgment, I presume, upon the experience of the past. Personally I do not agree, and I have not in the past agreed, with the judgment of the General Staff as to the size of the Regular Army in our country in time of peace. I feel this way about it: I have always conceded to the experts in our Military Establishment the regulation of all manner of things pertaining to organization and to the character of the Army that we are to have, but I do feel, and I always have felt, that it is the duty of the representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States to fix the size of the Army that we shall have. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman from Illinois remember that the Secretary of War himself stated and restated frequently to the committee that this was not intended as a regular army, but as a "stop-gap" army. That was the expression he used.

Mr. McKENZIE. I know he did. I know he stated that, and I know he said it was only for temporary purposes in a sense. But I do know, and my colleague knows, that the General Staff's plan called for an Army of 509,909 men in time of peace, and if the gentleman will read on page 18 of the hearings he will find what the Secretary of War said. If I may have time, I just want to read that for the benefit of the House, so that we will know where we stand on this proposition. It should be borne in mind that we had the staff's plan before us at the time this testimony was given:

The CHAIRMAN (interposing). In other words, as I understand it, really this army of 500,000 is intended just for the transition period until we do come back to normal conditions?

Secretary BAKER. That is my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. Then why not make this legislation temporary instead of permanent?

Secretary BAKER. The only difficulty about that is that you have made temporary legislation which you are now having to recast. All legislation is temporary. Every Congress has the right to change the legislation passed by its predecessor, and the fact that this bill creates an Army of 500,000 men does not disable the Congress hereafter from making it 100,000, if they desire to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very much easier to originate a bill than it is to pass it.

Mr. ANTHONY. On that point, Mr. Secretary, if you raise your Regular Army of 500,000 men, and officer it with the Regular Army officers, in the regular service, how are you going to reduce it after that?

Secretary BAKER. It would reduce itself.

Mr. ANTHONY. By eliminating your officers?

Secretary BAKER. By eliminating the officers as they eliminate themselves.

Mr. ANTHONY. Would that not be a difficult thing to do?

Secretary BAKER. I do not think so.

Mr. ANTHONY. After you have taken these officers into the Regular Establishment?

Secretary BAKER. I do not think so. They are in process of elimination.

Mr. ANTHONY. It would take quite a while to get them out?

Secretary BAKER. It would take some time.

My friends, you may be sure that it would take some time. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 minutes more. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman know, and is it not a fact that there was not a singe member of the Military Affairs Committee in favor of a standing army of 500,000 men in time of peace, and was not this legislation written to avoid anything of that kind?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; and I am glad that my colleague has stated that. I think it is to the everlasting credit of the Committee on Military Affairs that they did not stand for that proposition.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I want to add to what the gentleman has said in response to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], that part of the reason for appropriating for the maintenance of 500,000 men this year is that there would probably be an average of that many kept through the fiscal year, when you considered that you start the year with over 2,000,000 men. You can not demobilize at sufficient speed so that by the time you come to the end of this fiscal year you will not have had an average of about 500,000 men for the year, anyway. The second phase of the matter, which does not run to ratios or figures, but runs to public policies, was this, expressed concretely. It was thought to be, and I believe it is the opinion of this Congress, an unwise thing to put your hose up until you are sure the fire is out.

Mr. McKENZIE. I thank my colleague for that statement. I thought I had put myself in that position.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House as to how much of this force of 509,909 enlisted men is to be used as an army of occupation abroad, either in Germany, Russia, or Siberia?

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman that that matter did not come before us; it has not been considered. This is a proposition, supposed to be for an army of the United States and the insular possessions, although it has been stated that perhaps some of these men enlisted for the temporary army of one year might be sent to Europe to replace some of the boys who have been over there for a long time and let them come back.

But on that proposition I want to say this, that I think when the day comes, unless there is some other difficulty arising on the other side of the water, that if we load another regiment of American boys on a ship and start them across the water for Europe there is going to be something doing in this country. [Applause.] I do not believe it will be necessary, and I hope that these boys will be permitted to serve in this country. More than that, and I must conclude my statement because other members of the committee wish to speak——

Mr. KEARNS. I take it to be the hope of this committee, I know it is with the majority of the House, at least I think it is, to get away from conscription, and that is the object of this bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes; that is one of the objects.

Mr. KEARNS. And I doubt very seriously whether we do. Now let us read this:

The enlisted force of the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years, and for the additional forces herein authorized by voluntary enlistments for the period of one year.

Now, I am afraid that is not clear, and I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he would not agree to an amendment of this kind:

The enlisted force of the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years, and the additional forces herein authorized shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for the period of one year.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that I am willing to accept any amendment that will make it absolutely clear and definite that all enlistments must be voluntary.

Mr. KEARNS. To my mind the language of the bill is not clear and definite, and the language which I would suggest is absolutely clear and definite.

Mr. DENT. I shall be very glad to consider the gentleman's amendment when we reach the reading of the bill on that point. I desire to make it clear, and that is the intention of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will permit, to get back to the question the gentleman was discussing 15 minutes ago when I first tried to attract his attention—that is, the necessary Army in time of peace on account of our possessions, and so forth—the gentleman remembers his statement, I want to know if I am correct in this information I have that prior to this war England with all of her possessions had a standing army of a little over 200,000 men?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is my understanding.

Mr. WINGO. Did not we get along with a standing Army of 100,000 prior to the war, and we have no additional possessions?

Mr. McKENZIE. We did fairly well.

Mr. WINGO. We did fairly well; yes. Now, what practical difficulty, or rather is there any practical difficulty that prevents our adopting the program of saying to England, France, and Italy, "We are going to bring every one of our boys home at once and you must furnish the troops to police your own territory of continental Europe." What practical difficulty is there in the United States adopting that policy?

Mr. McKENZIE. I would simply say to my good friend from Arkansas, in my judgment, that would be too much like the amendment we tried to beat yesterday providing for the authorization of more battleships in the future. What we are doing is satisfactory to me and it is serving notice on them——

Mr. WINGO. But what is the practical difficulty in doing it?

Mr. McKENZIE. There is no difficulty in doing it. We could say that if we wanted to——

Mr. WINGO. Then what is the practical difficulty?

Mr. McKENZIE. There is the question of wise action. We are bringing our boys back as fast as we can, I am advised, and certainly we have not yet been asked to leave a certain number of our troops in Europe, and when the time comes we can settle that question.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman believe that or is he quoting the Chief of Staff?

Mr. WINGO. If we have got the shipping that they have contended in the last few days we have, we should be able to bring home most of our boys by the close of the fiscal year?

Mr. McKENZIE. Oh, no.

Mr. WINGO. Yes; they have more than a hundred vessels, if the public press is to be believed, and they can take those and if they will load them like they loaded the Rochambeau, putting on 810 men more than its capacity, what practical difficulty is there?

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say to the gentleman from Arkansas, and every Member of this House, I think we ought to try to exercise at least some patience and some reason in connection with this matter.

Mr. WINGO. That is the reason why I am asking if there is any practical difficulty; if it is not practicable I would not insist on it.

Mr. McKENZIE. We should understand that over 50 per cent of our boys were carried to France in bottoms not carrying the American flag but in foreign ships which they voluntarily, freely, and gladly furnished to get our heroic boys over there to help them win the war when the war was on; but the war is over now. It took well over a year to get those men into France even with all that assistance, and it is certain that with our small number of vessels compared with the number we had given to us to get our boys over, that when it comes to bringing them back home it will require more time.

Mr. WINGO. Is that the only practical difficulty in the matter?

Mr. McKENZIE. And we are bringing them back as fast as possible.

Mr. WINGO. Is that the only practical difficulty—the lack of shipping?

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, no; there are many difficulties in the way.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McKENZIE. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that the President of the United States is one of the plenipotentiaries in France at the present time.

Mr. WINGO. I had heard that; so the gentleman does not give me any information by that statement.

Mr. KAHN. And we do not know but what he will agree to some provision in the peace treaty whereby he will consent to keep a certain number of our men over there.

Mr. WINGO. My question is, Is there a practical difficulty?

Mr. KAHN. That is a practical difficulty.

Mr. WINGO. Not from our standpoint. We can refuse to provide for an army of occupation if we wish to do so.

Mr. McKENZIE. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that it is not a matter to be settled in the discussion on this bill.

Mr. WINGO. I can not agree to that. I wanted to get the gentleman's idea of the practical difficulty.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman said that there were a hundred difficulties in bringing the boys back home. Will he please be specific and state what the difficulties are, in his judgment?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not state all of them.

Mr. LAZARO. State what they are, in your judgment.

Mr. McKENZIE. I can understand that one of them is getting the troops even to the harbors of France and picking out the organizations that are to be sent home, the work of demobilizing them, and all that sort of thing. It is a great task to demobilize this army, and we simply can not do it by word of mouth or by our wish. God knows I would like to see them discharged.

Mr. EMERSON. Is this army of half a million men to be used in the United States? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. McKENZIE. Most of them; yes.

Mr. EMERSON. I have a notion on this military preparedness business, and I would like to ask why it would not be better to have this army of 200,000 men and spend the balance of the money in training the boys in the schools. That would give them physical development, develop them physically in a military way, and then we would be prepared; because if we need an army we would need a large army.

Mr. McKENZIE. That is a matter that can be determined when we fix the Military Establishment of the country.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman made a statement to the committee without limitation, as I understood it, to the effect that the War Department was bringing back to this country our troops in France as fast as they could. Now, does the gentleman desire that the committee is to understand that as a statement from him based upon facts, that he knows to be facts, or where did he get that information?

Mr. McKENZIE. That is my understanding.

Mr. DYER. Where did the gentleman get that information?

Mr. McKENZIE. From statements in the press and from statements before our committee.

Mr. DYER. Who made that statement before the gentleman's committee?

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not remember.

Mr. DENT. I will state that the officer of the War Department who appeared before the committee on this subject was Maj. Bettison.

Mr. DYER. And he is the only information we have on that proposition?

Mr. DENT. He has charge of the embarkation service under Gen. Goethals.

Mr. DYER. And we have nothing from Gen. Pershing upon the question, have we?

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] has expired.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman having yielded, he states that he has no information except the newspapers and something coming before the committee, which was added to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] when he mentioned some major who brought this information. That is all the information that we have that we are bringing our troops back as fast as we can. Of course, I do not want to get into any argument over it, but I do not agree with the statement of the gentleman. That is, I do not believe they are telling the truth to the gentleman from Illinois or to the Congress and to the members of the committee. Does this bill that this committee has brought in provide for all of these officers with their uniforms, who are sitting around in the various departments here, doing no work, earning no money, and not giving over half an hour a day, on the average, to the service of the Government for the next year?

Mr. McKENZIE. They are not especially mentioned in this bill.

Mr. DYER. But they will be taken care of, instead of having men come in and do the work who know how to do it, and who will not wear uniforms.

Mr. KNUTSON. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not Maj. Bettison's information that we were bringing them back as fast as we can was given prior to the return of the steamer George Washington, which came back with 1,200 vacant berths?

Mr. McKENZIE. I can not do that.

Mr. DYER. What authority have you for it? What I say I said on my own responsibility, and if I can get some time I will state the facts.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question there?

Mr. DYER. I have not the floor.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me finish. I will simply say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] that we have given all the information we have, and when we have done that we can do no more.

Mr. LAZARO. What I wanted to ask the gentleman was this: What information has he when he says the department does not want to bring them back?

Mr. McKENZIE. I decline to go into that.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, whatever may be said about this proposed rider, it is simply intended to take care of our country for the next fiscal year and gives an opportunity in the next session of Congress, or in the next Congress, to consider fully the character of the permanent Military Establishment that we will have hereafter. And I want to say, for one, that I think it is wise, when we read the newspapers and see some of the dangerous signals that are showing up above the horizon in our country at this time, to keep at least a sufficient military force to maintain order in case disorder should come in our own country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KAHN. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. McKENZIE. I realize, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, that the War Department has been guilty of many shortcomings. It has been deserving of much criticism in many lines. There has been waste without end, and there have been many officers who have dishonored the uniforms they wore. But, after all, when you cast aside those who have been a discredit to this great Republic of ours, and when you realize that of the 200,000 or more officers that we have had in our Army, those who have proven unworthy are relatively few, and when we realize what has been achieved and accomplished we can in a moment of pride forget for the time being the man who would rob his country in the hour of its peril or the officer who would disgrace the uniform which he has upon him.

I hope that in the next Congress this House will have an organization of men who will have the courage to meet the many vexing and trying problems that are going to confront us in the next Congress, and that when they come up for settlement we will forget that some of us at times think too much of self, and that we will rise to that place where we will stand up with courage as real Representatives of the people and see that the future of our country is made more secure. For if we do not do that, gentlemen; if we go on in the mad way in which we have been going in the past few years, adding burden after burden to the taxpayers of this country, the day will come when we will not be fighting enemies outside our land but we will be facing revolution within our own land. And I hope that in the next Congress we will have the courage not only to curb Regular Army officers and the Navy, but all the other activities of this country that are seeking more than is necessary to protect us in time of peace. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is recognized.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Porto Rico is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DÁVILA. Mr. Chairman, now that the American Nation, on account of the termination of the war, has to confront all the difficult problems that the great struggle has brought to the consideration of the American leaders, now that the American people, through their most eminent spokesmen, are advocating the liberty and freedom of the small countries, I want to present to your consideration the Porto Rican problem which, in my opinion, is one that ought to be decided in this psychological moment in which we are fighting for the sake of humanity with the purpose of establishing an enduring and everlasting peace. President Wilson has said that no peace can last or ought to last which does not recognize and accept that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed; that no right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property; that the world can be at peace only if its life is stable; and that there can be no stability where the will is in rebellion, where there is no tranquillity of spirit and a sense of justice, of freedom, and of right. No nation, adds the President, should seek to extend its polity over any other nation or people, but that every people should be let free to determine its own polity, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful. Porto Rico, as a small country under the American flag, is entitled to the benefit of these great principles to the same extent that any of the small foreign countries whose liberties have been advocated by the whole American Nation.

The island of Porto Rico has been placed under a very peculiar situation. Our status under the American sovereignty never has been definitely settled, and we know as much about our future destiny as we know about the past. On the 25th of July, 1899, the American Army, under the command of Gen. Nelson A. Miles, landed in Porto Rico and several months after took possession of the whole island. On this occasion Gen. Miles said:

> In the prosecution of the war against the Kingdom of Spain by the people of the United States in the cause of liberty, justice, and humanity its military forces have come to occupy the island of Porto Rico. They come bearing the banner of freedom, inspired by a noble purpose, to seek the enemies of our country and yours and to destroy or capture all who are in armed resistance. They bring you the fostering arms of a nation of free people, whose greatest power is in its justice and humanity to all those living within its fold.

The military occupation of the island ceased when, in the year 1900, Congress approved a law to "Provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico."

Section 7 of this law reads as follows:

> That all inhabitants continuing to reside therein who were Spanish subjects on the 11th day of April, 1899, and then resided in Porto Rico, and their children born subsequent thereto, shall be deemed and held to be citizens of Porto Rico, and as such entitled to the protection of the United States, except such as shall have elected to preserve their allegiance to the Crown of Spain on or before the 11th day of April, 1900, in accordance with the provisions of the treaty of peace between the United States and Spain entered into on the 11th day of April, 1899; and they, together with such citizens of the United States as may reside in Porto Rico, shall constitute a body politic under the name of the people of Porto Rico, with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred, and with power to sue and be sued as such.

Congress at that time did not think proper to grant American citizenship to the Porto Ricans and created a body politic under the name of the people of Porto Rico, to be composed of Porto Rican citizens and American citizens residing therein. The approval of this law brought about many important questions with regards to our political status. Then came the theory established by the Supreme Court of the United States classifying the Territories into incorporated and unincorporated, incorporated Territories being those which have become part of the United States proper, and not merely a part of its domain, and which are entitled to the benefits of the Constitution, and which are held to be as much a part of the United States as are the States of the Union; and unincorporated Territories being those which have not been made part of the United States and to which Federal legislation does not uniformly extend. Porto Rico has been classified as an unincorporated territory.

In the case of Downes v. Bidwell (182 U. S., 287) the court says:

> We are therefore of the opinion that the island of Porto Rico is a Territory appurtenant and belonging to the United States, but not a part of the United States within the revenue clauses of the Constitution.

Mr. Justice White, with whom concurred Mr. Justice Shiras and Mr. Justice McKenna uniting in the judgment of affirmance, says:

> It is then, as I think, indubitably settled by the principles of the law of nations, by the nature of the Government created under the Constitution, by the express and implied powers conferred upon that Government by the Constitution, by the mode in which those powers have been executed from the beginning, and by an unbroken line of decisions of this court, first announced by Marshall and followed and lucidly expounded by Taney, that the treaty-making power can not incorporate territory into the United States without the express or implied assent of Congress, that it may insert in a treaty conditions against immediate incorporation, and that, on the other hand, when it has expressed in the treaty the conditions favorable to incorporation, they will, if the treaty be not repudiated by Congress, have the force of the law of the land, and therefore by the fulfillment of such conditions cause an incorporation to result. It must follow, therefore, that where a treaty contains no conditions for incorporation, and, above all, where it not only has no such conditions but expressly provides to the contrary, incorporation does not arise until in the wisdom of Congress it is deemed that the acquired territory has reached that state where it is proper that it should enter into and form a part of the American family. * * * And in addition, to the provisions of the act by which the duty here in question was imposed, taken as a whole, seem to me plainly to manifest the intention of Congress that for the present at least Porto Rico is not to be incorporated into the United States.
> The result of what has been said is that whilst in an international sense Porto Rico was not a foreign country, since it was subject to the sovereignty of and was owned by the United States, it was foreign to the United States in a domestic sense, because the island had not been incorporated into the United States, but was merely appurtenant thereto as a possession.

In Kopel v. Bingham (211 U. S., 468) it was held that Porto Rico is a completely organized Territory, but not a Territory incorporated into the United States. This doctrine was reaffirmed in the cases of American Railroad Co. of Porto Rico v. Didricksen (227 U. S., 145) and Porto Rico v. Rosali (227 U. S., 270, 274).

These are the most important decisions of the United States Supreme Court construing the act of April 12, 1900, "temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico," known as the Foraker Act. The Boston court of appeals, sustaining the same doctrine in a recent decision, says:

> Porto Rico is at least a possession, and through its organized government and under the organic act of April 12, 1900, has many of the essentials of these political entities known as Territories, but, notwithstanding that, the substantial fact remains that it is an insular piece of ground, with a considerable population, many miles at sea and widely separated from the States and Territories of the Government which is charged with the responsibility of seeing that there is a civil government in the island. Therefore, without much regard to the refinement of the question as to which it is, it is the fact that it is an insular possession or an insular territory, whichever it is, far removed from physical relations with other Territories and possessions, and with no physical relation to any of the States. * * *

The Foraker Act was practically repealed by the act of Congress approved on March 2, 1917, "to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes." By this act American citizenship was granted to the citizens of Porto Rico. The provisions of this organic act to this effect read as follows:

> That all citizens of Porto Rico, as defined by section 7 of the act of April 12, 1900, "temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," and all natives of Porto Rico who were temporarily absent from that island on April 11, 1899, and have since returned and are permanently residing in that island, and are not citizens of any foreign country, are hereby declared, and shall be deemed and held to be, citizens of the United States: Provided, That any person hereinbefore described may retain his present political status by making a declaration under oath of his decision to do so within six months of the taking effect of this act before the district court in the district in which he resides.

On the approval of this law the question of the political status of Porto Rico came again under discussion. Carlos Tapia was arrested charged with the crime of attempted murder. He applied for a writ of habeas corpus to the United States District Court for Porto Rico, alleging that Porto Rico being a Territory incorporated into the United States he could not be legally held for trial without the presentment or indictment of a grand jury. Tapia was represented by his lawyer, and the attorney general, an American who has the legal representation of the people of Porto Rico, appeared before the court, sustaining that the new organic law has shown a clear and affirmative intent not to incorporate Porto Rico as a Territory; and that the provisions, in connection with the granting of collective citizenship, that citizens of Porto Rico could retain their status as Porto Rican citizens and decline to accept American citizenship, makes the incorporation of Porto Rico as a Territory of the United States under the Jones Act impossible. The Federal court in an elaborate decision held that Porto Rico was incorporated into the United States by the new law. The Supreme Court of Porto Rico arrived to the same conclusion in a similar case. Both cases were brought to the consideration of the Supreme Court of the United States, and on January 17 and 21 of 1918 the Supreme Court reversed the judgments of the insular courts upon the authority of the cases decided in construction of the Foraker Act. No opinion was delivered in these cases.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DÁVILA. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. Then, as I understand your statement, under the act of Congress you are a citizen of the United States, the Porto Rican is a citizen of the United States, but under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States they decline to give you the constitutional right of a trial by jury or to defend against an indictment when no grand jury has been called?

Mr. DÁVILA. Yes, sir. That is the position we are in.

Mr. MASON. So that while you are a citizen of the United States, you have not the constitutional protection of a citizen of the United States?

Mr. DÁVILA. We have not the right in Porto Rico to be tried by a grand jury, because the Constitution of the United States, according to the Supreme Court, does not extend to Porto Rico.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DÁVILA. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Has the gentleman presented any bill so that Congress might legislate and recoup this error and do what I feel Congress intended to do originally?

Mr. DÁVILA. I will explain my view. My position is that the Congress of the United States must decide what the United States intends to do with the people of Porto Rico. We ought to know what our position is. I think we are entitled to know what will be the fate of the people of Porto Rico.

These decisions of the Supreme Court clearly show that the high tribunal considers the position of Porto Rico at present as it was under the Foraker Act, that no change has been operated in our status with the granting of the American citizenship to the citizens of Porto Rico, and that therefore we are yet an unincorporated territory. So, after 20 years of American domination, we have not been able to know what the Congress of the United States intends to do with us, and we are speculating about our future, some people advocating for independence, others for statehood, and others for self-government. We are not to be blamed for the different views that are striking our minds. It is not our fault. If there is any fault at all, that belongs exclusively to the doubtful position adopted by the Congress of the United States. According to the Supreme Court, we are an organized teritory, but not incorporated into the United States. The high tribunal has established a distinction between organization and incorporation. Our status, therefore, is extremely peculiar. Are we foreigners? No; because we are American citizens, and no citizen of the United States can be a foreigner within the boundaries of the Nation.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DÁVILA. Yes.

Mr. QUIN. Does the gentleman believe that the United States ever intended to make Porto Rico a part of the Union and place it in the position of a State?

Mr. DÁVILA. I do not know the intention of the United States, but I think the people of Porto Rico are entitled to know their fate. I think we are entitled to know your views, in order that our people may know what to expect of the American people and what course you are going to follow. [Applause.]

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DÁVILA. Yes.

Mr. CURRY of California. I think the American people did intend to make Porto Rico a part of the United States, as far as the Territory is concerned, and I would suggest to the gentleman that in drawing up an organic act it would be well to follow along the lines of the act creating Alaska and the Sandwich Islands; and if he introduces such a bill in this House it would undoubtedly be passed by the Congress and signed by the President, and it would relieve the situation entirely.

Mr. DÁVILA. I see the point of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Porto Rico has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. DÁVILA. Yes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Would the gentleman desire 5 minutes or 10 minutes?

Mr. DÁVILA. I would be glad to have 10 minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Porto Rico is recognized for 10 minutes more.

Mr. DÁVILA. Are we a part of the Union? No; because we are an unincorporated Territory under the rulings of the Supreme Court. Can you find a proper definition for this organized and yet unincorporated Territory, for this piece of ground belonging to but not forming part of the United States? Under the ruling of the courts of justice we are neither a part nor a whole. We are nothing, and it seems to me, without criticizing the wisdom of this policy, that if we are not allowed to be a part of your organization we must be allowed to be a whole, with our own government and our own flag. [Applause.]

Our position is entirely different to that of the Philippine Islands. You have not granted to these people the American citizenship, and they have your promise, the solemn and reliable promise of the people of the United States of recognizing their independence in a reasonable period of time. They know what their future is; they see a definite solution as to the permanent status of their islands, and we are ignorant of our fate and placed blindfolded in the path of our destiny; and we are entitled to know what will be the fate of the people of Porto Rico. We are asking for a definite solution, and the Congress of the United States must satisfy our wishes as soon as possible, because the policy of the past is inconsistent with the American principles and with the views expounded by the great leaders of the Nation in the present crisis of the world.

The two great political parties of Porto Rico are divided in their views. The Republican Party claims for statehood and the Unionist Party, which is the majority party, claims for full self-government in the present and independence for the future. Now, if it is your intention to decide the future of Porto Rico without taking into consideration the opinion of the inhabitants of the island, you must express your views, to the end that the people of Porto Rico may know the course you are going to take and what to expect in regard to our future political welfare. In my judgment the fate of a country ought not be decided without a proper consultation with the people affected by the decision, in accordance with the right of self-determination, about which so much has been said. You may submit to a plebescite or referendum the question of our political status if you think that our country is entitled to express its opinion in a matter which has for us an extraordinary importance, because it carries with it the decision of our fate. I expect that the people of Porto Rico will not be deprived of this right, and I am sure that this Congress and this Nation will receive with the greatest respect the opinion of our country, very small in territorial extension and population, but as great in justice and humanity as the most powerful country on earth. [Applause.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DÁVILA. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. What is the public opinion in the island of Porto Rico? Do the people want to be made a State, or do they want to set up an independent government of their own?

Mr. DÁVILA. Opinion is divided. The Republican Party favors statehood. The Unionist Party, which is the majority party, demands self-government at the present and independence in the future, when the people of the United States will think that it is proper to grant independence to the people of Porto Rico. But really I can not say what is the opinion of a majority of the people of the island. I can not say whether a majority of the people is in favor of statehood or in favor of independence. It may be that statehood will carry, or it may be that independence will carry the country. I do not want to advance any opinion, although I presume the results.

Mr. KEARNS. Does the United States to-day exercise the same control over Porto Rico as it does over Alaska and the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. DÁVILA. There is this difference, that Alaska is a part of the United States, and we are not a part of the United States.

Mr. MASON. The Constitution is in Alaska.

Mr. DAVILA. The Constitution of the United States is in force in Alaska, and the Constitution of the United States is not in force in Porto Rico.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman state if he knows how many white people there are living in Porto Rico to-day?

Mr. DÁVILA. We have more white people than you have in the city of Washington—two-thirds white people and one-third negro people.

You may be sure that we will not take any steps in conflict with the American interest. We love this Nation, we love your institutions and your ideals, and know, that whatever would be the definite status of Porto Rico, whether statehood, independence, or self-government, we are forever united to your people by the ties of common affection which are more powerful and stronger than the ties of force.

There is a strong sentiment in favor of independence in the island. In spite of this, however, we have refrained ourselves from expressing this sentiment during the war, devoting our time entirely with all our resources to help the United States in the great struggle against the central empires. The American administration in Porto Rico seems not to understand our position and refuses to recognize the right of the natives to defend our ideals, believing that he who advocates for the entire liberty of his native country is a traitor to the United States. There is a great distinction between the Americans who live in this country and the Americans residing in Porto Rico. The people here, unselfish and humane, receive our views with sympathy, but the most part of the continental Americans residing in Porto Rico, thinking perhaps that every right granted to the native is a privilege lost by them, are enemies of our liberties and desire to keep control of the public affairs. The island of Porto Rico has always being loyal to the United States and in the present crisis the entire population, whether favoring statehood, independence, or self-government, has been so enthusiastic in behalf of our cause that I dare to say that no State of the Union has been more patriotic and loyal to the United States than the people of Porto Rico. [Applause.] The continental Americans there think that because we are American citizens we can not defend our independence without being guilty of the crime of treason. I want to quote the language of Mr. Barcelo, president of the Unionist Party, in a statement made by him to a reporter of the newspaper La Democracia. Relating to the meaning of the American citizenship in Porto Rico, Mr. Barcelo says:

> It has for us the same meaning that it has for a citizen of New York or of Kentucky. It means that we Porto Ricans are joined individually and collectively to the destiny of the American Nation; that it is our duty to respect its sovereignty and to glorify its flag through all its evolutions; to acknowledge and respect its authority in international life, and at all times and places to defend as our own the honor of the United States of America. It also implies our right to demand for ourselves all the consideration, all the respect, all the justice, and all the liberty which belong to an American citizen.

This is our duty while we are American citizens, but as we are not incorporated into the United States and the right of self-determination has not been taken away from us, it is not treason at all for a native of Porto Rico to defend the independence of his country. The American citizenship is for us a privilege of which we feel very proud, but I want to state here that if this Congress arrives at the conclusion that the independence of Porto Rico is the only practical solution in the interest of the Nation and of the island of Porto Rico, our people will be as loyal to the United States as they are at present, ready always to do their bit in favor of the American principles and of the American Nation. Our sentiments have not been understood by the Americans residing in the island. I am going to offer you an example of the attitude taken by the administration there. Some time ago a number of students of the University of Porto Rico sent a petition to the House of Representatives requesting the approval of a resolution asking independence for the people of Porto Rico.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DÁVILA. I should like to have five minutes more, because what I am going to say is very important.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. DÁVILA. The commissioner of education, Dr. Paul G. Miller, an American born in the State of Wisconsin, when informed of the attitude of the students, wrote the following letter to the dean of the university:

> CHARLES W. ST. JOHN,
> Dean University of Porto Rico, Rio Pedras, Porto Rico.
> MY DEAR MR. ST. JOHN: Sometime ago my attention was called to the fact that certain students of the university had sent a petition to the House of Representatives formally requesting that a certain resolution be changed so as to make a definite demand for the independence of Porto Rico.
> Since this request is made by persons who are American citizens, and at the time when the Nation is being exceedingly careful to scrutinize the loyalty of all its citizens, you are hereby directed to furnish me with a list of any members of the graduating class of the normal school who may desire to enter the teaching service. I shall not appoint or approve the nomination by school board of persons concerning whose loyalty to the United States of America there may be any doubt. Please let me have the list.

As you see, this American, born in the continent, thinks that it is a crime for a Porto Rican to defend the independence of his island, and, acting as the Kaiser of Germany, has destroyed the careers of the members of the graduating class who signed the petition. These young men have devoted the most precious time of their lives to their education, and when they expected to receive the reward of the efforts made in the school the commissioner of education asks for the list of their names, with the purpose of depriving the students of the right of serving their own country as school teachers. The punishment imposed by Dr. Miller upon these students is entirely unjustified. They have not done anything to deserve it. They have merely asked the insular legislature to send a petition to the Congress of the United States for the independence of their native country.

"Let me have the list," says Dr. Miller in his ukase to the dean of the university; and I should say that the proper thing to do is to send to the President a list with the name of Dr. Miller and all American officials who have acted in the same way, to the end that they be immediately removed from the positions they hold against the will of the Porto Rican people.

Dr. Miller has been strongly criticized for his undiplomatic attitude toward our people in the past, but in spite of this criticism I had considered him as a good commissioner of education. I am sorry that his present attitude compels me to change my mind. He has acted in this matter as a true autocrat, forgetting that there is a flag in Porto Rico which protects our rights, and that under its shade it is entirely impossible to sow the doctrines of kaiserism. He believes that because we are American citizens we have been deprived of the right to defend the liberty of our country, and I think that a man who does not believe in freedom and justice and who does not advocate the independence of his country is utterly unfit to be an American citizen. In this connection I want to quote the remarks of Senator VARDAMAN when the Senate was discussing our present organic law. On that occasion Senator VARDAMAN said:

> There were some eloquent statements made before the committee. One young man appeared before the committee, with whom I was greatly impressed, who pleaded for the independence of Porto Rico, for the right to govern their own country, for the sanctity of their home that had been invaded and the sovereignty over which had been taken from them; but, recognizing the fact which any well-informed man who understands the Anglo-Saxon disposition in dealing with subject Provinces will recognize, that independence is impossible, and since independence is not going to be given them the majority of them expressed a desire to come in under the terms of this bill.
> If the question of independence were submitted to them to choose between being a dependency of the United States or having their independence, I do not believe 1 per cent of them would vote to become a part of the United States. If they should do otherwise, they would prove themselves utterly unfit for citizenship in a free country, for a man who does not desire to be free and independent has not the elements in him essential to the making of a desirable citizen of this Republic.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is a crime to defend the independence of our native country, I confess myself guilty of such a crime, because I have that ideal in my heart, and if I sacrifice it for the present it is only for the welfare of my country and because of the confidence that I have in the justice and humanity of the people of the United States.

I want to present to you another example of the attitude of the administration in Porto Rico, or, rather, of some people connected with the Government. Some days ago the Navy censor in Washington received a copy of a message sent to a member of the British Parliament by the Porto Rican Independence Association. This copy was forwarded to Washington by the wireless station of Porto Rico, and reads as follows:

> From: Radio, San Juan.
> To: Nav. cen., Washington.
> Referred from San Juan, P. R., January 24, to Sir James Brown Chavez, member British Parliament, London, England:
> "Porto Ricans wishing independence being great majority in this country agreed in mass meeting to cable you our gratitude for your noble petition to Premier Lloyd George to consent to the right that assists Porto Rico in accordance with the principle maintained by the great Wilson to have a place among the free countries of the world."
> (Signed) PORTO RICAN INDEPENDENCE ASSOCIATION.
> By V. M. ALCARAZ.

This is the message received by the Navy censor, but as a corollary to it comes a report from the radio station, which reads as follows:

Alcaraz is the secretary of this association which has wide membership in Porto Rico and which is spreading revolutionary propaganda and is active in creating anti-American feeling among Porto Ricans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to emphatically deny that there is any kind of revolutionary propaganda in the island. Porto Rico is the most peaceable country in the world. We have never had a revolution in our country, even in the times of the Spanish Government under which we suffered so many injustices. We need not appeal to violence or disorder to defend our ideals, because under the American institution all changes in the system of government can be brought about in an orderly and lawful way. I have not any information about this association which has just come into existence, but if either Mr. Alcaraz or his associates try to create anti-American feeling among Porto Ricans they will lose their time, because the people of Porto Rico have sufficient common sense to reject any suggestion which is calculated to create antagonism between Americans and Porto Ricans, between this Nation and our people, whose love to this country is beyond question.

If there is any Porto Rican capable to entertain any anti-American feeling, leave him alone with all the responsibility of his acts, because he who hates this Nation does not love his own country, does not work for our welfare, since our happiness largely depends on the cordial relations and mutual understanding between the two countries, and does not deserve either the respect of Porto Rico or of the American Nation. It would be an ingratitude on our part to sanction with our approval a policy of hate and discontent against the American people, and the natives of Porto Rico are not ungrateful. Our loyalty to this Nation is a sufficient answer to this report, which has the sinister purpose of casting suspicion upon the people of Porto Rico.

I sent a cable to Mr. Barcelo, president of our senate, asking information about this association, and in reply he says that there does not exist in Porto Rico any anti-American feeling.

The report from the radio station says that this Independence Association has a wide membership in the island. This statement is entirely untrue. Although the sentiment for independence in Porto Rico is strong, no political association outside of the political parties has wide membership in the country, and neither the Republican Party, which is fighting for statehood, nor the majority party, which is fighting for complete self-government at present and independence as a definite solution, will authorize any movement which may interfere with the friendly relations existing between the two countries or which may diminish the affection that the people of Porto Rico feel for the United States.

I do not indorse the attitude of this Independence Association in the message sent to a member of the British Parliament. We do not want to complicate our problem with international intervention. We realize that we do not need to appeal to France or to England or to any organized power in order to obtain liberties for our own country. The peace conference is a great tribunal, indeed, but there is no greater tribunal in the world for the adjustment of our rights than the American Congress, and it is here in this place, before the Representatives of the Nation, where we must come with our case, in the entire confidence that justice will be done to the people of Porto Rico. I am grateful to Sir James Brown Chavez for his petition in favor of our liberty, but my gratitude does not go so far as to encourage him in his efforts to obtain a place for Porto Rico among the free countries of the world. This is a matter which belongs exclusively to the American Congress, and the people of Porto Rico, with full confidence in your wisdom and straightforwardness, place in your hands the solution of their destiny.

I want to make a personal statement, expressing my own views, and although I am not sure of the indorsement of the political parties organized in the island, it seems to me that the majority of the people of Porto Rico will agree with my statement. If it is not your intention to make of Porto Rico a State of the Union, if you think as the Boston Court of Appeals that we are an insular piece of ground, with a considerable population, far removed from any physical relation with the States and Territories; if you think that on account of our differences in language, ethnology, and habits we can never form a part of the American federation; if we can not be a star in that glorious heaven of blue with its stripes of red and white; if we can not be a vital living part of the Nation we love and want to serve; if that concession can not be granted to us by the land that is always the friend of the helpless and small, then we must demand that the American people give us the freedom that is our God-given right. You have but two alternatives—statehood or independence. It is impossible to arrive at any other conclusion under the American Government. Here you have the Porto Rican flag [showing the flag] with only one star, made, by the way, by an American girl who has three brothers in the service in France. Were I to see this star forming part of the American constellation, with the same dignity and greatness as the 48 stars of the American States, I would feel very proud in considering my island a part of the Union. [Applause.] But if this star can not be associated to yours in this beautiful and glorious emblem [pointing to the American flag], then leave it alone in the Porto Rican flag and let me love my own emblem with the same pride that you love your Star-Spangled Banner. I hoist it on the floor of the House before the representatives of the American people. And when it will be raised on the public buildings of Porto Rico this flag will have for us the honor and privilege of having been hoisted for the first time in the American Congress, which is the highest peak of human justice. Quoting the language of Representative MASON, I should say that the American flag is the most beautiful emblem in the world, but that it will never look so beautiful as the day in which it comes down to make room in the Porto Rican sky for the Porto Rican flag. If that day comes I am sure that our relations will be still more friendly than they are to-day. The American flag may come down from our public buildings, but it will live forever in our hearts, and it will have our affection and devotion, because we need and want to live under your protection, and for this and for your sense of justice you are enttled to our love and gratitude. [Applause.]

As Mr. MASON said in his speech on the floor of this House on January 17, the great hindrance to civilization has been the ungodly desire of one man to govern another man without his consent, the ungodly desire of one people to govern another people without their consent. If you want to follow these principles and give full recognition to the right of self-determination, you must consult the people of Porto Rico before adopting any definite solution; but if you think that this consultation will not be of value at all and that on account of the conditions I have stated the concession of statehood is impracticable, although it may be asked by a portion of the people of Porto Rico, then the only practical solution is the ultimate independence of the island, granting in the meantime full self-government powers to the people of Porto Rico. [Applause.]

Under the authority granted me to extend my remarks I want to print in the RECORD the following article of the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of New York of January 29, 1919:

WHERE DOES PORTO RICO STAND IN UNITED STATES?—ISLANDERS PROTEST BEING TREATED AS FOREIGNERS—CLAIM THEY HAVE BEEN TREATED AS ALIENS UNDER THE WAR REGULATIONS AND WANT THEIR RIGHTS AS AMERICANS DEFINED.

"Is Porto Rico a part of the United States? Such is the issue being raised by many of the inhabitants, as well as Americans interested in trading with the islanders, and a survey of the situation appears to leave considerable basis for complaint on the part of the territorials. One of the plainest spoken champions of the island is Salvador Ferrer, of this city, who feels that the American Government is playing an especially double-faced part toward Porto Rico.

"Now that the political rights of small peoples are being so freely discussed, it is quite petrinent to examine the case of Porto Rico," he said.

"What is the political status of Porto Rico after 20 years of American domination? Is the island a part of the United States; good enough United States territory to apply to it our tariff, income tax, and navigation laws, and all the very important laws enacted by the Congress during the recent European war, or foreign territory whenever official Washington so chooses to rule?

"Let us look into the treatment that is being accorded to Porto Rico, two decades after we wrested it from Spain. The following are some facts about a few of the recent regulations in our relations with Porto Rico, borne patiently during the fighting in Europe, but which should call forth energetic protest now that hostilities have ceased:

"The food-conservation law is in force in Porto Rico, but when, faced by a 'bone-dry' prohibition law that went into effect last March, Porto Rico tried to send here distilled spirits imported or manufactured before September 8, 1917 (just as Boston or Chicago might have done), and the Attorney General of the United States gave us a sample of legislation by administrative interpretation, ruling that Porto Rico was to be considered foreign in this instance, and shipments were not allowed to be made.

"Censorship of mails, cables, etc., between the United States and foreign countries was established by virtue of the trading-with-the-enemy act. In other words, under the assumed authority of a law Porto Rico has been treated, as regards cable censorship, precisely as if it were a foreign country. This unjust procedure compels the use of a few general cable codes and means an increase of four or five times the prewar cost of cabling, which is at the enormous rate of 50 cents per word. It would be idle to attempt to estimate the heavy losses occasioned by the long delays, amounting sometimes to one and two weeks in the receipt of cables, as well as by the absolute nondelivery of many messages sent from here and from Porto Rico, even from a loyal and respectable American house to another. And when complaint about it has been made, a curt answer that 'no information is available' is all that has been vouchsafed; and senders lose the cost of transmitting a message never put on the cables.

"In the meantime cable letters from Cuba, not a possession of the United States, costing only about 4 cents a word from Habana and about 8 cents a word from other places, have frequently come through in less than 24 hours, simply because they were given immediate attention, whilst Porto Rico messages, being in code, had to wait days, until it was found convenient to decode them.

"Furthermore, during the entire war there has been no restriction to telegraphic or postal correspondence with the Dominion of Canada, and even messages by wire about sailings of ships from here and from Canada, with names, dates, destination, etc., passed freely, not excepting the period of the piratical Hun visitation of undersea boats last summer. Can we be expected to believe that Congress intended that Porto Rico should be treated as foreign soil and Canada domestic in these matters?

"The War Department's reports show that when the armistice was signed Porto Rico troops were in the fighting line with those from Florida, South and North Carolina, yet in the casualty list of our Army abroad, classified with those from British West Indies, Canada, England, France, Italy, etc., we read: 'Men of foreign countries—Porto Rico: Sergt. Santiago Cintron, Cayey, died of wounds.'

"The consumption of refined sugar in Porto Rico has not yet warranted the heavy investment in a sugar refinery, hence they must bring the refined product from here. Nevertheless, several weeks ago, when removing all restrictions in the sale of refined sugar to manufacturers here, the Food Administration specifically excepted Porto Rico.

"What is to be the answer to these questions? That human nature will continue to be the same everywhere? That the strong will continue to take advantage of the weak? Unless our officials promptly adopt a very different attitude toward the people of Porto Rico, forgetting that we are big and they are small, there can not exist much faith in our oft-expressed solicitude for the preservation of the political rights of humanity."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CRAGO] to use some of his time.

Mr. CRAGO. I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY].

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman is granted.

Mr. HERSEY. Mr. Chairman, during the closing days of the Sixty-fifth Congress both Houses are working day and night under the administration whip to put through the great appropriation bills for the support and maintenance of the Government, the building up of the greatest Navy in the world, the preparation for a great standing Army of 500,000 men.

In addition to this, there is proposed the enactment of many laws to provide for the Government control of the railroads, telegraph and telephone lines, as well as Government ownership of everything in general. There is pressed for consideration with great haste, to avoid a special session, bills appropriating vast sums of money for world charity; and on the heels of this come from nearly every department a multitude of schemes, plans, and projects purporting to be in the interest of the returning soldiers.

One department has a scheme involving billions of dollars for buying up the swamp lands of the South and the arid desert lands of the West, to drain the one and to irrigate the other, and out of them to create farms and build houses and barns, as well as provide farm machinery, and then mortgage and turn these all over to the returning soldier—who never farmed in his life—as a reward for his services in France.

Another scheme would build highways across the Nation at great expense of labor and materials in order to give employment to the soldiers, who do not care to work upon the highways. Others would meet the returning soldiers with a little purse of the Government of some six months' pay and build a triumphant arch at the Capitol and allow them to keep and wear the old clothes they wore in the trenches.

Those of us who have talked with the soldiers who have returned from France and the battle fields and who have seen real service there understand at once that he does not ask for nor desire the charity of the Government; he does not ask nor expect the treatment accorded a pauper or a mendicant. He wants no farms or rewards because he fought for his country and his flag, but he does desire, and he demands at the hands of the Congress, justice for the wrongs that have been heaped upon him during the past war. I say wrongs, for the greater portion of the soldiers and officers of the National Guard in the American Expeditionary Force in Europe that went upon the battle fields and through the hell of battle and won the world war have been wronged more than any other soldier since the days of Rome.

Those of you who listened to or read the speeches of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] made upon the floor of the House on January 13 and February 1 must have been stirred to the quick by his eloquent recital of the wrongs done by the War Department to the officers of the National Guard, and especially to those who belonged to the Twenty-sixth Division, from New England. And what was true of New England was true of the whole Nation. The wrongs committed against the Twenty-sixth Division have been committed against all the officers of the National Guard that won immortal and imperishable glory for American arms.

I want for a few minutes to call your attention further to this great injustice by way of supplement to the eloquent speeches of the gentleman from Massachusetts. When the armistice was signed November 11, 1918, we had in France under arms something over 2,000,000 men. About one-half of these, or more than a million, were on the fighting line in the trenches and on the battle fields contesting every inch of ground of the enemy. The other million was in reserve. They had never been in the fight and were waiting to be called, but the call never came. The million men who were in the fight and in the great battles that commenced in June, 1918, and continued until November were made up largely of the National Guard units of the Nation. In direct command on the field of battle, without scarcely an exception, were the officers of the National Guard. They had been educated in the National Guard organizations of their own States, served in the Spanish-American War, and had seen service also on the Mexican border, and were prepared when the call came from Gen. Pershing: "For God's sake, send us men!"

Among the million men in reserve of the American Expeditionary Forces were another class of officers called the "Regulars." They had been educated at West Point and in training camps and military schools of the Nation. They had never seen real war service. They had had no experience in battle and they did not desire any real service. They had secured through influence noncombative positions in the commissary and other departments of the service, where they would be safe in place and position, where they could only be exposed to danger in case there arose such an emergency as would call out every resource. They were diligent and faithful in watching the progress of our fighting troops. Day after day they closely watched those brave boys "on the fighting line" push back the Huns toward the Rhine. They knew long before the people of this Nation knew that the war had been won. They knew along in the first days of November that there was to be very shortly an armistice and that the war was about to close, when suddenly there came a radical change of officers all along the line.

Officers of the National Guard, from generals down to lieutenants, were demoted and removed from their commands only a few days before the armistice was signed. They were sent back far in the rear to Blois, a town called the "canning factory," in France, and their places were filled by these "Regulars," who had never seen real service, whose motto was "Safety first," and who had received commissions not for service but by reason of a pull. They, of course, wanted the position after the battle had been fought, and obtained it that they might return at the head of the victorious troops to this country and be received under triumphant arches as the heroes of the war, leading and commanding the boys who had won these battles under the leadership of the National Guard officers, who had now been demoted, discharged, and disgraced.

The war correspondent of the Washington Post, George Rothwell Brown, one of the most reliable correspondents of a great daily, in the issue of January 27, 1919, explains this great injustice to the officers of the National Guard in the following language:

In the little town of Blois, halfway between Bordeaux and Paris, in one of the loveliest parts of France, is the "canning factory" of the American Expeditionary Forces, the place of heartaches and tears.

They don't "can" tomato soup here, but officers of the overseas army who have been tried and found wanting. A large percentage of the 100,000 American officers in the Expeditionary Forces, considering that we had not been long in the war, passed through the ordeal prepared for them at this place and came out broken, sullen, and sometimes resentful.

It was here that the system was operated whereby the Army was rid of officers who had not made good or who were charged with not having made good. While the war was on there was no more dreaded place than this in all France, no more bitter fate for officers at the front or in important posts in the "S. O. S." than to be "ordered down to Blois."

It was through this place that the National Guard officers, who were relieved of their commands, were obliged to pass. It is a place of hated memory.

* * * * * * *

Courageous men who led their soldiers in battle against the Huns have emerged from this inquisitorial chamber shattered wrecks, in tears, crushed, humiliated, and broken in spirit. Others have come out like roaring lions, swearing vengeance.

Officers who were ordered before the board of Blois and who were found incompetent and recommended for discharge were discharged in France, and returned to the United States without any military status. When they stepped foot in America they were not soldiers, but civilians. This was cleverly conceived, to prevent these officers from having their cases reopened, through political influence or otherwise, in Washington. This is one reason why the "canning factory" system has been so effectually bottled up. It has been frankly admitted to me that some officers—the kind who might show fight—were deliberately kept in France, although not needed there, to prevent them from "starting something" prematurely.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. I can not yield at present.

Mr. Chairman, the many officers of the National Guard who were removed under these peculiar circumstances were dumbfounded and amazed by this strange treatment. The minor officers were disregarded and discharged and allowed to find their way home as best they could with scars and wounds and broken bodies, and, worse than all, disgraced and humiliated.

A few of the higher officers in the ranks demanded to know the reasons for their removal, and some of them were given what purported to be the reasons for their discharge. The charges were all the same, from the generals down, as follows:

1. His qualifications as a soldier are poor.
2. Lack of force and aggressiveness.
3. He permitted the members of his regiment to fraternize with the enemy.
4. It is not known that he ever performed any military service well.

Gen. Cole, of Massachusetts, of the National Guard, was demoted with the rest. He was a man of great political influence in his State and Nation. He had recently been candidate for governor in his own State and had many powerful friends at court. He was able to get his record up to Gen. Pershing, and the general at once wrote the following decision:

FRANCE, November 30, 1918.

From: Adjutant General, American Expeditionary Forces.
To: Brig. Gen. Charles H. Cole, Center of Information, American Post Office 714, American Expeditionary Forces.
Subject: Relief from Fifty-second Infantry Brigade.

1. I am directed by the commander in chief to inform you that upon his personal examination of the papers representing the facts incident to your relief from command of the Fifty-second Brigade, he is of the opinion that the facts did not warrant your relief, and that you be reinstated to your former brigade.
2. Accordingly orders will be issued in the near future.
By command of Gen. Pershing.

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Adjutant General.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, in due consideration of the House, I do not feel that the gentleman is discussing any issue before the House or any part of this bill, and I therefore make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under general debate the gentleman is not required to discuss the bill.

Mr. LARSEN. I did not understand that the rule so provided.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that it does.

Mr. LARSEN. If the rules of the House so provide——

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. LARSEN. Does the Chair rule that the rules so provide?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the gentleman from Maine will proceed.

Mr. HERSEY. The minor National Guard officers were disgraced and discharged and allowed to find their way home as best they could. Many thousands of the officers of the National Guard who had been demoted and discharged at the close of the war found it was impossible to get their appeals to Gen. Pershing. Gen. Leonard Wood, a prominent officer of the National Guard, had long before this returned to this country to give place, as his friends believe, to an officer of the Regular Army in France. Gen. Edwards, a brave and most efficient officer of the National Guard, in command of the Twenty-sixth Division, had been removed after he had been through all the battles and he has returned to his home in New England. Col. Logan, who commanded the One hundred and fourth United States Infantry, and Col. Hume, who was in command of the One hundred and third United States Infantry, bold splendid soldiers and efficient officers of the National Guard, and who had led their men successfully through all the battles, were removed a few days before the signing of the armistice and sent to the "canning factory" at Blois, and there they were not able to get their record up to Gen. Pershing for review.

I desire at this time to call your attention to the case of one National Guard officer who was removed and demoted on the 6th day of November last, the armistice being signed on the 11th. This case is not much different from the rest; and while I speak of him more particularly, as he is my neighbor and friend and I know about his life and his work, I am speaking for the thousands of other officers who have been demoted and disgraced under the same circumstances.

Col. Frank M. Hume, of my home town, is in the prime of life, well educated, earnest, aggressive, honest, brave, every inch a soldier. For 25 years he was an officer of the National Guard of my State. In 1898 he was in command of the First Maine Heavy Battery in Cuba in the War with Spain, was recommended as captain of the United States Volunteers for service in the Philippine Islands after the War with Spain, but was unable to go on account of sickness.

From July 4 to October 20, 1916, he was colonel of his regiment, located on the Mexican border on a front of 100 miles, and made there a splendid record, as appears in the reports of his superior officers.

April 15, 1917, a few days after we declared war against Germany, his regiment was called to guard railways and bridges, tunnels, and terminals in the State of Maine, where he performed valuable service until August, 1917, when he was placed in command of the One hundred and third United States Infantry, made up of New England men, largely of the National Guard, and went overseas and to the front, where from June until November 6 of last year he was constantly on the battle line, gassed and wounded, but persisted in remaining at the head of his command, leading his soldiers through every battle, his record all these times being marked "excellent," and three times he was recommended for promotion to the rank of brigadier general by his commanding officers.

I will not encumber the RECORD by the many honors that he has received from his superior officers during these battles, but I wish to insert in the RECORD this one general order:

HEADQUARTERS, June 18, 1918.

On June 16 a strong detachment of 600 Germans, previously selected, reinforced by units from an assault battalion, attacked at daylight the front line of the Twenty-sixth American Division at Xivray and Seicheprey. The enemy was everywhere thrown back by immediate counterattacks, leaving numerous dead on the terrain and 10 prisoners, including one officer.

This brilliant action does the greatest honor to the Twenty-sixth Division, and particularly to the One hundred and third Regiment, Col. Hume, commanding.

This operation shows the unquestionable superiority of the American soldier over the German soldier. It also gives an idea of all that may be expected of these magnificent troops when the entente, in its turn, takes the offensive.

Gen. PASSAGA,
Commanding the Thirty-second Army Corps.

Official:
Agd. MANGIN,
The Chief of Staff.

To be read to companies.

On November 6, when the battles had all been won and everyone was rejoicing that peace had come, Col. Hume was suddenly removed from his command by these foolish and senseless charges filed by a regular officer who had never met him, an officer who had been to the front less than 24 hours, who had seen no service and knew nothing about the charges that he filed, except that they were the "usual ones."

Gen. Pershing has found these charges unfounded and he has restored Col. Hume to his command, and he will return home with the boys that love him and trust him and honor him. He will return to a people that believe in him and who will see to it that every wrong against his record is righted.

That this injustice to the National Guard officers of our armies might be without a parallel when they were removed an order was at once issued that there should be no more promotions, so as to deprive the National Guard officers who had been removed from being promoted by reason of the record they made on the battle field.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSEY. No; I can not yield at the present time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HERSEY. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] has called the attention of the House to these things in two splendid speeches. He told the truth. No Republican could have presented the matter before this House without being accused of politics. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts. He has performed a great service to his party and to his country. Neither I nor any other Republican could get the papers and records up to Gen. Pershing. The remarks of Mr. GALLIVAN in this House on these two occasions have resulted in the sending of the papers in many cases up to Gen. Pershing; and so Col. Logan, Mr. GALLIVAN's neighbor and friend, has been reinstated. Gen. Edwards has been reinstated. My friend, Col. Hume, has now been reinstated; but there are thousands of officers who have left the "canning factory" and returned home in disgrace because they would not wait; and the papers can not go up to Gen. Pershing unless the Congress takes the matter in hand.

The people of this country demanded that such an unjust order be changed, and it was changed by the Secretary of War in this way, that promotions could be made hereafter, but such promotions should not be made "merely as a reward for past services."

Another order has been made that no soldier returning from France should be allowed to wear his medals given him by a foreign power; and so these National Guard officers returning from France, broken in spirit, wounded, gassed, disgraced, with medals given them by France for bravery on the battle field, can not wear them here. They can not be promoted, because there will be no more promotion "merely as a reward for past services."

I wish to say this in conclusion: I plead for the boys over there in the Twenty-sixth Division and for the boys of the National Guard all over the United States that keenly feel the disgrace and humiliation that has come to our Armies by having the National Guard officers demoted and relieved of their commands without cause. I am pleading to Congress to right this awful wrong. There are thousands and tens of thousands of the brave boys from the National Guard "over there," dead on "Flanders Field." Their silent and voiceless lips are pleading to you to right this great wrong. Every grave is calling to us:

Take up our quarrel with the foe!
To you from failing hands we throw
The torch; be yours to hold it high.
If you break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep, though poppies grow,
In Flanders fields.

[Applause.]

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. OLNEY].

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman and Members of the House, in these days of caustic criticism, when we are criticizing even the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, the War Department, the War Risk Insurance Bureau, it is time to contemplate that there is one subject upon which we can all agree. We all place our stamp of approval upon the humanitarian work of the American Red Cross Association. [Applause.] I am going to ask the patience and indulgence of the House—and I wish there were more Members present—while I diverge from the topic under discussion and give you some facts which were given to me through the courtesy of Mr. Fitzgerald, of the American Red Cross Association.

When Mabel Boardman was before our Military Affairs Committee early in 1916 she announced that there were 27,000 members only in the American Red Cross Association, and she pointed out to us at that time—March, 1916—that Great Britain had 750,000 members in its Red Cross Association; Austria, about 1,000,000; Germany, 900,000; and even Japan with a membership of 1,000,000. An appeal was made to the United States to increase the membership to a million, and the drive was then and there begun. The membership of the Red Cross to-day, according to the latest returns, is approximately 20,000,000 loyal Americans, not including several million school children, members of the junior organization.

I recall that three years ago I became a life member in this association by paying $25. I invite all Members of the House to become life members of the American Red Cross Association.

The personnel of the Red Cross shows that there are about 17,000 persons employed in national, divisional, and foreign headquarters, of which about 13,000 are paid workers and 4,000 volunteer; and of the total number, about 9,000 were engaged in Red Cross service overseas. These figures do not include the great army of volunteer women workers employed in Red Cross chapter rooms throughout the country during the war; their number has been estimated at 8,000,000.

From the beginning of the world war the American Red Cross extended relief, but participation in war activities in a big way dates from May 10, 1917. When President Wilson appointed a Red Cross war council of seven members, headed by Henry P. Davison, of New York, to direct the relief work, the council's first task was to secure an adequate war fund, and the week beginning June 18 and ending June 25 was set aside by the Red Cross for the collecting of the $100,000,000 war fund, which was oversubscribed by $12,000,000. A Christmas membership drive in December of that year netted $24,500,000 and a second war fund of $100,000,000, asked in May, 1918, was oversubscribed by $76,000,000.

The Red Cross mission sailed for France June 2, 1917, and the relief work among those who had been holding back the German hordes for so long was organized and the groundwork laid for helping the American soldiers soon to be pouring across the Atlantic. In this country men and women from all walks of life volunteered for Red Cross work of all kinds, from knitting garments for the soldiers to nursing at the front.

Great camps and cantonments were springing up throughout the United States, and in all of these, as soon as mobilization began, the Red Cross was at work ministering to the wants of the soldiers. It is conservatively estimated that while America was engaged in the war, about a year and a half, 10,000,000 Americans were knitting various kinds of articles for the soldiers and sailors; that about a year's supply of the American wool market was consumed, or about 130,000,000 pounds of wool. And it is further estimated that the gratuity furnished by American men and women for the prosecution of the war, and materials furnished, amounted to $2,500,000,000. As America's participation in the war increased the field organization of the American Red Cross, its work expanded in proportion, as may be judged from the fact that in France alone over $22,000,000 was expended by July 1 last, not including $13,000,000 of supplies then on hand for future use, while over $25,000,000 was appropriated for the ensuing six months. But the work was by no means confined to France, for expenditures and appropriations up to January 1, 1919, in other countries were as follows: Italy, about $17,000,000; England, $11,000,000; Belgium, $3,400,000; Switzerland, $2,300,000; Russia and Siberia, $8,500,000; Serbia, Greece, Roumania, and Palestine, about $10,000,000. The American Red Cross campaign to enlist nurses, which has entailed expenditures and appropriations of $2,400,000, is one of the brightest chapters in the history of the organization's war work. Up to October 1, 1918, 30,000 nurses were enrolled in the Army and Naval Nurse Corps Reserves, of which over 17,000 are caring for soldiers and sailors. Among the Red Cross activities that have proven of the utmost value in maintaining the morale of both the soldiers and their families are those of the bureau of communication and home service. Through the bureau of communication 20,000 families have been kept in weekly communication with relatives overseas and at least 10,000 weekly have been kept informed of the condition and whereabouts of soldiers while in this country. [Applause.]

The work increased greatly with the signing of the armistice, the number of letters handled weekly by the bureau reaching almost 100,000 at the present time. Through this bureau also was carried on correspondence with the American prisoners in Germany.

More than $6,000,000 has been spent or appropriated for camp service, whereby several hundred canteens have been established in camps, on railway lines, and at embarkation points, in addition to numerous other means of providing comforts for the soldiers, over 50,000 women volunteers being engaged in this work alone. In conjunction with this work, the department of military relief of the Red Cross rendered signal service when the influenza epidemic hit the great Army camps and cantonments last fall, providing medical and other supplies. The important services rendered by the American Red Cross in that emergency has been officially recognized as having saved the lives of many men. Throughout the country, since the United States entered the war, there have been formed units of women volunteer motor corps, composed of public-spirited women owning or able to drive automobiles, who have performed noteworthy service of many kinds. At all hours of the day and night they have cheerfully responded to calls, transporting sick and wounded and Red Cross workers in ambulances and in their own machines.

To-day the war work of the American Red Cross is far from complete, although hostilities have long ceased. Until demobilization is complete the organization will continue to minister to American soldiers and sailors, at home and abroad. Nor is this all, for it has played an active part in reestablishing the soldier in life, assisting in the reconstruction of the maimed, the reeducation and suitable callings for those whose injuries unfit them to take up their old vocations.

Maj. Gen. M. W. Ireland, Surgeon General, United States Army, says that victory in the great world war was largely due to the American Red Cross Association.

The American Red Cross knows no creed, color, or race, and all loyal Americans are eligible to membership. Miss Clara Barton, a native of Massachusetts, Red Cross nurse during the Civil War, administered to the sick, suffering, and wounded on both sides, and she became the first president, prior to an act in 1882 through the United States Senate which ratified the Red Cross Society and gave official status to the American association.

Our association has been asked to become guardian of the 100,000 Russian prisoners still in Germany, and it has cheerfully accepted the task imposed upon it. Red Cross activities and assistance were continued effectively in civilian disaster during the world war.

From national headquarters there were distributed $125,000 for the Halifax disaster, $100,000 for Minnesota forest fire sufferers, $500,000 for the influenza epidemic, and a half million dollars more for other exigencies.

In these days of criticism it is most gratifying to observe, and we can all agree, that the machinery of the American Red Cross is well oiled and is running smoothly and without a hitch night and day. We can not pay too high a tribute to the Red Cross for what it has done, is doing to-day, and in its plans for the future.

Fair and just criticism of the usual peace-time methods of the War Department impelled it to summon to its assistance many of the big business men of the Nation, including Baruch, Schwab, Eidlitz, Hurley, Taft, Hughes, Thorne, and others too numerous to mention.

The dilatoriness in settling allotment cases has been corrected to a remarkable degree under the able supervision of Col. Henry D. Lindsley, Chief of the War Risk Bureau. When will the daily publication of our casualty list come to an end, is a question often put. I submitted such a query to the Secretary of War a month ago and he then said, "About two days longer." The lists have been published ever since and the end is not yet in sight, some days with a column of names and other days nearly or a full page in the daily newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska to yield me a little more time.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. OLNEY. It is needless to say that I shall support the Army appropriation bill providing for an Army of 29,579 officers and about 510,000 enlisted men, which seems necessary during the period of demobilization, which legislation is temporary, and which provides for a Regular Army of 250,000 and 250,000 under the volunteer system, with optional enlistments of from one to three years.

Continuation of the increased war pay for enlisted men and provision for the promotion of officers and men for meritorious conduct recommended for such before the signing of the armistice are important features in this bill which should meet with the unanimous approval of the Members. I can not conclude my remarks without referring to the splendid heroism and gallantry of the New England division known as the Twenty-sixth, which distinguished itself in most of the important battles of the great war in the spring, summer, and autumn of 1918; and the names of Maj. Gen. Edwards, Brig. Gens. Cole and Sherburne, and Col. Logan are officers whose names are household words throughout New England; and while this division will return to America with regiments sadly depleted, companies skeletonized, the people of New England are looking forward to the day when the fighting Twenty-sixth will disembark in Boston Harbor.

For the information of the New England Members who may be present, I may say that proceedings have been started to bring the Twenty-sixth Division back to New England. There are three processes. The first starts from the point where the soldiers are. Then there is the order of priority, and then there is the convoy from the port of embarkation. The first procedure might be classed as preparation, and the Twenty-sixth Division has already begun preparations to leave France, and should land in New England or in New York at the port of disembarkation within two months.

The whole Nation is clamoring for the immediate return of our boys in France, and let us hope they will be allowed to come back as expeditiously as possible and in conformity to the status of the world peace.

Our committee builded wisely in providing for an Army of 550,000 officers and men, so that a sufficiently large force can exchange places with our soldiers who have borne the brunt of the fighting since the United States became an active participant in the great conflict.

I do not believe that we will get so many men to volunteer as we provide for in this bill, but I am entirely satisfied myself with an Army of practically skeleton strength, an Army of 150,000 men, as I see a chance in a small Regular Army to secure for this country some day universal military training of which I have been an advocate for three years in this House.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has three minutes left.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have heard it said, and it has been carefully estimated, that it costs to run Congress $20 a minute, and in order to save the time of this Congress I am going to yield back $60 to the chairman of the committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HUMPHREYS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior years, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER].

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take any of the time of the committee in the consideration of this bill, but some questions and points have been raised that I thought I would like to express my views upon. I have been upon this committee now for four years, and it is interesting to recall that the first appropriation bill I helped frame four years ago carried $100,000,000. The appropriation of two years ago, before we entered into the war, had increased to $267,000,000. Those were both peace-time appropriations, showing the tendency to increased appropriations for the Army, even in time of peace. Now we are coming before this Congress and asking for a peace-time appropriation of $1,100,000,000. There is no contention, nor was it stated to your committee, that this money had been estimated to take care of the Army in Europe. On the contrary, it was constantly stated to the committee that the estimates were based on an Army to be maintained in the United States; and the action of the committee in reporting the amounts carried in this bill was based upon the idea that we did not believe, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has just stated, that we could raise 500,000 men by voluntary enlistment for a peace-time Army. We do know that we are confronted with the fact that there will be a considerable Army remaining of those raised to fight this war after the 1st day of July. So as the basis for appropriations, and not with the idea that we were fixing any definite policy, we finally agreed to appropriate the money that the War Department asked us for; and yet I think it is fair to state to the House that the War Department did ask us for this money in this bill to pay for an organization that was hereafter to be an Army for use in the United States. The issue, as I view it, is this: We know that we have to appropriate this money, and I want to say that I have no illusions that this money is all that we are going to appropriate for military purposes during the next fiscal year. I think that we will have to have a very large deficiency appropriation in addition to this to take care of the Army that will be on our hands before the end of the next fiscal year, but the committee attempted to draft a rider on this bill that would provide for a temporary Army only; and I am not sure that the committee drafted the kind of legislation that this Congress wants to adopt. My judgment all the time has been that all this Congress ought to do is to reenact a provision for the enlistment of men voluntarily in the Regular Army, which was done away with during the war, and allow this Army to be recruited by voluntary enlistment, and appropriate the amount of money asked for in this bill; and we would then give them legislation to build the standing Army in conformity with requirements and provide for the immediate demobilization of the Army that we have raised to fight this war.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Glancing at the provisions of this bill and the provision for the organization of an army by enlistment for three years under the act of 1916, which is 175,000 men——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Then the bill provides for 500,000 men—or, rather, putting the two enlistments together, 500,000. Now, if you leave out the second provision, what would be the effect of that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The effect would be that we would endeavor to raise a standing army of something like 175,000 men. That would be provided for under the Hay bill, and the organization of that army would be in conformity with the act of June 3, 1916.

Mr. GARNER. Now, can the gentleman tell us exactly how many troops would be in the Regular Army after the Army was demobilized from war strength?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Hay bill—that is, the existing law for the Regular Army—contemplates in peace times an organization of about 175,000 men, and in time of war it is provided that those units shall be expanded to war strength, which would provide something like 250,000 men.

Mr. GARNER. Then, for instance, four months after peace is declared by the proclamation of the President all troops go out except certain who are obligated to serve under their enlistment in the Regular Army. Now, how many troops will there be——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We were told something like 40,000 or 50,000 would remain.

Mr. GARNER. So we have got this kind of a state of affairs, that you can leave out the provision of this bill, as referred to the last provision, and when you demobilize the Army four months after the proclamation of peace we would have between 40,000 and 50,000 men in the Regular Army. Then you would have under the standing law authorization for the enlistment up to 175,000 men?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Not under the present law. The present law by special act provides that enlistments since the declaration of war should be for the period of the war only. Now, we ought, in my judgment, to enact a law that would provide for reenlistments as contained in the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], for three years, so as to enable them to raise a standing army of the full number provided for under existing law.

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman. Now, let me get this pretty well in my mind. If you demobilize the Army after four months' period there would then remain between 40,000 and 50,000 in the Regular Army?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Unless we have some legislation.

Mr. GARNER. If some legislation is not had at that time, would not they still have authority to go on and enlist men up to the 175,000?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But when peace is declared these men are immediately discharged.

Mr. GARNER. After their discharge when you have no legislation, has not the War Department authority under the Hay Act to enlist men up to 175,000?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It was the statement of the best legal authority we could get in the Judge Advocate General's Office that that would not be the fact.

Mr. GARNER. Then we must have law?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. To authorize again three-year enlistments.

Mr. GARNER. If you will put the first provision in your bill and leave off the one-year enlistment, will you have authority to bring it up to the 175,000 men?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman I prepared an amendment, in face of the possibility that this proposed legislation might go out, to provide for the reenlistment of men voluntarily for the three-year period exactly as provided for in this act and to enact that into legislation and no more, so far as the Army for the United States is concerned.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will.

Mr. GARNER. I asked the gentleman from Alabama what this money was to be used for we propose to appropriate in this bill, whether it was to be used to pay troops in France, and he said it was. Now, from reading the bill, I have not had time to go through it thoroughly, but from a reading of this bill I do not believe you have authority to pay troops in France out of that money appropriated in this bill. They are to be paid now out of the lump sum, are they not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They are to be paid for out of the Army appropriations.

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will yield, they are paid out of the Army appropriation bill of last year, which provided for the pay of the Army. This bill likewise provides for the pay of the Army but for the fiscal year 1920. There is no such thing as a lump-sum appropriation. The military appropriation bill fixes the pay.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Of course.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman from California think that we carry sufficient appropriations in this bill to pay the Army in France and in this country for the fiscal year 1920?

Mr. KAHN. I think we do; yes. I think that was the purpose of the committee. It was certainly the purpose of every member of the committee to appropriate enough money to pay for the running of the Army for one year, and one year only. Of course, that is all we could do under the Constitution; but the committee apportioned the money in such a way that we believe the entire Army that will have to be carried until the end of the next fiscal year can be paid out of the appropriations carried in this bill.

Mr. GARNER. You do not anticipate any deficiencies, then, to take care of the Regular Army in 1920?

Mr. KAHN. I do not.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman from California and myself disagree on that proposition. I agree with him that so far as the committee is concerned it had in view exactly the state of affairs which he suggests. But I do insist that the estimates, so far as the committee is concerned, submitted to us by the department were not for the support of an army in France, but for an army in the United States.

Mr. GARNER. Your understanding is that the appropriation made in this bill is to take care of the army in the United States?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If they can raise it.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. How would you pay the army in France if you did not pay it out of the money appropriated in this bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that we appropriate to pay the Army, but I still insist it is my deliberate judgment that we have not enough pay in this bill to pay the Army the United States will have to pay in the next fiscal year.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that the 500,000 men provided for in this bill are to be in France, or part of them are to be in France, during the next fiscal year?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I would like to have the gentleman yield to me about 10 minutes more.

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I wanted to touch upon another subject, and that is the constant criticism that has been made on this floor of the conduct of our Army and those in charge of our Army in France. Speeches and statements have been made here on this floor, I am sorry to say, that amount to assaults upon our Army in France, either directly or by innuendo and implication. The charge has been made that cliques and favoritism are rampant in our Army overseas. I know that when we began this war we were without experience in a conflict of the kind that confronted the world. We had no generals who had had training in great wars. The President of the United States, in his judgment, chose a man to lead the armies of the United States in Europe. I know that the President himself has stated that he realized that we had no commander who had ever fought a great battle; that it had to be a matter of judgment and trial and experiment who should be selected to lead. He chose the man that he believed, from all the reports brought to him, was the man best fitted to command our Army. He gave him absolute power, as a military commander, and sent him to France. He went there with a very small Army, for the first four or five months only a single division—a mere handful. That man was upon trial. We never had been able in former wars to choose a man as leader of our forces at the outset and have him prove by experience that we had chosen the right man at the first trial. There has not been a nation engaged in this war that was able at the beginning to choose as its commander a man that could stand the trial of the battle field, the one final test of a military commander, except the Government of the United States. Germany had the nephew of her former great marshal, von Moltke, as her first leader. He failed and died in disgrace. And then came Falkenhayn, and after him Hindenburg, and they were found wanting before the end, and finally Ludendorff was defeated and fled, a failure and a fugitive.

The British tried one commander after another, belted earls and titled lords, men of great position and reputation were placed at the head of that army. One after another they were removed from supreme command. They were tried in the balance and in the judgment of those in authority were found wanting. France tried one leader after another and they failed, and other men were put in their places. But the United States still has in command of her armies the man that our President chose when we commenced the conflict. Politics has always been rife in military matters in all of our prior wars. President Wilson has not permitted it to weaken or interfere with our great military effort in France. Gen. Pershing was one of the newest major generals in the Army. We sent the Chief of Staff and other generals who outranked him over there to judge of what he was doing. Congressmen visited the battle front, men of every station in life went there to view the work of the Army. And every returning visitor from general to private citizen has said that our Army was a marvel of efficiency and success.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman has reference to Gen. Pershing?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. There has been some discussion or doubt as to who has been responsible for the conduct of the war in France; that is to say, after the troops landed in France under whose jurisdiction and under whose organization, and who got up that organization, and who is responsible for the whole thing in France.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say that Gen. John J. Pershing, the commander in chief of the United States Army there, is responsible for it. And he has performed his duty in a way that has won the admiration of the world, so far as that is concerned. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Now, then, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY] was indicting the so-called "canning factory" in France. Gen. Pershing is responsible for that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not think there was any "canning factory."

Mr. GARNER. That is what they termed it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the newspaper talk.

Mr. GARNER. The newspaper criticisms of the Army in France must finally go back to Gen. Pershing. Is not that true?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will come to that in a little while. I was saying that the Commander in Chief of the Army had to build up his Army from the ground up. Just as the President of the United States had to choose a commander in chief, Gen. Pershing had to choose his officers for important posts and try them out. Those men who are said to have been demoted, who have been referred to on the floor here, were largely men of the Regular Army. Gen. Edwards was referred to by the gentleman from Maine. In his speech the other day the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] put in the RECORD a statement from Gen. Edwards, which I consider a splendid definition of the proper procedure for officering an army in time of war. Gen. Edwards said:

> Battles and war service in the face of the enemy, the supreme test of war, were what selected, so far as lay in my power, its lieutenants, its captains, its majors, and its colonels. One or two battles picked out these officers, and there was no question as to their selection. The controlling element was leadership, the greatest factor in choice for command, and frequently the factor that is given the least credit in military schools and colleges.
> It is wonderful and informing what can be done in six months with 30,000 men if politics, prejudice, and favoritism are eliminated and the only thought is patriotism and service.

In my judgment politics and prejudice were eliminated from the conduct of our Army in France, but I am afraid we are trying to get politics and prejudice into it over here.

Mr. GARNER. One word. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] said the troops were paid in France out of the appropriations made. They were paid out of a lump sum.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I hope the gentleman will permit me to finish, and then I will let the gentleman occupy his time. I know that there is a great disposition to find fault and to bring in here stories of those who feel that they have been neglected or badly treated and abused, and things of that sort. But war is a terrible thing, and the men who have conducted our war over there have fought it out upon principles that are supremely American and with officers along the lines laid down in Gen. Edwards's statement. Unless those intrusted with authority had had the courage to displace men who ought to have been retired, not only because of lack of courage but for physical reasons and temperamental reasons in some cases, we would have failed, and Gen. Pershing would have failed as a military commander if he had not exercised that authority.

I know, gentlemen, how easy it is for men to complain after the war is over.

If I had a boy who was in that Army, I would not like to hear him complain because in the terrible struggle the bread cart or pay wagon had not always kept up with the advancing lines. Even if he had marched through mud and mire to get to the battle field, marched at night because it was death to the command to march in the daytime, and after struggling through mud and mire over the most difficult terrain in all the battle line in France, and finally at midnight had to take his place on the firing line, and at daybreak next morning to go over the top, I would not want him to come back and tell me how bad the road was or short the food or irregular the pay. I would expect him to say, "It was war; it was hell." "Hell"; and repeat, as Sherman said. "The German Army was tough meat, but we ate 'em up; we ate 'em alive." [Applause.]

When Gen. Pershing landed in France it was asserted that this Hun army was invincible. That was the statement we heard constantly repeated when Gen. Pershing went over there. He said from the first the Hun army was not invincible, it could be defeated, and he proved it. He was the first commander of a great army who said frankly, "I am ready to take orders from the commander in chief of the allied army." When he said to Gen. Foch, "I offer for your command all my forces, and will go wherever you tell me to go," he brought unity of command to the allied army, and that brought final victory to our forces. [Applause.]

They told us the Hindenburg line could not be broken through. But finally, in July, we got about 200,000 men on the fighting line, and those men showed at Chateau-Thierry and all the way to the Ainse what our Army could do in battle. Finally, at St. Mihiel, in September, we got an American Army at the front, commanded and directed throughout by Americans, and in three days' time they wiped out that St. Mihiel salient, which had stood there for four years like a Gibraltar in the German lines, and sent the Germans back to their last line of defense. [Applause.]

It was said we could not get through the Hindenburg line or get around it, because one flank of it rested on Switzerland and the other on the North Sea. The cry was, "You will have to fly over it or dig under it; you can not go through." But these men who are being criticized here did not go under it or over it or around it, but they went through it. [Applause.] For four years the German military engineers had been building an impregnable fortress in the Argonne Forest, but in four weeks' fighting our army under Pershing destroyed that obstacle. They went right through, and they won the war. [Applause.]

It is true a lot of brave men died, but in my opinion we saved a million lives by winning this war a year sooner than it would have been won without an American Army under the leadership of our great commander. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will not want all the five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I only want time enough to say that I think the American Army in this war has achieved the most marvelous record of any army that ever fought in the whole tide of time. American democracy was on trial in the final arbitrament of nations. The world was the stage. All the other combatants staggered and halted in the fray. America's Army under Pershing made good, and democracy triumphed. I was somewhat humiliated the other day when I read in the public press an item to the effect that a Member of Congress had sent a cablegram to Gen. Pershing and had said in that message something like this: "Some one in Washington is criticizing you," and asking him if he did not want to have an investigation made into his conduct of the war. That would be like investigating the Duke of Wellington after the Battle of Waterloo or Bonaparte following Austerlitz.

The American people are mighty proud of our Army in France and the matchless record it has made. I do not think America wants her honor and her flag to be besmirched now by having investigations or complaints made for political or partisan advantage, and I protest against it here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska yields back his unused time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, during the statement made by the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA] I was moved to make a few suggestions. I now ask the privilege to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, it was my good fortune in another chamber to have something to do with the organic law of Porto Rico. That organic law was drawn by the late Senator from Ohio, Mr. Foraker, whom I considered one of the greatest constructive law writers or statesmen I ever knew, and I pay that tribute to him now.

What we have seen here to-day is what will always occur when we try to make other people happy our way. In our declaration of war against Spain we promised to take no territory. We passed what was known as the Teller amendment, which promised to give Cuba back to the inhabitants of that island, and we have kept our word. If anyone had thought of the geography of the case, the sentiment of the people was such that they would have amended that declaration to include the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, or any other territory then under the dominion of the Spanish Government. But after that hundred-day war the desire for a carpetbag government overcame our people. I had the pleasure of sitting for four hours and hearing the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the insular cases, and the absolute absurdity of the situation shown here to-day is the natural result of the decision of that court, which ruled that a ship going to Porto Rico with a cargo was foreign trade and coming back with the same cargo was coastwise. To-day in Porto Rico you have this situation: You have passed a law making Porto Ricans American citizens. You remember the decision in the insular cases, which held that the Constitution did not follow the flag. The eloquent statement made here to-day by Mr. DAVILA, if I understood him aright, and I think I did, for I have heard something of it before, was that when a man who is a citizen of the United States residing in Porto Rico applies for a writ of habeas corpus, demanding either a jury trial or indictment by a grand jury, the Supreme Court of the United States, following its old decision that the Constitution was not there, denies to the Porto Rican, who is made an American citizen by your act of Congress, the right of trial by jury or any other of the guaranties of the Constitution of the United States.

I simply wish to say in passing that this is what many of us suspected would come. Whenever we start in the wrong way, whenever we start to establish a government over people without their consent, something of this kind is likely to happen. It is said that Porto Rico accepted our sovereignty. Yes; so she did, at the point of a gun. But if you will read the statement that Gen. Miles made on the day the people of Porto Rico accepted our sovereignty you will see that therein was the same promise that was made by Dewey to the Philippine Islanders when we took possession of that country.

I simply rose to say that this man who speaks for the Porto Rican government to-day [Mr. DAVILA] asks simple justice. He says they love this country. They have raised armies, they have volunteered to fight in this war. He wants his Porto Rico to take a place as one of the stars of our flag; but if you are going to refuse him that you ought at least to give to the people of the island a star of their own. You have made them citizens, subject to the laws and hard rules of the common law and to the rules of the act of Congress, and by the same act you have deprived them of those natural, inalienable rights guaranteed by the Constitution. I simply rose to voice myself in favor of letting the people there say. The gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA] says, "Give us statehood; give us something that will bring to us the Constitution, or else give us independence." I think it is the duty of this Congress to consider that seriously and grant what he asks, and let us get away from this doctrine that we can make other people happy our way. We have tried it in the Philippine Islands. We have spent millions and billions of dollars. We have lost 25,000 lives. To the poor, downtrodden Filipinos we said: "We want you to be happy. Go to our church. Let us have a carpetbag government over there and appoint people in the United States to go over there and govern you." It has cost us, as I tell you, 25,000 lives; and it is due to the President of the United States to say that in all these years that he has been President he has made an effort to relieve the American people of the stain of political slavery and to relieve those people over there, so they may have a chance to govern themselves.

The Porto Rican case is before you. The gentleman from Porto Rico [Mr. DAVILA] has made his statement. His native language is different from ours. All this state of affairs shows the danger and the absurdity and the wickedness, if you please, of trying to make people happy our way. Why, Cuba offered us every man, every woman and child. The moment we declared war against Germany the little people of Cuba jumped to their feet and said: "Here, Uncle Sam, here are our men, here is our money, here is everything we have; and we declare war with you against Germany."

The Cubans are our friends. We have not made them friends by keeping a gun at their heads or a knife at their throats. We want the friendship of the Porto Ricans, and if there is anything in self-determination we ought to let them say or, at least, be consulted about what sort or form of government they shall have.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I want to say to the gentleman that besides the 25,000 lives it has cost, the estimate of the money cost of the Philippines to the United States three years ago was a thousand millions of dollars.

Mr. MASON. Yes; I have no doubt of it. Three years ago we had spent at least a thousand million dollars, all because we are trying to imitate royalty. We want to govern somebody, we want to have something to say about somebody else's government. Some of us wanted to change their religion. We wanted to give them the Christian religion with 13-inch guns. Some of us wanted to fix it over there so that they would wear the same kind of clothes that we wore. Some wanted one thing and some another, but everybody in this country who wanted to do something over there expected to get something for nothing.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman recall the fact that this country had to send its Army into Cuba to make the people down there behave themselves, at an expense to the taxpayers of this country of $7,000,000?

Mr. MASON. Yes; I do remember that; but it was not the Cubans that were making the trouble. We spent more time and more money when we drove the Spaniards out of Cuba than we did after that, and in my humble opinion that revolution and that trouble came about because of this ungodly desire to hold onto the government of Cuba. We passed in the Senate what was known as the Platt amendment, so that the moment they had a little shindig of their own and began killing a few people, as we did in the Civil War, then we put our Constitution and our flag over them and went down there and took the burden. We made them put the Platt amendment into the constitution of Cuba, and if they had not had it there we would not have had to go back and subject ourselves to the cost and expense.

Mr. Chairman, I say to you again and again—I am getting a little old and perhaps garrulous—I want you to remember one thing: No question is ever settled until settled right. No man ever had a slave that was free himself. No nation can be republican, no nation can be a democracy, that has a carpetbag government traveling around the world governing people in foreign lands by force without their consent. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I want to call the attention of the committee to the service of the Forty-second—the "Rainbow"—Division in the war.

THE "RAINBOW" DIVISION.

On Wednesday, August 15, 1917, the War Department announced the formation of a new division, to be composed of National Guard units from 27 States and to be designated the Forty-second Division. This division has since become known as the "Rainbow" Division, so named by Gen. MacArthur because it was made up of units from all parts of the country.

It was composed as follows:

Forty-second Divisional Headquarters Troop, formerly First Separate Troop, Louisiana Cavalry.

Eighty-third Infantry Brigade, composed of the One hundred and sixty-fifth Infantry Regiment, formerly the Sixty-Ninth New York Infantry; the One hundred and sixty-sixth Infantry Regiment, formerly the Fourth Ohio Infantry; and the One hundred and fiftieth Machine Gun Battalion, formerly Companies E, F, and G, Second Wisconsin Infantry.

Eighty-fourth Infantry Brigade, composed of the One hundred and sixty-seventh Infantry Regiment, formerly the Fourth Alabama Infantry; the One hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry Regiment, formerly the Third Iowa Infantry; and the One hundred and fifty-first Machine Gun Battalion, formerly Companies B, C, and F, Second Georgia Infantry.

Sixty-seventh Field Artillery Brigade, composed of the One hundred and forty-ninth Field Artillery Regiment, formerly the First Illinois Field Artillery; the One hundred and fiftieth Field Artillery Regiment, formerly the First Indiana Field Artillery; the One hundred and fifty-first Field Artillery Regiment, formerly the First Minnesota Field Artillery; and the One hundred and seventeenth Trench Mortar Battery, formerly the Third and Fourth Maryland Coast Artillery Corps.

One hunded and forty-ninth Machine Gun Battalion, formerly the Third Battalion, Fourth Pennsylvania Infantry.

One hundred and seventeenth Engineer Regiment, formerly the Separate Battalion, South Carolina Engineers; Separate Battalion, California Engineers.

One hundred and seventeenth Field Signal Battalion, formerly the First Battalion, Missouri Signal Corps.

One hundred and seventeenth Headquarters and Military Police, formerly the First and Second Virginia Coast Artillery Corps.

One hundred and seventeenth Ammunition Train, formerly the First Kansas Ammunition Train.

One hundred and seventeenth Supply Train, formerly the Texas Supply Train.

One hundred and seventeenth Engineer Train, formerly the North Carolina Engineer Train.

One hundred and seventeenth Sanitary Train, formerly the First Michigan Ambulance Company, First New Jersey Ambulance Company, First Tennessee Ambulance Company, and First Oklahoma Ambulance Company; also the First District of Columbia Field Hospital, First Nebraska Field Hospital, First Oregon Field Hospital, and First Colorado Field Hospital.

When our troops were ordered to France Gen. Pershing took with him such Regular Army units as could most quickly be made ready for service. The first National Guard division organized was the "Rainbow" Division. It was made up of those units of the National Guard throughout the country which were considered best fitted for immediate service.

The mobilization of the division was completed September 13, 1917, at Camp Mills, Mineola, Long Island, near New York City. The division embarked the latter part of October, spent one week in England, and began active training in France November 30, 1917. It arrived at its training stations in the worst part of the winter and suffered much from the cold and the constant rains. Their food was poor, and most of the men were billeted in barns and outbuildings. They were sent to the Lorraine sector February 17, 1918.

ON THE LORRAINE FRONT.

The troops of the "Rainbow" Division were sent into the trenches February 24, four days after their arrival. The "Rainbow" was the first American division, either Regular or National Guard, to be intrusted with a divisional sector. The sector assigned to them was located east of Toul, west of Strassburg, and near Luneville. It was supposed to be a quiet sector, and so it was until the Germans knew the Americans occupied it. When once that fact was known, activity was apparent behind the German lines. They began to concentrate their artillery, and from about 150 shells a day they increased their bombardment of the American position to over a thousand. Their airplanes flew almost continuously over the American trenches dropping bombs.

It was not long before the Americans who had been vigilant on the defensive became aggressive in attack. Our artillery was soon able to send as many shells into the enemy lines as the enemy gave us. Maj. Frederick Palmer says that raids became almost as popular as going to a country post office for the mail.

"They're telling us," said a New York Irishman, "that when we're out in front and we're attacked to fall back on points of resistance. Well, orders is orders, I suppose, but to my mind that's only another word for retreating, and I don't believe in it." That was the fighting spirit early developed by the division. Always to take the aggressive when possible and never to retreat when attacked was their inclination and became their habit. "I reckon folks will learn, seh, that we aint scairt of the Hun," said a man from the Georgia mountains. And so folks did learn. Beginning with this early service in the Lorraine, the boys of the "Rainbow" Division never were "scairt of the Hun," but again and again on his own ground and behind his own defenses compelled him to yield and surrender. They have the enviable record of never yielding and never retreating throughout their entire service. [Applause.]

On the night of March 4 the Germans made an attack in force on the American lines. The attack was preceded by an unusually heavy bombardment, which almost destroyed the American trenches. The burden of the attack was borne by the One hundred and sixty-eighth (Iowa) Infantry. Three assaults were made, two frontal and one flank. All three were repulsed. Twice the Germans gained a footing in the American trenches, and were only driven out by determined counterattacks and the fiercest hand-to-hand fighting. Almost surrounded at one time, the Americans had no thought of surrender, and extricated themselves without leaving a single prisoner in German hands. The toll of dead and wounded, however, was large.

An official report of the French officer under whose command the Americans were then operating stated that the Americans showed a rare quality of courage, self-possession, and calm bravery. Clemenceau, the French Premier, was enthusiastic in his praise. Asked if he thought the Americans in action were promising, he said: "Promising? That's no word. They have arrived. Why, the Americans were attacked on three sides. They were told to stand, and they did. The result was the Germans retired with heavy loss and their attack failed." [Applause.]

IN THE CHAMPAGNE.

Early in July the Forty-second Division was sent to the Champagne front to assist the French in holding back the impending German offensive toward Paris. They went at the request of the French staff officers, who had heard of their fighting qualities as shown in the Lorraine sector.

In order to reach the Champagne front a forced march of 125 miles was required. The division traversed that distance in five days, marching steadily with full kits from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m., with stops of only 10 minutes each hour.

The boys of the "Rainbow" had little rest after their long march. The division was needed at once, and at once took its place. As an indication of their trustworthiness, the French command gave orders that if the Germans broke through that sector, Gen. Menoher, commanding the Forty-second, was to take command of both American and French Infantry and Artillery. To realize their responsibility it should be remembered that in each of the great offensives preceding this one the Germans had overwhelmed nearly all the front-line positions attacked. In the March offensive against Amiens the Germans swept every first-line defense of both French and English and practically annihilated the Fifth British Army. These considerations did not for a moment depress the boys of the Forty-second. They had met the boche in the Lorraine, and they were not afraid of him in the Champagne.

The attack started July 14 along a 50-mile front. The preliminary bombardment was up to this time the heaviest of the war. The Germans had been concentrating their artillery for weeks, and shelled the French and American trenches for 10 hours with their heaviest guns and gas. Their aeroplanes swept low, dropping bombs and raking the Americans with machine-gun fire. The bombardment was so fierce and overwhelming that the French and Americans lost heavily. Many were killed where they lay, and in places the trenches and dugouts were filled with the dead and wounded. All the artillery horses were killed. All supplies were destroyed. Many of the men were days without food.

After this terrific bombardment the Germans came over the top, confident and determined, in long, recurring waves. Part of the line gave way, but the men of the "Rainbow" Division held their positions without a break against repeated and desperate German attacks. One of our battalions broke six successive assaults with steady rifle and machine-gun fire. Throughout the whole battle there was no flinching among our men, no signs of disorder, only steady, determined, efficient fighting. Every officer and soldier seemed to realize his individual responsibility and did his part and took his chance without surprise and without complaint in the most trying of battle experiences.

The French, too, met the onset bravely and effectively, with the result that the German offensive in the Champagne was stopped, the triumphant march to Paris interrupted, and the anticipated victory turned into defeat.

There was no lack of appreciation by the French of the service rendered by the Americans in this battle.

On July 20 Gen. Naulin, the French officer in command of the corps to which was attached the Rainbow Division, issued a general order:

At the moment when the Forty-second American Division is on the point of leaving the Twenty-first Army Corps, I desire to express my keen satisfaction and my sincere thanks for the services which it has rendered under all conditions. By its valor, ardor, and its spirit, it very particularly distinguished itself on July 15–16 in the course of the great battle, when the Fourth Army broke the German offensive on the Champagne front. I am proud to have had it under my orders during this period. My prayers accompany it in the great struggle engaged in for the liberty of the world.

CHATEAU-THIERRY.

July 15, 1918, the Germans launched their fifth and evidently their most stupendous offensive. Ludendorff, having been disappointed in his Champagne attempt, confidently hoped that an offensive from the Chateau-Thierry salient, which was within sight and hearing of Paris, would reach the French capital and end the war with a glorious victory. So, with 70 divisions, massed for an overwhelming assault, such as had crushed the English in the Amiens drive, on a 60-mile battle line, the advance was ordered.

The Chateau-Thierry salient may be described as an obtuse triangle, with Soissons and Rheims as the extremes of its base line and Chateau-Thierry at its apex nearest Paris. The side lines and the point of the triangle constituted the battle front. The line was held principally by the French and American forces. To force the attack the Germans had to cross the Marne. On July 15 a crack German guard division, with about 15,000 men, forced a passage near Mezy and advanced against the Americans. The Americans not only held their ground, but almost immediately counterattacked and practically destroyed the guard division. Other attacks failed. Everywhere the French and American lines held. For three days the Germans continued their vain endeavors to break through. In the meantime Foch had determined on a counteroffensive all along the line. Masses of troops were rushed to the front; the reserves were hurried to position; guns, tanks, ammunition, and supplies were gathered. And then, on July 18, the counteroffensive was launched. In front, at Chateau-Thierry, on both sides of the triangle from Chateau-Thierry to Rheims and from Chateau-Thierry to Soissons, the French and American attacked suddenly, vigorously, triumphantly.

All the world knows the story of the proud days that followed. From victory to victory the allies pressed on. From the Marne to the Ourcq, and from the Ourcq to the Vesle the Germans retreated, stubbornly fighting. The Americans covered themselves with imperishable glory by their magnificent daring, endurance, and heroic bravery. Gen. Pershing in his official report says that every available American division was hurried to the front. The First and Second Divisions were directed to make the first attack. They did so, he says, against stubborn resistance, but with constant success. That but half tells the story. The American Regulars and the Marines which composed these divisions fought that battle in a way that won the praise of all the allied commanders and excited the wonder of the Germans, who thought the Americans untrained and weak.

On the 24th the "Rainbow" Division was sent in to relieve the Twenty-sixth. Gen. Pershing in his report says that it fought its way through the Foret de Fere and cleared the way to the River Ourcq. Gen. March said, "In eight days of battle the Forty-second Division has forced a passage of the Ourcq, taken prisoners from six divisions, met, routed, and decimated a crack division of the Prussian Guards, a Bavarian division, and one other division, and driven back the enemy's lines for 16 kilometers." After crossing the Ourcq, the Forty-second pressed on, captured Hill 212, Seringes, Nesles, and Sergy, and, with the Thirty-second Division, drove the Germans to the Vesle.

The announcement by the American Chief of Staff that the "Rainbow" Division had met and defeated the celebrated Fourth Division of the Prussian Guards, never before vanquished in battle, sent a thrill of pride to every loyal American. [Applause.]

When Foch not only stopped the well-conceived offensive of the Germans, which was to be their final and triumphant march on Paris, but immediately launched a counteroffensive with what seemed reckless abandon against the German lines he met with unexpected success. By hard and well-directed fighting he forced the Germans to retire on both sides of the triangle. So rapidly was the assault pressed that the Germans, in danger of a disastrous rout, called into action their strongest reserves. It was then that the Germans determined to send the invincible Prussian Guards against the advance. It was the "Rainbow" Division that met this onset of the Prussian Guards.

The Prussian Guards have been regarded by the German people for more than a century as the ideal of the German Army. They have been considered not only as the best that German military science could produce but vastly superior to any other military organization in the world. They were not called into action except upon extraordinary occasions. They were sent against the Americans to demolish them, to put them to shame, to show their lack of training and incompetency. The Fourth, their crack division, the best of the best, hitherto undefeated, led the attack. The Guards charged in due form, but, strange to say, the Americans refused to yield. The "Rainbow" boys met the onset calmly and resolutely, and with such a well-directed storm of rifle and machine-gun fire that it blinded and stunned and finally stopped the fierce assault. And then the boys from Camp Creek and Smoky Hollow countercharged with a swiftness and ferocity that took the breath away from the wondering Guards. The Americans simply went through the front ranks of the invincible Guards as if it were an everyday diversion. Time and again the officers of the Guards rallied the men to stop the American onset. Some say four times, some six, and others say nine times the Guards tried to re-form and reattack, but the Americans pressed them so hard they could not find a chance. The Americans pressed them not only in front but soon attacked their flanks. The Germans were in danger of being surrounded, and so there was nothing to do but retreat in order to prevent surrender or destruction. This they did, with difficulty preserving their organization. It was a glorious victory for the Forty-second Division. [Applause.] It was a terrible defeat for the Guards. It gave confidence to the allies all along the line. It did more to break the morale of the Germans than any other single action.

It was the One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment, the old Third Iowa, that bore the brunt of the Guards' assault. This regiment was in action continuously from July 24 to August 3. During eight days of fighting the regiment lost 1,400 officers and men—50 per cent of its combatant strength. It should be remembered that this loss occurred not in a desperate last stand but in almost continual offensive, and that the advance was not retarded for a single hour by the terrible losses incurred.

Gen. Pershing reports that the Forty-second, with the Thirty-second, drove the Germans from the Ourcq to the Vesle, where the work of reducing the Chateau-Thierry salient was finished. It was the turning point of the war. Foch ordered advances on every front. The German armies were placed permanently on the defensive. They were continuously attacked and continuously defeated. Steadily and stubbornly they retreated until they reached the Rhine and sued for peace. The American officers had urged this policy. When it was adopted they took their part of the work not only with resolute determination but with joyous exultation. [Applause.]

It was a glorious part. It brought not only fame and honor to our boys in the field, but it gave our country a stronger place and added dignity in the eyes of the world. Back of our resources and wealth, back of our liberty and justice, back of our idealism and humanity, it has become known that there are 20,000,000 of fighting men as brave, as strong, as efficient as any the world has ever known, ready and willing and even glad to give their lives, if need be, for their country and a righteous cause.

ST. MIHIEL.

The next major service assigned to the Rainbow Division was in the St. Mihiel offensive. The weeks that followed the victory of Chateau-Thierry were devoted by Gen. Pershing to the organization of the first independent American army. The organization took place in the Lorraine, and to that point came units of American soldiers from all parts of France. As soon as the gaps in the ranks of the veteran divisions were filled and a short period of intensive training was given to the new men, these forces were quietly sent to their places on the St. Mihiel front.

The St. Mihiel salient was located southeast of Verdun and southwest of Metz. It, like the Chateau-Thierry salient, was a triangle, with its base line extending from Fresnes to Pont-a-Mousson and its side lines meeting in a point at St. Mihiel. It was a spearhead thrust at the heart of France. Four years ago the Germans had taken and thereafter held this triangular, daggerlike indentation. The French attempted its reduction, but failed. In the preceding July Gen. Pershing made up his mind to reduce this salient as his first offensive. It was a remarkably strong position. One side of the triangle was a range of hills and the other was a river. The interior plain was dominated by Mont Sec, from which every approach was visible. Mont Sec itself was a natural fortress strongly fortified, whose capture seemed almost impossible. Every hill along the line was fortified. Every depression, every grove, every natural obstacle concealed machine-gun nests.

September 12, at 5 a. m., after four hours of artillery preparation, the seven divisions which were to take part in the initial assault advanced. Preceded by a rolling barrage, followed by wire cutters, they went through the successive entanglements, through the front lines and support trenches in irresistible waves, exactly as scheduled. Breaking down all defenses, out of the fog which hung heavy over the battle field, suddenly appeared the Americans advancing with bayonets fixed. The Germans in most cases either surrendered or ran. The advance of the Americans was so well conceived, their attack so fierce and determined, and their concentrations so overwhelming that resistance was brief and futile. In two days' time the salient was cleared and a new line formed straight across the base of the triangle. With small loss a commanding position was taken, an important line of communication was cleared, and Verdun was no longer in danger. Sixteen thousand prisoners, 443 big guns, and a great quantity of material fell into our hands.

The signal success of the Americans in their first major offensive was of great importance. The allies gained confidence in the strength and effectiveness of the American forces, and the Germans learned that a new and dangerous enemy had been added to her foes. As a piece of military strategy it was not surpassed by any operation of the war. It worked out exactly as planned. Successful resistance was prevented, and a complete victory won with comparatively slight losses. It won Gen. Pershing instant recognition as an able and successful commander, and the conduct of our troops was lavishly praised.

The "Rainbow" Division again distinguished itself. The One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment led the attack and pushed the Germans back 12 kilometers the first day. A Red Cross helper writing of the battle says:

> I am glad to tell you that I saw the first all-American engagement. And your boys from Iowa fought like hell-cats, hand to hand, hour after hour. All that we like to think of for American manhood and fighting was offered here to be blazoned most gloriously in our history. You Iowans may hold your head higher than ever in pride for your particular part of the country. Nothing can be said too highly of the courage, the fortitude, and the determination of those children.

ARGONNE.

Gen. Pershing in his official report says that on the day after taking the St. Mihiel salient the Americans were on their way to the area between the Meuse River and the Argonne Forest. It was supposed that after the Americans had won the St. Mihiel victory they would be sent to reduce the fortifications of Metz. But Marshal Foch assigned them a more important and difficult task. If the Argonne Forest could be cleared and Sedan captured the vital railroad communication of the German armies in southern Belgium and northern France would be cut. The Germans must hold that line open or the withdrawal of their forces would be seriously imperiled. The German general staff was fully aware of the consequences of allied success on this line and was prepared to throw all its power into its defense.

Gen. Pershing divides the Argonne offensive into three phases. The first began on September 26 when the Americans mastered all the first-line defenses in a brilliant and determined general attack. On that day, and on the 27th and 28th, they penetrated the enemy's lines from 3 to 7 miles over a 20-mile front. By this initial operation, carried out with splendid spirit, Gen. Pershing took 10,000 prisoners and forced the Germans out of a large part of their strongly protected positions. From September 28 until October 4 was largely occupied in clearing the lower portion of the Argonne Forest.

The second phase of the offensive began October 1, when the attack was renewed all along the 20-mile front. In the meantime the Germans had strongly reinforced their lines with fresh divisions of their best troops. Every advance of the Americans was met with determined resistance, and strong counterattacks were constant. Every foot of ground was gained only after the most desperate fighting. By October 10 the forest was cleared, and on the 16th the Americans occupied the important strategic point of Grand Pré, on the northern bank of the Aire, at the vertex of the Argonne Forest. The way was now cleared for the last phase of the offensive which involved the capture of Sedan and the closing of the German lines of communication.

In all, 40 divisions had been used by the Germans in this battle. The Americans employed 21 of their divisions, several of which were engaged for the first time. Gen. Pershing in his report of these said, "They soon became equal to the best." The veteran divisions remained for days in the line, and eight were in the line twice. Among these was the Forty-second.

The Argonne Forest, which gives its name to this great battle, is about 50 kilometers long and about 10 kilometers wide. It had been in possession of the Germans since their first grand offensive in 1914. In 1915 the French made a desperate endeavor to retake it but failed. Since then the Germans had used the forest as a rest area for their war-worn troops. They had fortified it with every imaginable defense. It was crossed and recrossed with hundreds of miles of barbed wire, which ran in every direction and often was hidden in the underbrush. Every depression and cover was a machine-gun nest. The trenches were made of cement, with connecting trenches in many cases entirely covered. The underground works were on a most elaborate scale. Officers' quarters were subterranean palaces, with electric lights and hotel ranges. One of these had an elaborate brownstone front, with carved pillars at its opening on a hillside. It contained 10 large rooms lined with concrete, with wooden floors, mahogany furniture, electric lights, and almost every modern convenience.

It is impossible to exaggerate the difficulty of clearing the Argonne Forest. The Germans had thousands of steel and concrete positions bristling with machine guns. They had devised funnel-shaped traps, in which an enemy force advancing would be unconsciously concentrated until it could be exterminated with a storm of machine-gun fire from concealed emplacements.

In order to understand what fighting in the Argonne meant it should be remembered that for days the struggle continued night and day. During much of the time a cold rain was falling. The men were without shelter of any kind. If they snatched a few minutes' sleep they must lie in the mud. Nothing but utter exhaustion would allow sleep under such circumstances. In the forest they fought in inky darkness against concealed foes who were behind the strongest defenses. All the time the Germans were shelling heavily the American advance and pouring gas into all the valleys and depressions. The Americans were frequently compelled to sling their rifles and use their pliers to cut the wire entanglements that crossed their advance. This made them targets, even in the darkness, for enemy machine-gun fire.

It takes stout hearts and iron nerves to stand the strain of such fighting for days and nights in succession. But it was over this kind of terrain, it was with this kind of fighting, that the Americans tore their way through the Argonne forest. It is not too much to say that never in the history of warfare, ancient or modern, was greater courage, endurance, and individual heroism shown than in this great battle of the Argonne.

The Prussians were dismayed and astounded at the way the National Guardsmen, drawn from all parts of the United States only a year before, stormed through the most cunningly devised defenses Gen. von Marwitz could establish. They threaded the forests, scaled the wooded hills, smothered innumerable machine-gun nests, traversed guarded ravines, faced rifle fire and artillery barrages, and waded through the darkness in the rain through flooded areas of mud and water.

In the Argonne offensive one of the most difficult tasks assigned the Forty-second Division was the taking of Hill 288. The "Rainbow" boys first attacked it frontally. The attack failed. They made four more vain attempts to storm the hill. One rainy morning the One hundred and sixty-eighth Regiment, supported by a New York regiment, started on the sixth trial. With our artillery dropping shells on the crest, and the New York troops spreading machine-gun fire on all the slopes, the Iowa boys just at daylight, in a cold rain, again started up the hill. Through the barbed wire, over the trenches, driving the gunners from hundreds of machine-gun nests, they went at the Germans with bayonets set. There were hundreds of hand-to-hand conflicts on the slippery hillside. Captains fell and lieutenants commanded; lieutenants fell and sergeants commanded. One platoon, without even a corporal to command, was led over the top by a private. For six hours the struggle continued before the top was reached and the victory won. When the Germans surrendered there were only 107 left, the rest had been killed or wounded.

One of the finest operations of the American forces in France was the capture of the Cote de Chatillon. The hill is 820 feet high, and dominated a vital part of the Kreimhilde-Stellung defense. It was very strongly fortified and was defended with stubborn bravery. For 40 hours the Forty-second Division, which led the assault, was exposed to a merciless rain of lead poured into them from every side. Slowly the Americans crawled to the objective. Day and night they pressed forward and upward. Through barbed-wire entanglements, in the face of the massed fire of machine guns, in a veritable hail of shrapnel and hand grenades, they made their way to the top. Then out came the bayonet, and with a wild hurrah the Americans fell upon the enemy and captured the position. It was a hard fight and a glorious victory. These instances but illustrate the character of the great battle of the Argonne.

SEDAN.

When Ludendorff retired from his defeats in the battles of Chateau-Thierry and St. Mihiel he took his position at the Hindenburg line in what was considered by military experts to be the most intricate and elaborate system of defensive works ever fashioned by the ingenuity of man. The Germans believed them impregnable. The allied commanders considered their reduction the work of months at least.

What was known as the Hindenburg line was rather a zone than a line. In some places it was 12 miles across. When possible it followed the line of natural defenses, in some places following the lines of rivers and canals, in others the lines of hills and ridges. The defenses were of every kind known to military science, with trenches, big-gun emplacements, every point of vantage utilized, and every conceivable defensive position strengthened. These defenses had been four years in building, and they were commanded by nearly 2,000,000 trained soldiers under the command of able and confident commanders.

In six weeks time the Ludendorff forces were defeated, the Hindenburg line was broken, the invincible Germans in ignominious flight, and their impregnable defenses utterly destroyed. This great movement began September 26 when Marshal Foch opened the Battle of the Argonne by throwing the American troops against the German defenses, with a final objective at Sedan. For this third and last phase of the offensive Gen. Pershing made careful preparation. Tired troops were rested, fresh divisions were brought forward. The artillery was strengthened.

November 1 the final advance was ordered. It became almost from the start an impetuous onslaught which overwhelmed every effort at resistance. Sweeping northward our troops did not pause until on the 6th they reached the outskirts of Sedan, 25 miles from their line of departure. It had been a continuous battle, which lasted 40 days. Against the best German troops, fighting with desperation to save their line of withdrawal, the Americans had won a continuous series of brilliant victories. They took in all over 26,000 prisoners, over 500 big guns, and, best of all, the control of the Metz-Meziers-Sedan railroad lines. But these results were not achieved without severe losses. It is not known what the total casualties of this last offensive were, but the losses of the Rainbow Division alone were 50 per cent of their effectives.

In the advance on Sedan Pershing's forces traversed 40 kilometers in six days. From November 1 to November 6 the Germans threw 22 divisions against the Americans, but failed to check their progress. It was the First Regulars and the Forty-second—"Rainbow"—Divisions which led the advance and made the final whirlwind dash into Sedan. The Germans planned to make a final stand at Sedan, the place of their great and culminating victory in the war of 1870, but the rapidity of the American advance and the vigor and valor of our forces spread despair among their men and they were compelled to evacuate their defenses at the last almost without a struggle.

It was fitting that this great and final victory should occur on the spot where Germany inflicted upon France the humiliating defeat of 1870. When Pershing with the vanguard of American troops stood at the grave of Lafayette he uttered those simple and memorable words which the world will never let die: "Lafayette, we are here." It was dramatic and perfect justice that the Americans, having come, should have been able to drive the German forces in disaster and disgrace from the historic battle field that marked the French defeat. To them the surrender of their Emperor at Sedan was not a mere defeat; it was the downfall of France. What more fitting than that the Americans should return Sedan for Yorktown? If it had not been for the French, there would have been no Yorktown. If it had not been for the Americans, there would have been no second Sedan.

The German high command laughed derisively when the Americans began to send troops across the seas. Such a movement of untrained men could not count in the titanic struggle they were waging. But the Americans in a few brief months turned their derision into disaster, and on the historic battle field of Sedan wiped out for all time the French defeat of 1870 and transformed it into a triumph so glorious that Frenchmen now can think of Sedan with exultation instead of shame.

It was a graceful courtesy that the Americans extended in yielding the honor of entering and occupying Sedan to a French division which had followed closely the American advance. So the flag of France displaced the German emblem and was hoisted over that historic spot, never again to be lowered by German command.

THE "RAINBOW" BOYS.

In all the important battles in which the Americans were engaged, from Lorraine to Sedan, the "Rainbow" Division bore a conspicuous part. From February 17, 1918, to November 11, when the armistice was signed, a period of about 225 days, the "Rainbow" boys were under fire 180 days. During this period it fought 26 enemy divisions, including 3 divisions of the Prussian Guards. It took prisoners from 19 German divisions.

It was considered a shock division almost from the start, and was in the front lines longer than any other American division, either Regular or National Guard. It was the first division to which was assigned an entire divisional sector, which it held for 13 weeks. At Chateau-Thierry it distinguished itself in first crossing the Ourcq River, capturing Sergy, Seringes, Villiers, Sen-Fere, and Nesles. It drove the Germans from the Ourcq to the Vesle, penetrating the enemy's territory 15 kilometers. In the Argonne offensive it was assigned the most difficult tasks, piercing the Kriemhilde-Stellung line, taking the Cote de Chatillon, and Hill No. 288. In this operation it penetrated enemy territory 19 kilometers, took over 1,200 prisoners, and recovered 150 square miles of French territory.

During all this time the Rainbow Division was allowed very few and very brief periods of rest. Even after the severe fighting of July and August they were denied even the expected seven days' leave. Very little complaint was made. Their baggage was far behind. Even the commissariat was distanced. Food was irregular and often insufficient and poor in quality. Yet through it all the spirit of the officers and men was superb. They were proud that they were selected for such distinguished service, proud that they were trusted with such responsibility, and so, whatever the conditions and whatever the task assigned, they were always ardently brave and always calmly resourceful. [Applause.]

They were proud of their name, the "Rainbow" Division. This is shown in a boy's letter to his parents describing an incident in the battle of the Argonne. He said:

We had been fighting so long we were all worn out and could hardly take another step. Our officers said we must take the next hill. We started, but our officers, seeing how tired we were, ordered us to lie down and rest. Just then the clouds broke and a beautiful rainbow appeared in the sky. That was enough. The "Rainbow" boys forgot they were tired out, jumped to their feet with a hurrah, and, needless to say, took the hill with a rush.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-EIGHTH INFANTRY.

One of the four Infantry regiments of the Rainbow Division was formerly the Third Iowa National Guard. It was originally recruited from southern Iowa. During the Spanish-American War it served as the Fifty-first Iowa Infantry from May 30, 1898, until November 2, 1899, and saw active service in the Philippines. After its return and demobilization the regiment was reorganized as the Fifty-fifth Iowa Infantry, and in July, 1915, it again reorganized as the Third Infantry, Iowa National Guard. Under this designation it served on the Mexican border in 1916.

When the order was issued for the mobilization of the National Guard, the Third Iowa assembled at Camp Dodge, where it was mustered into the service as the One hundred and sixty-eighth Infantry. There were about 2,000 men in the original Third, and the regiment was raised to war strength by 1,600 additions, mostly from the First and Second Iowa National Guard. It left Des Moines September 10, and arrived at Camp Mills September 13, where it became part of the Forty-second Division, and soon thereafter embarked for France.

The service of the One hundred and sixty-eighth, with the Forty-second Division, has been given with the account of the service of the Rainbow Division, of which they were a part. Particular reference to this regiment is justified because of its long and exceptional service. Wherever the fighting was hardest and the responsibility greatest, there the One hundred and sixty-eighth was sent. In whatever duty assigned, no matter what dangers were incident or what losses were inevitable, the regiment braved the dangers and suffered the losses without complaint and without protest. Throughout their service they endured privations and faced the hazards of battle with indomitable fortitude and invincible heroism. Col. Bennett, who commanded them for a long period of their service, said of them:

I only wish that I had the power to express the character of the work performed by these men. It is wonderful and deserving of the highest praise.

Col. Brown, of the General Staff, said:

They are a wonderful fighting unit.

Capt. Leon Bentz, of the French staff, said:

It is the best regiment I ever saw. The men are too brave, too courageous.

Gen. Douglas McArthur, chief of staff, said:

You can tell the people of Iowa that this regiment ranks 100 per cent.

The war correspondents repeatedly singled it out for special praise. As one of them reported:

The One hundred and Sixty-eighth has earned the name of the most famous American regiment. The French cheer whenever it passes. The English have marked it for special praise. The Australians, the Canadians, and other colonials, considered the best fighters among the allies, claim the troops of the One hundred and Sixty-eighth as their brothers.

A Member of Congress, visiting the battle fronts, said that the names of two American regiments were on every tongue, that of the One hundred and sixty-eighth Iowa and the One hundred and sixty-seventh Alabama. These two regiments constituted the Eighty-fourth Infantry Brigade and fought side by side throughout almost their entire service. Representing the blue and the gray, together they gave new luster to the flag they carried on many a foreign battle field, and vied in affectionate rivalry in service and devotion to each other and to the cause for which they fought.

While praise and honors and citations and decorations were lavishly given the gallant boys who composed the One hundred and sixty-eighth, they were dearly bought. In the fight of July 25 to obtain the heights beyond the Ourcq River, Maj. Stanley's battalion lost over 50 per cent of its enlisted men and 20 out of 26 officers. In the Chateau-Thierry drive Maj. Worthington's battalion, in 10 days' fighting, was reduced from 1,200 to 200 men. In one action Company A lost all its commissioned officers and went out in command of a sergeant. In another engagement Company F went into action with 250 men and 6 officers. The next morning only 27 men and 1 officer reported for duty. Of the 250 men of Company M who went into the service, only 27 escaped. Two hundred and twenty-three were killed or wounded. Such was the price paid to vindicate American rights and save the civilization of the world.

THE FINAL VICTORY.

The coming of the Americans to the help of the allies was most opportune. It was their good fortune to take the field as an effective force when it was possible to change defeats into victories, and when after a short but mighty struggle the German terror collapsed. Until July 18, 1918, the allies had been fighting on the defensive, many times with their backs against the wall. Against the most powerful armies ever mobilized for war they had for four years maintained a desperate and heroic struggle. In the campaigns of 1918 it was the purpose of Ludendorff by mighty offensives to crush the English or French, or both, and break through to the Channel, to Paris, or to both, and thus end the war.

Ludendorff's first blow on March 21 was one of the most perfectly planned, as it was one of the most skillfully executed offensives ever launched. It came very nearly being a complete success. The British were everywhere overcome by the superior forces massed in overwhelming numbers against them. Fighting desperately, they were forced continuously to retire but still heroically held their line from breaking, although sometimes near extermination. At the end of a week of deadly fighting the victorious German army was compelled to stop from sheer exhaustion; it had outrun its guns, its ammunition, and its supplies. There was just time for the French to arrive, and almost miraculously the drive was stopped within sight of Paris.

In April following Ludendorff sprung another offensive, this time in the north, against the British. Again he was successful at first, and for a time it seemed as if he would have an open road to the Channel. But again the French arrived in time to support the British, and again the German assault was repulsed.

Ludendorff knew the Americans were coming in ever-increasing numbers and realized that he must win a decisive victory soon or give up hope of final success. For more than a month he gathered his forces for another attack. The new offensive was again a brilliant success. It swept over Chemin des Dames, across the Vesle, over the Ourcq, and reached the Marne at Chateau-Thierry, again within sight of Paris. The thunder of the German guns was heard daily in the French capital, and raids by airplanes and shells from long-range guns were nightly terrorizing the Parisians. But again the Germans had outrun their support and supplies, and were compelled to stop to strengthen their communications and concentrate their forces.

Within the Chateau-Thierry sector Ludendorff prepared for his final offensive against Paris. He believed, as did most of the German staff, that from so near an attacking point another great drive would certainly reach Paris. The offensive was launched July 15. But it never made progress. It was stopped almost as soon as it began, and three days later Marshal Foch ordered the counteroffensive which ended the war.

As a military achievement this counteroffensive has never been surpassed in all the history of warfare. Within four months a victorious army of nearly two millions of trained veterans, commanded by the most thoroughly trained officers in the world, behind the strongest defenses military science and experience could construct, was defeated and compelled to sue for peace. No military commander ever achieved a greater victory or ever conceived and carried out a more wonderful strategic campaign. Marshal Foch organized and ordered his counteroffensive not alone on the Marne but over a battle front 300 miles long. Along this far-flung battle line he sent the soldiers of 10 nations to their places, each command being given the work it could best accomplish, with coordination everywhere. So perfect were these plans, so complete the accomplishment, that the result was the greatest and most decisive victory history records.

September 26 Foch threw Pershing and Gouraud against the Germans near the south end of the line. September 27 he threw the Belgians and Plumer's British Army against the Germans on the north end of the line. On the same day he threw Horne's and Byng's British Armies against the Germans on the Scheldt Canal. September 30 he launched Berthelot's French Army against the Germans between the Vesle and the Aisne.

As a result, the whole German line from the Channel to the Meuse was set rocking. Both at the north and south ends the German lines were completely broken. So vigorous were these offensives all along the line that for the first time in all the four years of warfare the Germans were unable to concentrate against so many attacks. From November 1 the story is one of swift and relentless pursuit: By the British down the valley of the Sambre, through Maubeuge, until they reached Mons; by the French to and across the Belgian frontier; by the Americans through the Argonne to Sedan. With the British at Mons, the Americans and French at Sedan, and the Belgians nearing Antwerp and Brussels, there was nothing for the Germans to do but to sue for peace.

We in America have a just right to be proud of our part in this great struggle and this great victory. While neither in point of time of service nor in numbers was our contribution so great as that of other nations, ours was the final reenforcement which, flung in the decisive campaigns, brought final success. If our boys came late, they came in time. If their numbers were not so great, they brought to the war-wearied veterans who held the line that vigor, that intrepid spirit, that indomitable energy which demanded victory and would not be denied, which put new life into the long line from the Channel to the Alps, which stirred it to a new enthusiasm and a new hope, which changed four years of defensive to four months of offensive warfare, and thus brought victory swift and sure.

In this proud and high achievement the Forty-second, the Rainbow Division, bore a conspicuous part, and for its service and its sacrifice merits and will receive both the praise and honor of the world and the gratitude and love of the Nation under whose flag it served so well. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, the first thing that attracts my attention regarding the bill now under consideration is the statement in the report that the estimate originally as submitted by the department was $1,916,905,572.16.

The revised estimate by the department reduced that over $700,000. The reported bill carries $1,117,289,488.56, being a very substantial reduction from the amount at first requested. I surmise it rarely happens that a committee finds it necessary to raise departments' estimates.

Ever since I have been a Member of this House we have been indulging in appropriations in large sums. I have tried to form some standard by which I might comprehend what a billion means, that I might get some conception of the total that we have appropriated. From the present moment backward in the calendar of time to the hour of the Nativity there have been 1,008,608,400 minutes; from this fact we get some sort of a standard enabling us to realize what a billion is. This bill provides that we increase our indebtedness $1 per minute from the dawn of the Christian era until the present time.

I do not know what the sum total of all our appropriations and indebtedness amount to. I have been unable to ascertain it. I have asked many, I have sought information, I have heard the questions asked upon the floor of this House, and I have got no satisfactory answer. I have been told that with what we have incurred and what is now in sight it will aggregate $57,000,000,000. If that be true, it means that we have gone in debt $57 a minute since Christ was born, and if we keep on at that rate the taxpayers, before they can be relieved of their burdens, will have to wait until His second coming. [Laughter.] In any event the total is staggering in amount and paralyzing in effect.

In Pennsylvania, wherever a railroad crosses a highway at grade, there is a sign placed which reads, "Stop, look, and listen." I think it would be a good idea if a similar sign were put in front of the Speaker's desk, so that we might observe its mandatory admonition.

I did not, however, rise to comment or discuss this bill so much as some other matters which have been called to my attention, and to present some facts in the nature of cumulative evidence of a lamentable condition of affairs. I think while we are now appropriating money, spending our time in doing it, we might devote a little of our efforts to seeing that the money we have already appropriated reaches the people for whom it is intended.

Presumably every Member of this House has received a score or more of complaints relating to the nonpayment of money long overdue to men in the service and of allotments and allowances provided and intended for the monthly and needed relief of their dependents.

The total of such complaints must aggregate a very large number, and when they are given publicity on the floor of this House and in other ways there occasionally follows soon thereafter a statement from high official sources that there is not any foundation in fact for them; that the conditions of deferred payments and nonpayments do not exist. You know and I know that they do.

A circular issued by the department having these matters in charge, and entitled "What the United States Government does for its fighting men and their families," in describing the same contains this statement:

> By this system of allotments and allowances the enlisted man and the Government together make provision for the loved ones left behind.

And, again, commenting on the measure providing for allotments, allowances, compensation, and insurance, it is set forth that this system—> safeguards the families left behind and by its broad and generous provisions it takes from war its chief terror—fear for the future.

Beautiful in sentiment, disappointing in results, though accurate in statement, for in truth a great many of these "loved ones" have been left behind, though in destitute circumstances.

And the men in service are disheartened, broken in spirit, justly indignant over the treatment of themselves and their families. What will be the attitude of mind of the returning soldier toward the lawmakers, toward those who have in charge the administrative duties of the law which we have enacted, toward the Government, and the administration? It will not be in praise of what we have done, but in bitter condemnation of failure to intelligently, expeditiously, and patriotically execute the law and apply its provisions as intended.

A few illustrations of different kinds will be enough for the present.

I have been trying since last June to secure relief in one particular instance. Under date of June 21, 1918, I received a letter in part as follows:

> I have been advised to write you in regards to my allotment. My husband left here on October 7, 1917, for Camp Lee, Va., and in November made out allotment papers for me to receive half of his pay and the Government was to pay me $15 a month also, and it is now June 21, 1918, and as yet have not even heard from the Government and have written Washington several times with no reply, and I have been ill since the 10th of February and, of course, have no parents or anyone that I could turn to for help, and my husband is now in France in reserve camp at the front, so won't you please look this up for me as I have my hospital bill and doctor to pay, also rent and gas.

Again, under date of September 21, 1918, this woman writes as follows:

I am sincerely sorry that I have to keep writing you, in fact I think it annoys you, but I have written so many times to the Treasury Department without even getting an answer. If I were not ill I would not bother, but, Mr. CLARK, picture a woman ill for eight long months with her husband in France. I haven't anyone I could go to until I get better. You must remember I am all alone. My milkman quit leaving milk, my grocer has refused to send down any more groceries as I owe him $47.50. And, oh, God, it is so hard. I have tried to work and worked two weeks and have been confined to my bed for a week, at that rate I won't be able to hold a position nowhere. * * *

So, Mr. CLARK, won't you please try and have them do something for me. If they doubt my statement as to illness they can write my doctor.

Again, under date of October 10, 1918:

Pardon me, Mr. CLARK, for annoying you again, but it seems that writing to the War Risk Department they don't seem to pay much attention and this is one more favor that I am going to ask of you. Mr. CLARK, will you tell them that the allotment is due me from November, 1917, as it was then that my husband had made out allotment papers.

Again, under date of October 29, 1918—

Why is it that I have to go through all this red tape before I can get what allotment is due me? The papers I had registered a week ago are what they asked me to send; now they write and say they must hear from the commanding officer of my husband's company—as if they doubted my statement. Now, perhaps, I haven't any patience left, but I have been ill a long time, and when you are alone it is so much harder to get along. And I feel this way—I have done my part, and have done it willingly. * * *

You see, Mr. CLARK, I am utterly discouraged, and I must have the help that is due me. So, thanking you for past favors and thanking you again * * *

P. S.—Mr. CLARK, I can send a statement from my doctor that I am not able to work, but I am trying hard to.

Again, under date of December 21, 1918—

Each time that I write I always say it will be the last, because I know just how it is to be annoyed with other people's troubles; but each time that I write the War Risk Insurance in regard to my allotment they take forever and a day to answer. But I am without money and can not even get trusted, as I owe a grocery account, and I will not ask anyone for 12 cents to buy bread with. Now, I am without money and haven't either coffee or bread in the house, so will await a reply by the first of the week; then whatever I see fit to do with myself will do so. I know, Mr. CLARK, it is not using common sense to write this way, but I am utterly discouraged and can not help it. The War Risk has not even kept its word and sent me $30 a month, as it has promised to.

Again, under date of January 29, 1919—

In reply will state as yet I have not received my check, and the gas company has shut off my gas. They did this yesterday, and I am without fuel or food. I am not begging anyone for anything. * * * I gave up everything I had in this world, and then in return what do I get? I haven't heard from [my husband]—it's four months and two weeks. Now, Mr. CLARK, please advise me what to do; you know, it is not very nice staying in a cold house without food.

Again, under date of February 4, 1919:

Won't you ask them to find out where my husband is, as it is four months and three weeks to-day since I last head from him?

In 16 months this woman has received only three payments of $30 each.

This is a fine picture for us to view. A woman without parents; no wealthy relatives; alone in her home, cheerless, cold, penniless, destitute, sick, and hungry, and she the wife of a soldier in the service overseas.

Here is another case of a soldier leaving for overseas service in the early part of September last. He made an allotment to his mother of $15, but she has not received anything; and according to the last communication, which arrived at his home on December 24, 1918, he had not received any pay since he entered the service. This young man contributed to the support of his father and mother, when he was at home, $50 per month. They have not received a dollar from the Government. I saw this man's parents, who stated the facts to me.

Another case of one who went into the service July 15, 1917; did his part in France; was wounded seven times, and had a rib taken away. He has not received any money from the Government since April. This is not an imaginary case. I saw the man myself and heard the story from his own lips.

I have a complaint of another kind. A letter written by a soldier to his mother, whom I know, is in part as follows:

Send me some of my money. I haven't got paid for December yet, and I haven't told you that I buy my meals all the time or I would starve to death. I don't believe some of these "wops" around here could live on the meals that we get.

Last Friday we had fried (rotten) fish for dinner. Nobody would take it, and made soup out of it for supper; and everybody took it and threw it away so we wouldn't get it some other way again. It has been that way ever since we came here.

And yet there is given $100,000,000 to the alleged hungry of other foreign nationalities.

Under date of February 6, 1919, I received a letter from the mother of a lieutenant in Siberia, who inclosed a field-service post card from her son, who says that he has not received any mail, and I am requested to find out the proper address.

The post card reads as follows:

VLADIVOSTOK, 1-8-19.

Am well—feeling fine—don't worry.

Am in the hospital—sick—slightly wounded—seriously wounded—am now recovering rapidly.

Have—have not—received mail from you.

(Signed) ——— ———.

(Draw a line through any of the above not applicable. All field-service post cards with unauthorized additions or changes will be destroyed.)

This is all that is given on a small postal card made for the use of soldiers in the United States Army and sent from Siberia by a lieutenant in the service to his mother, who has sent him several important business letters which he has not received.

I have drawn a line through parts of the card, as he did.

The name I have, for obvious reasons, omitted.

I am acquainted with a young woman from the city of Erie who is doing her part in one of the hospitals in New York. She has written a letter descriptive of her work and the conditions there existing. It has appeared in the public press. I quote briefly:

Many of the boys can not write, so we do it for them. If they want to send telegram and have no money, the Red Cross pays for them. I am going to write to some of the girls at home and ask them if they will send small stamp books to the boys who are down and out, as many of them haven't had pay for five or six months, and haven't a cent to their names. I already have loads of letters to mail that are not stamped.

And yet the Post Office Department is on a paying basis. Daily we hear the praises of those boys, but that does not give them their overdue pay.

Not long since I personally visited a hospital not very far from the city of Washington and I conversed with a number of men there, and I learned that they had not received their pay for some months, although the day before I was there they had signed some papers by which they were to receive from the Government casualty pay of $7.50 per month, or amounts approximating this.

It would seem to the ordinary person that the basis upon which this casualty pay could be made would be sufficient to warrant the payment in full of all that was their just dues.

Such illustrations as these arouse our indignation, and I think that we could spend a little of our time most profitably and patriotically to do that which we ought to do. I understand from a gentleman, Mr. MCCULLOCH, of Ohio, who addressed this House a few days ago, that he felt the same way, and that he made inquiries to see how many bills had been introduced for this purpose. He found 15 of them. If there are 15 bills of this nature resting in the committees it is time some of them were brought into the House, and those who are responsible for introducing legislation of that kind and bringing it before this House ought, in my opinion, to take action at once to relieve the conditions, of which I have many complaints. [Applause.]

From all that I gather from various sources and from what has been presented upon the floor of the House immediate relief is imperative. The families of our soldiers are fed, in many instances, with broken promises, and we are binding up the wounds of our boys with red tape. It is high time that the slumbering resentment and indignation of the membership of this House expressed itself in some constructive and mandatory legislation which will eliminate chaos and substitute system for confusion worse confounded. [Applause.]

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to discuss some features of the bill, but some of the data that I had hoped to get by this time I have not acquired, so instead thereof I am going to take a few minutes of the time allotted to me to get into the RECORD a brief that I prepared three or four weeks ago and have been carrying in my pocket ever since, on the right of public officials to receive gifts from foreign governments. The thing that prompted me to look up this question was an inquiry from one of my constitutents, based upon a news item similar to the one which appeared in the Washington Post here on Sunday, December 29, 1918. The news item is vouched for by the Associated Pess and is headed "King sends Wilson fine set of books as birthday gift." It is dated London, December 28, and states that President Wilson celebrated that day, his sixty-second birthday, by a round of social activities, and that King George presented him with a magnificent set of books, and at the same time gave gifts to every member of the President's official party. Dispatches following that also gave out the news that the President accepted gifts given to him by other potentates and high dignitaries, including the Pope. The constitutional provision on that is very plain. It is so clear that any man who runs may read. The wayfaring man, even though he be a President or other high official, can not err therein. It is the eighth paragraph of the ninth section of Article I, and reads as follows:

No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States.

The second clause, to which I wish especially to call attention, is the provision:

And no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.

That was incorporated in the Constitution by the fathers who made up the constitutional convention, and it was no passing whim of the framers of the Constitution, because this provision appeared in the Articles of Confederation substantially as we find it in the Constitution. Mr. Pinckney, a member of that convention, moved the adoption of this provision as a part of the Constitution and it was carried unanimously after full understanding of its importance, and the reason that he urged therefor was the necessity of preserving foreign ministers and other officers of the United States independent of external influence. Now, for a public official to accept a present from any king, prince, or foreign State is not only a violation of the Constitution, but is in violation of an act of Congress passed in 1881, two sections of which I will incorporate in my remarks. Section 2 of the act provides:

That no decoration or other thing, the acceptance of which is authorized by this act, and no decoration heretofore accepted, or which may hereafter be accepted, by consent of Congress by any officer of the United States from any foreign Government shall be publicly shown or exposed upon the person of the officer so receiving the same.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. For a question.

Mr. LONDON. I understand the custom is that a gift that is received by the President from a foreign power is deposited in the State Department and is turned over to him when he becomes a private citizen. I understand that is how they have been getting around that constitutional provision.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Well, I do not know what the custom is—and here let me state that I never heard of a President violating this constitutional provision before—but the law is that no person while holding a public office can in any wise receive a gift from any prince, king, or foreign State, and the statute here provides that the officials can not take the gift and then come to Congress and ask Congress to give consent.

Section 3 provides:

That hereafter any present, decoration, or other thing which shall be conferred or presented by any foreign government to any officer of the United States—civil, naval, or military—shall be tendered through the Department of State and not to the individual in person; but such present, decoration, or other thing shall not be delivered by the Department of State unless so authorized by act of Congress.

As a matter of fact, Congress has in but very few cases acted favorably in giving consent to permit a public official to accept a gift or decoration since 1881.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I yield for a question only.

Mr. RAKER. Has the section of the Constitution to which the gentleman referred and the act—has either of them been violated lately, within the last six months? If so, who is the one who violated it?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman is listening, and I have not tried to cover up anything. I read this press dispatch from London, where the President of the United States accepted a gift from the King of England. I wish to inform the gentleman that I am not discussing this violation of the Constitution and statutes because of any hostility to the President or to embarrass him in his work over there, because I am in sympathy with nearly everything he says he is trying to accomplish. This is a domestic question, not a foreign one.

Mr. RAKER. Is it the gentleman's contention that the provision of the Constitution stated has been violated by the President?

Mr. RAMSEYER. If the press dispatch quoted by me is correct, there is no question about the violation.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I will.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman disapprove of the decorations some foreign governments have conferred upon the officers and soldiers of our Army for distinguished services?

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is not the question that I am undertaking to discuss. The thing I am attempting to show in this brief to which I have referred is the constitutional and statutory provisions touching the President's right to accept gifts from kings and princes, and also what construction the constitutional writers and Attorneys General have placed upon this constitutional provision and what Secretaries of State had to say in regard thereto in their instructions and letters to ministers of ours serving abroad.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Always to the gentleman.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the soldiers and sailors, the gentleman will recall that in our military appropriation bill of 1918 express authority was given those to accept such decorations.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Of course, I am not objecting to that. I am not discussing that; that does not come in this discussion at all.

Mr. CURRY of California. If the gentleman will yield further, the President of the United States is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman's contention is that the President has a right to accept any gift from any foreign State or king or prince because of that statutory provision? I doubt that very much. I do not recall the provisions of that statute now——

Mr. CURRY of California. Pershing, who is chief——

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will yield, the law provides that they may receive military decorations and that our Government in return can present to the officers and men of the foreign armies that cooperated with us such military decorations as we bestow.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I thank the gentleman for that explanation and that distinction. The costly gifts the President has been accepting can hardly be classed as military decorations.

Mr. McCULLOCH. If the gentleman will permit, I think the gentleman has opened up a very interesting question, and I would like to ask whether his brief brings up the question whether or not Congress has the power under the constitutional provision to enact such a law.

Mr. MASON. Yes; the Constitution provides for that.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Of course, Congress can give consent in particular cases. Now, the question the gentleman asks is whether Congress can by general statute give consent before the king, prince, or foreign state offers the gift?

Mr. McCULLOCH. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I have not investigated that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman want more time?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I would like to have five minutes more.

Mr. KAHN. I yield five minutes additional to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The gentleman has not answered my question. Have you made the distinction?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I did not look into that phase of it. I thought I had answered you.

Mr. McCULLOCH. It is a very interesting subject.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I shall print this brief in the extension of my remarks. It will give you the opinions of constitutional writers, United States Attorneys General, and Secretaries of State. Rawle in his work, "The Constitution," gives a reason for this constitutional inhibition. He says:

There can not be too much jealousy in respect to foreign influence. The treasures of Persia were successfully distributed in Athens; and it is now known that in England a profligate prince and many of his venal courtiers were bribed into measures injurious to the nation by the gold of Louis XIV.

And Watson, another eminent writer on the Constitution, cites the incident when Prince Henry of Prussia was here in 1902 and presented portraits to the Navy Department and to the academies at West Point and Annapolis, and also gave photographs to military and civil officers of the United States. These, however, according to the statute of 1881, were deposited with the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of State wrote a letter to the Attorney General and asked him whether it would be proper to turn these gifts over to the institutions and officers for whom the gifts were intended by Prince Henry. The Attorney General held that the Navy Department and these academies could accept them, because the constitutional inhibition did not apply to governmental institutions. But he said, as to these photographs, that the military and civil officers could not receive them. And the Attorney General calls special attention to the fact that Prince Henry of Prussia was only a titular prince and was not a sovereign exercising any power whatever. The Constitution prohibits the acceptance of a gift of any kind whatever from any prince or any king or any foreign State.

This same ruling has been followed by Attorney General Wickersham as applying to a postal clerk of the fourth class down here in the Post Office Department, whom the Emperor of Germany offered to decorate, and the question was raised in the case of a field assistant here in the Geological Survey, a Prof. Udden, who was decorated by the King of Sweden with the Order of the Knighthood of the North Star. In this case Prof. Udden was permitted to receive the decoration, for the simple reason that he was only working for the Geological Survey by the day, had never taken an oath of office, and was not held to be an officer of the United States.

Wharton on International Law goes on and discussess the same proposition. And I want to tell you, also, besides the Attorneys General of the United States always construing these provisions strictly, so also has every Secretary of State. I here call your attention to a quotation from John Quincy Adams, in his instructions, as Secretary of State, to our minister in Great Britain, where he says:

It is expected by the President that every offer of such present which may in future be made to any public minister or other officer of this Government abroad will be respectfully but decisively declined.

Daniel Webster, as Secretary of State, writing to Mr. Cushing, who was at that time minister to China, said:

The Chinese are apt to speak of persons coming into the Empire from other nations as tribute bearers to the Emperor. This idea has been fostered, perhaps, by the costly parade embassies of England. All ideas of this kind respecting your mission must, should they arise, be immediately met by a declaration, not made ostentatiously or in a manner reproachful toward others, that you are no tribute bearer; that your Government pays tribute to none and expects tribute from none; and that even as to presents your Government neither makes nor accepts presents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The following is the brief to which I have referred:

PRESENTS TO PUBLIC OFFICIALS OF THE UNITED STATES.

The Washington Post of Sunday, December 29, 1918, carried the following news item on the front page:

"KING SENDS WILSON FINE SET OF BOOKS AS BIRTHDAY GIFT.

[By the Associated Press.]

"LONDON, December 28.

"President Wilson celebrated to-day his sixty-second birthday by a round of official activities. King George presented him with a magnificent set of books, and at the same time gave gifts to every member of the President's official party."

This present from King George to President Wilson is in plain violation of Article I, section 9, paragraph 8, of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no person holding any office of trust or profit under them, shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state."

The reference to this paragraph of the Constitution in Madison's Constitutional Convention is found in volume 2, pages 234 and 235, and is as follows:

"Mr. Pinckney urged the necessity of preserving foreign ministers and other officers of the United States independent of external influence and moved to insert after Article VII, section 7, the clause following: 'No person holding any office of profit or trust under the United States shall, without the consent of the legislature, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state which passed nem: contrad:"

The only comment made in Hamilton's Federalist on this paragraph is found on page 274, as follows:

"The prohibition with respect to titles of nobility is copied from the Articles of Confederation, and needs no comment."

Rawle, in his work, The Constitution, pages 119 and 120, makes the following comment:

"'No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States or by any individual State.' Of this there could have been but little danger. The independent spirit of republicans leads them to contemn the vanity of hereditary distinctions, but the residue of the clause is more important. 'No person holding any office of trust or profit under the United States shall, without the consent of Congress, accept any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign State.'

"There can not be too much jealousy in respect to foreign influence. The treasures of Persia were successfully distributed in Athens; and it is now known that in England a profligate prince and many of his venal courtiers were bribed into measures injurious to the nation by the gold of Louis XIV."

Story, in his work on Constitutional Law, section 1352, has this to say on the last part of this paragraph:

"The other clause, as to acceptance of any emolument, title, or office from foreign governments is founded in a just jealousy of foreign influence of every sort. * * * A patriot will not likely be seduced from his duties to his country by the acceptance of any title or present from a foreign power. * * * Still, however, the provision is highly important, as it puts out of the power of any officer of the Government to wear borrowed honors, which shall enhance his supposed importance abroad by a titular dignity at home."

Watson on the Constitution. Vol. I, page 760.

"When Prince Henry of Prussia visited the United States, in 1902, he made presents of portraits to the Navy Department and Military and Naval Academies, and of photographs to several civil and military officers of the United States. Prince Henry was not occupying a throne, but was a titular prince. The question was submitted by an officer of the Government to the Attorney General whether the constitutional prohibition prevented the acceptance of these presents. The Acting Attorney General held that, although Prince Henry was only a titular prince, an acceptance of a present from him would come within the prohibition; he also held that, as the Constitution forbids any person holding any office under the United States from accepting any present, emolument, office, or title, the prohibition did not apply to a department of the Government nor to governmental institutions. The opinion went further and held that even a simple remembrance of courtesy, which from motives of delicacy recognizes our policy, like the photographs in this case, falls under the inclusion of any present of any kind whatever."

See also 24, Op. A. G., 117–118. Acting Attorney General Henry M. Hoyt.

In 1909 the Secretary of State received an insignia of the third class of the Order of the Red Eagle, conferred by the German Emperor to deliver to a clerk of class 4 in the Post Office Department. Attorney General George W. Wickersham in an opinion held (27 Op. A. G., 219–21):

"That the Secretary of State would not be justified, without authority of Congress therefor, in delivering an insignia which had been conferred upon this officer of the United States by the German Emperor. The opinion is clear that a present can not be made to any officer of the United States, 'unless authority be first obtained by act of Congress.'"

In 1911 the question arose whether Prof. Udden, a field assistant in the United States Geological Survey, could accept from the King of Sweden the order of the Knighthood of the North Star, which that sovereign had conferred upon him, in view of Article I, section 9, paragraph 8 of the United States Constitution. Attorney General Wickersham (28 Op. A. G., 298) held that as his duties were not continuous, being employed by the day, only occasional work, and no oath of office was taken by him, "there is nothing in the Constitution or laws to prevent the acceptance by Prof. Udden of the order conferred upon him by the King of Sweden."

Wharton's International Law Digest, Volume I, has the following:

1. Daniel Webster, Secretary of State, to Mr. Cushing, May 8, 1843, pages 446–447:

"The Chinese are apt to speak of persons coming into the Empire from other nations as tribute bearers to the Emperor. This idea has been fostered perhaps by the costly parade embassies of England. All ideas of this kind respecting your mission must, should they arise, be immediately met by a declaration, not made ostentatiously or in a manner reproachful toward others, that you are no tribute bearer; that your Government pays tribute to none and expects tribute from none; and that even as to presents, your Government neither makes nor accepts presents."

2. J. Q. Adams, Secretary of State, to Mr. Rush, November 6, 1917, page 757:

"It is expected by the President that every offer of such present which may in future be made to any public minister or other officer of this Government abroad will be respectfully but decisively declined."

3. Mr. McLane, Secretary of State, circular, January 6, 1834, page 757:

"I am directed by the President to instruct the ministers, consuls, and other diplomatic and commercial agents of the United States that it is required of them that in future they will not, unless the consent of Congress shall have been previously obtained, accept, under any circumstances, presents of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign State."

4. Other Secretaries of State give similar opinions on pages 758 and 759.

Mr. CLARK of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DILLON].

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, for many years South Dakota has maintained a board of railroad commissioners. These commissioners are elected by the people, they are responsible to the people, and the people of our State have absolute confidence in their efficiency and integrity. These commissioners have for many years been instrumental in securing for the people of our State a reduction in freight, passenger, and express rates. Recently the Director General of Railroads promulgated a new schedule of express rates as applied to interstate shipments. This new schedule interferes with the intrastate express rates of my State. When this schedule was about to go into effect, the railroad commissioners of my State brought suit against the officials and sought to enjoin them from putting into effect this new schedule, which would interfere with the intrastate rates in South Dakota.

When the case came on for trial there appeared in a luxurious, specially equipped, private car three attorneys representing the Public Service Corporation, who sought to impress their argument on the court that these intrastate rates could be set aside. They thus interfered with the domestic affairs of our State. To show the extent that our people resented this interference in our internal affairs and the extravagance in the use of private cars, the legislature of the State, being in session, passed a resolution condemning the action of these paid attorneys, coming there under the circumstances in an equipped, luxurious car as a wanton waste of expenditure of public money, and condemned their activities in interfering with the affairs of our State.

As a part of my remarks, I desire to have read in my time the resolution so passed by the legislature.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paper referred to will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF SOUTH DAKOTA,
SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

I, C. A. Burkhart, secretary of state, do hereby certify that the annexed concurrent resolution was duly passed by the sixteenth session of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of South Dakota, at the city of Pierre, January 31, 1919.

[SEAL.] C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State.

Hon. C. A. BURKHART,
Secretary of State:

The following concurrent resolution has been adopted by the senate and concurred in by the house of representatives:

Concurrent resolution.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring):

Whereas the Government of the United States as a war-emergency measure took over the control of several great public-service corporations, including the railroads and express companies of our country, and placed them in charge of a Director General of Railroads; and

Whereas our Government did at the same time urge upon our people the great necessity of saving and conserving in private and business affairs, and asked our people, even the widows and orphans, to save their mite to buy liberty bonds and war-saving stamps for the support of the Government and its different departments in its conduct of the war, including the railroads and express companies; and

Whereas our people have generously responded to every request made, and whereas it has now come to the attention of our people that three paid representatives of one of the said great public-service corporations have come to the city of Pierre in a luxuriously equipped private car at a great and unnecessary expense for the express purpose of opposing in our courts the action of our board of railroad commissioners wherein they are representing the interests of our people in seeking to prevent what appears to be an unwarranted, unlawful, and unjust raise in express rates, which are sought to be put into effect under the guise of Government control and with the apparent approval of the Director General of Railroads: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That we do condemn such unwarranted extravagance as unpatriotic, disloyal, and undemocratic, and that we do hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to enact such laws as will effectually and permanently protect the American people from unfair and extortionate rates, whether imposed upon them by private corporations owning and operating such public utilities or under Government management and control of the same, thereby rendering to the people that reasonable and efficient service to which they are rightfully entitled, free alike from unreasonable governmental control or from corporate or individual oppression.

For the Senate:

C. S. AMSDEN,
President pro tempore.
A. B. BLAKE,
Secretary.

For the House:

LEWIS BENSON,
Speaker.
WRIGHT TARBELL,
Chief Clerk.

Dated at Pierre, S. Dak., this 28th day of January, A. D. 1919.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, on February 5 I made some remarks concerning conditions found at Newport News and vicinity and referred to corrals in which several thousand horses were kept. My remarks are found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 5, commencing on page 2774. I append a communication received from R. E. Wood, brigadier general, United States Army, Director of Purchase and Storage, giving his version of these conditions. I ask unanimous consent to have it printed as an extension of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota asks unanimous consent to have the matter indicated printed as an extension. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The communication referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
Washington, February 7, 1919.

Hon. CHARLES H. DILLON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I note your speech with reference to conditions at Newport News, which appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 5.

While the majority of the matters you treated in this speech are not under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster Corps, the corrals and remount stations are. I am attaching, for your information, copy of reports from Col. Scott, inspector of the remount division.

To enable you to understand the situation it will be necessary to state that the remount station at Newport News was not intended to keep animals any length of time. It was used as an embarkation depot, pure and simple. Animals were brought there to be shipped to Europe and, as a rule, were held in the corrals only a few weeks. At the time of the armistice we were shipping fifteen to twenty thousand animals per month.

The corrals were all right during the dry season, but during the rainy season they were very muddy. At the same time, the sheds are well-drained and dry on the inside, and the animals have an opportunity to lie down.

Just as soon as the armistice was declared this department requested authority from the General Staff to sell off the surplus animals, and when authority was received we advertised and began the sales. As you will note in Col. Scott's report, there were 4,300 animals in the corrals at the time of your visit. Twenty-two hundred were sold on February 3, 4, and 5. These animals were in good condition, as evidenced by the prices realized at the sale, which were exceedingly good. Fifteen hundred are to be sold on the 26th, which will leave about 600 animals, for which there is stable room. In other words, no animals need be kept in corrals after February 26.

While it in no way concerns me, I noticed a statement in your speech which is incorrect, and I assume that you will be glad to have your attention called to it. I happen to know personally Capt. L. G. Thom, whom you mention as being assistant executive officer and a brother-in-law of one of the Ferguson brothers. Capt. Thom is in no way connected with the Fergusons. He married a sister of Col. Altstaetter.

Very truly, yours, R. E. WOOD,
Brigadier General, United States Army,
Director of Purchase and Storage.

To: Remount Division, O. Dir. P. & S., room 1064, Munitions Building, Potomac Park.
Subject: Inspection of Animal Embarkation Depot, Newport News, Va., December, 1918.

1. I report that I inspected the animal embarkation depot, Newport News, Va., December 27, 28, 29, and 30. This depot was in excellent condition.

2. I especially investigated the shortage of water supply, which was due to exceptionally dry weather. Recent rains have relieved this situation; also, the British remount depot at this place has sold 5,000 animals, and 1,300 have been shipped out from this depot. This also will largely reduce the amount of water being used. There was no necessity for shipping animals out to be sold at other points, and I recommended that animals be held at Newport News and sold at that place during January, February, and March.

3. Due to rains the corrals were quite muddy, but cleaning was progressing daily, and the animals were being shifted from corral to corral, in order to provide as dry corrals as possible. The sheds in each corral were dry and provided suitable shelter for animals during the rain.

4. The animals were in excellent condition.

Lieutenant Colonel, Quartermaster Corps.

FEBRUARY 6, 1919.

From: Lieut. Col. Charles L. Scott, Quartermaster Corps.
To: Remount Division, Office Director of Purchase and Supplies, Room 1064, Munitions Building, Potomac Park.
Subject: Inspection of animal embarkation depot, Newport News, Va., February 5, 1919.

1. I submit the following report of inspection of the animal embarkation depot, Newport News, Va., which I made February 5, 1919:

(a) Due to recent rains, corrals are quite muddy. This is a temporary and not a permanent condition. There are 31 corrals in the depot proper, of which 21 have been in constant use. Two excellent corrals belonging to the veterinary hospital, which are located on high ground, were turned over to the depot and put in use on January 27, 1919. These corrals had been used for contagious diseases, and several careful disinfections of same had to be made in addition to removing much loose earth. These corrals were vacant during these disinfections, and they are the only good corrals that have not been constantly in use.

(b) The 10 corrals now in use are located on low and poorly drained ground, 6 of them being receiving corrals along the railroad track and unloading chutes.

(c) Of the 23 good corrals, 13 have been necessary to care for animals, thus leaving 10 vacant. These vacant corrals are then cleaned and drained and animals are shifted from the 13 corrals that are occupied as conditions may warrant.

(d) Sheds are located in all of these 23 corrals and provide ample shelter in bad weather for the animals in these corrals. They are generally well drained and dry on the inside.

(e) All feed and hay racks are located outside of sheds. The ground on each side of the hayracks in occupied corrals is graded and generally well drained and provides good footing for the animals while being fed.

(f) The animals of this depot are fat and in excellent condition. Four thousand two hundred and forty-three animals were at this depot on February 1. There are now only 72 animals receiving treatment in the hospital, 50 per cent of which are old cases of injuries received in shipment.

(g) Sale of 2,200 animals was conducted on February 3, 4, and 5, 1919. This leaves about 2,000 animals in the depot, 1,500 of which will be sold February 26, 1919. After this sale stable facilities will be available for all animals remaining at the depot.

(h) The general condition of this depot and the animals in it is very good, and from all reports and records it is better than it has ever been before under similar weather conditions.

CHARLES L. SCOTT.
Lieutenant Colonel, Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire in that time to have read by the Clerk a statement which is contained in a letter recently received by the parents, at Detroit, Mich., of a sergeant in the service of the United States with our troops in the north of Russia. There is a great interest in Michigan, as elsewhere, in the American expedition now in the north of Russia, and I think that, with other comments, this expression, which comes from one of the soldiers there, is of particular interest. I ask that the Clerk read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the clipping indicated will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The success of American armies in wars of the past has been attributed to the fact they always have had a complete knowledge and understanding of the principles for which they were fighting. This is not true of this expedition which has been sent to Russia. We are absolutely ignorant of any cause for being here, and we appeal to the folks at home to enlighten us.

If we are here to improve conditions of the Russians and to destroy bolshevism, which we must admit is a dangerous institution, does it not seem right the Russians should assist us? But they refuse to go to the front and fight with us.

We were actually compelled to turn our machine guns on a body of them the other day—Russians who had enlisted in the British Army and refused to obey commands to move to the front. Does it seem right we should sacrifice our lives for men who refuse to assist us in establishing peace in their own country?

We are here under English command. Every move we make is controlled by England, and we are living on English rations, which consist mostly of canned stew and tea. I don't want you to feel that being in doubt is lessening my fighting spirit any. I am ready at all times to give my life for my flag and my country. But all we ask is that you assist in convincing us that this expedition is justified.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield back any time I may have remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back the remainder of his time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, here is a new one on me. There has been a good deal of complaint about the inability of boys in the Army to get their applications for discharge acted upon at all, and more complaint about their inability to get them acted upon favorably, where the conditions would all seem to indicate that the applications ought to be granted. But out at Fort Logan H. Roots, Ark., they have a new commanding officer, who turned back all the applications in effect and issued an order to the effect that all men applying for a discharge must have a letter from the Red Cross secretary stating the reason. In other words, it was not sufficient for these men to present applications and affidavits from doctors, dependents, employers, or anybody else, but, having done that, they must get the Red Cross secretary to give the reasons why, in the judgment of the Red Cross secretary, the man ought to be discharged.

I have here a very appealing letter, not addressed to me, from one of the men out there seeking to obtain from the Red Cross secretary at Chicago reasons why he should be discharged. Evidently that man has great faith in the Red Cross.

The War Department here does not seem to have as much faith in the judgment of the Red Cross. The War Department in its files here has information probably of thousands and thousands of cases where men have been killed or wounded in France; and yet if you ask for information from the Red Cross, which they have and will be glad to give, they are ordered by the War Department not to give the information unless the War Department has already given it out.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. DILLON. I will state that I had a communication from the War Department quite recently, referring me to the Red Cross to get information as to the death or whereabouts of one of the soldiers.

Mr. MANN. I understand they refer to the Red Cross, but the Red Cross is forbidden to give the information unless the War Department has previously given it out themselves. Upon receipt of the information by the War Department that a man has been killed or wounded or is missing, the Red Cross is notified, and is thereupon permitted to furnish the relatives of the soldiers with whatever additional information it has. For months the Red Cross here in Washington has been in possession of information about men in the Army, either wounded or dead, which they were not permitted by the War Department to give out to the families. One man in the Red Cross has had on his desk as many as 500 obituary letters sent by Red Cross representatives in the hospitals in France to the families of men who have died, sending the information through the Red Cross, and yet they were not permitted to forward these letters to the families or to give the information which they received from their own representatives.

That is true also of the wounded, although in some cases that rule has been violated by the Red Cross officials. I may say if I were running the Red Cross I would tell the War Department to go to sin with such an order. [Applause.] If I had the information from Red Cross representatives in hospitals in France that a soldier boy was lying there wounded, or that he had died and had been buried, I would give that information to the mother or the wife of the soldier over here, whether the War Department liked it or not. [Applause.]

Of course the claim of the War Department is that mistakes will occur; that men of the same name are in the Army, and that a man by the name of John Smith may be reported dead, but it is not the John Smith that some particular person is interested in. But I am inclined to think from the information we have had that the reports of the Red Cross upon the subject in the main are more reliable than the reports that come from the War Department.

I think it is a shame that the mother who has given her boy in France, where he has been killed, and who walks the floor, as many of them do, night after night in worry, can not receive the information which would at least allay that much of her sorrow and anxiety.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Everybody agrees with the gentleman in his criticism, except as to the Red Cross. Now, the Red Cross people, as I understand it, are under the Army, and if they——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KAHN. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If they were to disobey these orders, it might mean that their opportunities for the great services they have rendered would be seriously curtailed by further order of the War Department.

Mr. MANN. That is their fear. I have no doubt, however, that if they disobeyed the order, the order would be revoked. The War Department can not defend such a thing before the American people.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Absolutely not.

Mr. MANN. They can defend it in secret. As long as it is not known it can be enforced. If the war were to continue now, it would not be in force for 30 days longer.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. That is true; but the Red Cross might be seriously handicapped in the great good it is doing if it should run counter to the orders of the War Department.

Mr. MANN. I am not disposed to criticize the Red Cross. If I appeared to do so, I did not mean to do it.

The other day I referred to a letter from Judge Walter I. McCoy, for many years a very valued and valuable Member of this House, now a justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, concerning the marking of the graves in France. I was glad to have some of the gentlemen here who had been over in France where the boys are buried state that those graves were well marked, and I hope that is true in all cases. Undoubtedly it was true of the cases referred to by the gentlemen here. This is what Justice McCoy says:

I am informed by one who has just returned from France, where he visited the grave of my son, that it is marked by a wooden cross on which was "written," without the Christian name or initials, simply "Lieut. McCoy, 39," and that the writing was nearly effaced by the rain. My informant tells me that he rewrote the name, so that it probably will not be obliterated, and wrote my name and address on the cross as an added precaution. * * *

Fearing the loss of identity, I endeavored several months ago through a French lady who was good enough to take an interest in the matter to have a simple stone placed on my son's grave, but she was told by the American Graves Registration Service that this would not be permitted.

Of course, I suppose Judge McCoy does not know anything further than the information furnished to him, which was that a friend of his visited the grave, found the name of his son written on the cross over the grave nearly effaced, and his friend rewrote it. A photograph just received by Judge McCoy, showing the grave of his son at Pierrefonds, discloses that the crosses marking the burial places of the American soldiers bear simply cards, which appear to be tacked upon the wood.

A great many of the boys who died abroad probably never will be brought home. They may be given a resting place there which will be entirely satisfactory and altogether suitable; but a great many will be brought home, and the relatives and friends of the boys whose remains are brought home do not want any unnecessary uncertainty as to the identity of the remains. It will be a crime if the Government of the United States has so marked those graves that the names will become obliterated, and if it becomes known in the country later that while they may bring a coffin with some remains to the mother or wife, no one knows whose remains are in the coffin.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have understood, though I can not vouch for the accuracy of it, because I have had it from no official source, that a diagram was kept of the burial plats, the graves being numbered upon that diagram, and the names set opposite the numbers. I say I can not vouch for it, because I have heard it from no official source.

Mr. MANN. That may be true. I will say this: I raise a great many flowers. One of the greatest difficulties in the world is to keep them properly labeled and to know what their names are. I have nearly a thousand different varieties of one sort of flower. There is a plat which shows where every one of them is planted. They are all labeled, most of them with two labels; and yet it is the hardest thing in the world not to get them mixed up at times. But there ought to be no mixing up of these graves over there, not to any extent, at least. Everything ought to be done to give the people confidence that the identity of these dead soldiers is being preserved. We have given those people enough money. If they will use common sense, there will be no trouble about it at all. If they do not, God help them. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska use some of his time?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, the specter of Bolshevism is haunting the world. Everybody—statesman, business man, preacher, plutocrat, newspaper editor—keeps on warning the world that it is about to be destroyed by Bolshevism. A few days ago a preacher who brought to the pulpit the slang of the barroom orated against it. The chairman of the Republican congressional committee put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD remarks which he had delivered before the Chamber of Commerce in Pittsburgh, in which he warned them of the danger of Bolshevism.

A meeting was held in Washington at which a number of Members of Congress were present. At the meeting two newspaper reporters said the things that they had been saying in the press for more than a year—things that had been published in a number of metropolitan papers, that had been published in a number of newspapers in England. One of the typical plutocratic sheets of America, the Washington Post, immediately proclaimed that the country was in danger; that within the shadow of the Washington Monument people were permitted to speak things which were not popular; that within the shadow of the Washington Monument a young man and a young woman dared to say things which were contrary to the policy of that plutocratic sheet. But the worst of it is that every movement, every new idea, every new suggestion, every new thought that is advanced is immediately denounced as Bolshevism. It is not necessary to argue any more with a man who advances a new idea; it is enough to say "That is Bolshevism." Socialism, anarchism, nihilism, all these are presented as one thing.

There is an investigation going on in another body as to what Bolshevism stands for. I would like to see an investigation as to whether there exists a conspiracy to suppress freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of assembly.

The war is over and still we have not repealed the espionage act or the so-called sedition bill. It never was an espionage act. No man would ever vote against a bill which punished a spy. There is no more damnable crime than spying in a time of war, but what they call the espionage bill is a bill to check, regulate, and control speech, control the press, and to control thought. Hundreds and thousands of men are lingering in jail to-day because they dared express views which were unpopular in time of war. Hundreds and thousands of men are in jail to-day because they dared proclaim a political philosophy which ran contrary to the philosophy of the moment.

Mr. QUIN. Does not the gentleman think they ought to be there if they violated the law?

Mr. LONDON. First, the gentleman ought to ask if I yield. There was an old sedition law in the eighteenth century, a sedition law which cost the political party responsible for it its life. Under that old sedition law only 11 persons were tried, if the gentlemen will examine the records. The maximum penalty under that old law was two years' imprisonment and a fine of a thousand dollars. The only substantial fine imposed under the sedition law was ordered returned by the subsequent Congress.

Under the existing law the penalty is 20 years of imprisonment and a fine of $10,000. I can understand why the fine was fixed at $10,000 instead of $1,000; we are now 10 times as rich; but why should it be 20 years instead of 2 except that we appreciate liberty to only one-tenth the extent it was appreciated then. [Laughter.]

You ought to know how difficult it is to try a political case before a jury in time of war. Take the average Republican or Democratic Members of Congress. They are men above the average intelligence; they are the best men of their districts. Some of them are not even politicians, because they have no time to dabble in politics; but still if you put six Republicans and six Democrats, Members of Congress, on a jury to determine whether a Socialist was right in expressing certain views, I do not know whether they would be capable of reaching an impartial decision because Republicans and Democrats are totally ignorant of what socialism is. All they know is that it is unpopular in their districts. Take the average business man, the retired banker, the grocer, the shoe manufacturer; take the crowd the Security League has assembled together and have them decide whether certain utterances were lawful or unlawful, whether they tended to increase or reduce profits, whether they tended to overturn society, and they are sure to decide the case as their prejudices and ignorance determine.

Whatever excuse there might have been for that law during the war, there is no excuse for continuing it to-day.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman think we ought not to have any legal method of punishing the man who advocates the overthrow of this Government by methods of violence?

Mr. LONDON. My dear sir, the man who advocates the overthrow of a government by violence puts himself outside of the pale of law. The man who believes in the overthrow of anything by violence, that is not socialism; and I am opposed to the use of violence in any form.

That is why as a Socialist I have voted against war. I do not believe in the healing efficacy of violence and war. I do not believe that by putting a million men against a half million men and killing the half million men you establish any moral or ethical principle. You merely establish the fact that a million men commanded by better generals and supplied with better artillery are stronger than half a million men commanded by weaker generals and supplied with weaker artillery. As a Socialist I oppose the use of physical violence, and that is why I condemn those slanderers and ignoramuses who seek to confuse the life-giving philosophy of Socialism, which seeks to apply the noblest principles of religion to the actualities of life—that is why I condemn those who seek to confuse the philosophy of Socialism with the theory of violence.

Mr. SUMNERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. I fully respect the gentleman's views, but I want to ask this question: Does he believe in meeting violence with violence? What are you going to do when a man comes at you with a gun? I ask that for information.

Mr. LONDON. That will lead me away from the subject.

Mr. SUMNERS. Then I withdraw the question.

Mr. LONDON. I am not a believer in nonresistance, but that would take me away from the subject. I would refer the gentleman to Tolstoy for those things. I am not a believer in nonresistance. The doctrine of nonresistance has been preached for 2,000 years and the opposite of it has been practiced during those 2,000 years. The gentleman can find better authority than I am upon that subject and more binding authority.

The man who advocates the overthrow of government by violence puts himself outside of the law. Countries which have permitted the widest possible latitude, so far as freedom of speech goes, have not been losers thereby. Take the English Government, for instance. Every anarchist was given a place of refuge in London. They have allowed them there to talk, and England has never had a single act of assassination, while Spain and Italy, where they have had rigorous restrictive laws relating to the freedom of assemblage, have had all sorts of anarchistic attempts, because violence on the part of the Government breeds violence on the part of the people.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. I understand from the gentleman's answer to my question that he does favor a law that would prohibit a man from advocating the overthrow of this Government by violence?

Mr. LONDON. Or the overthrow of any government by violence, except to this extent—to the extent which is embodied in the American Declaration of Independence, that the people in their collective capacity reserve the right to overthrow a government which has usurped powers which do not belong to it. Of course, that is a fundamental principle, to which the gentleman subscribes, I am sure.

Mr. BLACK. If we are in agreement on that, does the gentleman know of any law that we have on the statute books that would prevent him or any other man from advocating his doctrines of socialism?

Mr. LONDON. Oh, that is exactly what is happening. What has taken place under the so-called espionage law is that men are being prosecuted and persecuted, very often by well-meaning officers, because to those officers the doctrines which the accused advocate seem to be subversive of well-ordered society. In other words, their doctrines are unpopular, their doctrines are misunderstood. Let me give the gentleman this illustration: During the campaign of 1916 the Democrats gained popularity by proclaiming the slogan, "He kept us out of war." The Republicans avoided the issue. In October, however, the National Hughes Alliance published an advertisement over the names of 27 prominent citizens, including ex-Presidents Roosevelt and Taft, Joseph H. Choate, Robert T. Lincoln, and Elihu

Root. The statement dealt with the Mexican situation. It contained, among other things, the following declaration:

"Our business is business. Year by year it becomes more apparent that the markets of the world must be kept open to American industries. We can not extend our trade further than we are able to defend it. The rivalries that begin in commerce end on battle fields. The history of war is green with international jealousies. Every great conflict in modern times had its origin in some question of property rights. We are now universal competitors and are destined to grow constantly stronger rivals for a power which other people will not surrender without a trial of wit and will and, if need be, force," and so forth.

That statement was signed by prominent Republican statesmen and is substantially true; there is no doubt about that; but if the very same things were said by a Socialist—if a Socialist were to say that most wars are caused by the clash of the economic interests of nations and are primarily business wars—it would have led him, of course, in some States to the gallows and in other places to jail after indictment and trial by prejudiced men.

If I had time, I would have no difficulty in explaining to the gentleman that what is known as bolshevism is a stage in a revolution which may continue for several years. It is a stage in a struggle incident to Russian life. No other nation in the world has or has had similar conditions. A people stretching over a territory one-sixth of the world's surface, European Russia constituting one-half of Europe, Asiatic Russia being one and a half times as great as the whole of Europe, contending——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes additional.

Mr. LONDON. I thank you. Contending with the evil wrought by a most abominable system of monarchism, where every aspiration of the people was suppressed, where the only reward the noble men and women of Russia received from their Government during the last 50 years was exile to Siberia and death on the scaffold—in this land, where revolution was the only way out, the contest for true democracy was bound to assume a revolutionary character. And then Russia has had peculiar economic institutions. So, for instance, in the greater part of European Russia the peasants look upon collective ownership of land as the only proper form of land ownership, and naturally when in a country like that a revolution takes place——

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Let me develop this argument. There the principle of collective ownership of land flows out of their life, and while it may appear to be subversive in a country where individualism prevails, over there it is merely the next stage in the evolution of the people. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman has read, of course, the constitution of the Soviets?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does not that constitution first prohibit the private ownership of land, and then provide that the owner of the land when dispossessed could not be paid anything whatsoever for his ownership? I take that to indicate that there is private ownership of land, because the constitution itself recognizes private ownership and provides that the Soviet States shall have the right to go out and dispossess them and pay nothing at all.

Mr. LONDON. If the gentleman would not have interrupted me——

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman approve of that?

Mr. LONDON. I should tell the gentleman this, that while the principle of the collective ownership of land exists among the people and is a part of the very psychology of the revolution, only 12 per cent of the land was owned collectively and 88 per cent was owned individually, by large estates, by the church, and by the Czar's family. Now, the gentleman knows that the history of modern England began with the division of land of England among the generals who invaded and conquered England. The feudal system of the rest of Europe was similar in origin, and as far as Russia is concerned, the feudal system of Russia was firmly established by Catherine II, to whom Byron referred as a Queen, spelling it "q-u-e-a-n."

It is easy to understand that there should be an attempt made in Russia to extend the principle of the collective ownership of land. Whatever form of government they may have now can not be considered the last and final form of government.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman approve that part of their constitution that confiscates private ownership, title to the land?

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman is a lawyer and will concede that the very basis of American real-property law is that the people collectively are the ultimate owners of the land. That is the very basis of American law, and it is on that principle that we exercise the right of eminent domain.

Mr. BLACK. I am interested to know if the gentleman approves of that article of the Soviet constitution which provides that the private owner of land shall be deprived of his title without compensation? That is a plain question.

Mr. LONDON. No. The principle adopted by the Socialist Party is that private owners shall be compensated. That is the principle adopted by the Socialist Party.

Mr. BLACK. I am talking about this constitution.

Mr. LONDON. The principle, I say, that the Socialists have adopted is that the private owner shall be compensated. I look upon the Soviet declaration as a revolutionary step taking place during an upheaval.

Mr. BLACK. Do you approve that doctrine or disapprove it?

Mr. LONDON. I have answered you that as a Socialist I would permit the compensation of the private landowner, but I would not permit the continuance of large estates. I would not permit the church to own one-tenth of the land for the purpose of communion with the Lord, because the Lord does not need it, and when the poor peasant, who has only one-half an acre, needs that ground in order to live on it and toil on it.

The question is not whether you and I approve the particular step taken by a revolutionary government or a particular constitution. I am distressed when a Democrat expresses hatred of the effort of the masses of Russia to liberate themselves. You can not advise them. I was opposed to the sending of Root as commissioner, and advised the President against it. I knew Root would not succeed. But in justice to him it must be said no one could have succeeded—not with 180,000,000 people in revolt. It took the little American Republic four years to establish a Constitution, and the Constitution was adopted in secret, and many a delegate left that constitutional convention in disgust, and, what is more, although they adopted the most wonderful document in the history of republics, they retained the curse of slavery, which subsequently cost America a million lives.

It took the French Republic six or seven years before they adopted a constitution by a majority of one vote, and then they did not dare to openly proclaim that they were establishing a republic, but they smuggled in the word "republic" by saying, "The President of the Republic shall be elected."

That was in the year 1878. See the slow progress of the world. The individual and the people collectively live through more in a year than it would take a generation to live through. The American people should treat with sympathy the effort of the great Russian masses—their groping for liberty and their striving for a better state of society.

Mr. ROSE. Only recently I saw published in one of our local papers in the city an alleged copy of a declaration made by some government in Russia, and it appeared to me as though it advocated public ownership in women.

Mr. LONDON. Let me say that——

Mr. ROSE. I would like to have the gentleman, while on the subject of Russia, to tell us about that.

Mr. LONDON. Russia occupies a territory about twice as large as the whole of Europe.

There was a meeting of prostitutes in San Francisco. That is in the United States of America. The prostitutes demanded certain rights. Now, suppose some cheap tory or some European aristocrat—and they have been doing it for decades, trying to make the American people and the American democracy appear ludicrous—would have exaggerated that meeting of prostitutes in San Francisco as a great national movement covering the United States. That is exactly what has been done by a press that seeks to exaggerate every little disagreeable thing that occurs in the revolution. I saw a reference to that in a syndicalist paper published in Switzerland.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Can the gentleman give me 15 minutes more?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. LONDON. I saw that incident referred to in a syndicalist paper published in Switzerland. They refer to that particular incident and mention some little town, a little local soviet, somewhere in the east of Europe, near Siberia. It is very likely that such a thing should have happened in revolutionary times.

Why, there was such a school of thought in France during the revolutionary days of the thirties. These are the excrescences, these are the exuberances, these are the absurdities, of revolutionary days.

And then let me say this to the gentleman: While this proclamation has shocked him so much, I wonder whether he has been equally shocked by the report of the ravages of unmention-able diseases under the best established methods of government? I wonder whether, when he read the report of the horrible effect of unmentionable diseases upon the youth of America, he did not ask himself the question whether, under our present state of society, millions of homes are destroyed, millions of children will be born abnormal because of the horrible effect of these diseases? The Soviet government has adopted a rather complex law dealing with the subjects of marriage and divorce.

The question is not whether their constitutions are good or bad. The question is whether the Russian people shall be permitted to solve their own problems in their own way.

Coming down to the fundamental proposition which I started out to develop, I ask you as a democratic Congress—using the word "democratic" in the broader sense, including Republicans, including all of you as Members of the House of Representatives—I ask you to repeal the obnoxious espionage law. I ask you to stop this unjust, unfair attack upon the Socialist philosophy. You can not crush it by force. Socialism seeks to apply the ethical principles of religion to life. Socialism seeks to substitute cooperation for competition wherever competition is hurtful to the interests of society. Socialism believes in the doctrine of evolution, of the power of education and of science. We are the advocates of the theory of evolution, and we do not want those who happen to be in the majority to use the physical, coercive, brutal power of the majority to suppress freedom of thought, freedom of the press, and freedom of assembly.

It is not necessary for me to repudiate the doctrine that the American Republic and the American people are the greatest in the world. Believing that this is the country of the greatest opportunity and of the greatest possibilities; that we are younger, stronger, more vigorous, more energetic than any other people; that we have larger opportunities which we have not yet utilized, I ask you not to fall asleep on your rights while other nations are now conquering new liberties. I do not want you to fritter away the liberty for which your fathers fought and for which heroes bled in the past. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make the suggestion to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that I have practically exhausted my time. I would like to know about how much longer we ought to run. I hope that we can close general debate to-night, with the exception of the time that the gentleman from California would like to have to-morrow.

Mr. KAHN. I have about an hour more to run this evening. I have time asked for to the extent of one hour.

Mr. DENT. Then I am going to make a suggestion. Of course, we can not arrange to conclude debate here in Committee of the Whole, but I am going to suggest that we remain until we finish that hour; and then I will ask, when we adjourn to-night, that the gentleman from California may have one hour to-morrow, and after that hour ask that general debate close.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve a few minutes for himself to-morrow?

Mr. DENT. I can get it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. When I said "for himself" I meant himself as a distributor.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman from Mississippi wishes some time, I am sure he could inform us very materially about mistakes that we have made in the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I can do that under the five-minute rule in case there should be any mistakes in the bill. I do not express any opinion on that, but I did want to submit a few observations under general debate, but I will not insist upon it. I will tell you what I want to talk about——

Mr. DENT. We have always been liberal in extensions of time, and I am perfectly willing to let the gentleman from Mississippi have the time he wishes under the five-minute rule, knowing that he never asks for an excessive allotment of time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the able and clever gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON], who is always interesting in his remarks, has made one of his characteristic addresses to the House, and has been followed with much interest by those who have been privileged to hear him. He has sought to impress upon us that in his opinion, as I understood him, the dangers of bolshevism are now threatening only the peoples of Russia, and that, as far as this great Nation is concerned, we need have no apprehension of those who preach the doctrines which he mentioned, nor should we be concerned with those who seek to overthrow or undermine our form of government. Soon the gentleman will be concluding a service in this branch of the National Legislature, a service in which he has added much of interest, at least, to the discussions of the various measures that have engaged our attention. But I think, in view of the expressions of opinion which we are accustomed to hear from the gentleman from New York, when his term of service is concluded, he not having been privileged to participate in that momentous conference now being held in France, he will find a fertile field in which to put into execution some of the recommendations which he seeks to have us heed, in the land of which he speaks, amongst the people of the great country of Russia; and he will find that the men who have caused the confusion there are men who have gone from this country, where, somehow, they have become imbued with the views they are attempting to put into practice over there, men like Lenine and Trotzky, who are attempting to formulate a government which apparently meets with the gentleman's approval and which he is holding up to us, the United States of America, as a pattern to be modeled after. With him as an assistant to the leaders of that element in Russia, with the experience he has had in legislation here, I doubt not that he will be able to give great aid in bringing peace and quiet once more amidst those troublous and troubled people.

We are approaching the conclusion of a great war which has tested our resources and our strength and our statesmanship to the utmost. I believe, sir, that we should see to it that one of the consequences of that war shall not be that we have weakened our institutions or impaired the value of our form of government, and I say, sir, we ought not to heed the suggestions of gentlemen who advocate doctrines such as have been preached, aye, even during the waging of the war, in violation of our laws. Men who have preached those doctrines and who have violated our laws have been punished when found guilty. The gentleman says that the espionage law should be repealed. I assume that the espionage law will be repealed when the treaty of peace shall have been concluded. I do not imagine that the gentleman from New York was seeking to prejudge the case of one of his fellow Socialists, or at least of one who believes in some of the principles which he advocates, who has been elected to serve in this branch of the Government during the next Congress. But if our trial by jury still maintains, if the protection of the courts is still in existence, that gentleman has had a trial by jury in the jurisdiction in which he resides, and has been found guilty; and clearly such utterances as he made during the war were not such as to unite our people in its prosecution or to assist our people in winning this important struggle. So I submit that the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] might well wait until the turmoil resulting from this struggle has somewhat abated, and that he might abide his soul in patience and console himself with the thought that nearly all of those who seek to revolutionize our form of government are those who have made a failure in revolutionizing or improving, according to their views, other forms of government. [Applause.] If our institutions and laws and the foundations upon which our Government is based have been sufficient to withstand the struggles through which we have gone in this crisis and in the contests and wars of the past, I submit, sir, there is no stronger hope to hold out to the peoples of the world who believe in a government of laws and not of men than that this Nation will in the future, as in the past, stand for this as the Government of liberty-loving people throughout the earth; and I have no patience with the Socialist, with the Bolshevik, or their apologists, who seek now to take advantage of the unrest in the world to advocate their doctrines and to excite our people to urge and advocate revolution or, if that is too strong a word, to advocate improvement or change under the guise of socialistic doctrines in our structure.

I believe we can continue to go along the avenues of the future under our present form of government and under our present laws, improved from time to time as conditions may arise. I am sure I speak the sentiments of the American people when I say we do not need at this time the urging or the recommendations of Mr. Lenine or of Mr. Trotzky—no, nor of the colleagues and associates of the gentleman from New York—in improving our conditions for the future. Many times, as I have listened to the gentleman from New York, who is an able man and a student of government, I have regretted that, since he has interested himself in problems of government, somewhere or somehow at the start he reached a switch which put him off upon a sidetrack, and that he has been chasing rainbows of glittering hue, and that he has not kept along the main line and associated himself with parties that believe in a government of laws under the Constitution of the United States as laid down by the fathers following the immortal truths of the Declaration of Independence. [Applause.]

This is no time nor are these the conditions under which to attempt to put into practice or to countenance the doctrine of bolshevism, to which the gentleman has referred.

I trust that the distinguished gentleman from New York when he retires to private life will see to it that, as far as he is able to, he will combat the tendency on the part of certain people to be beguiled by the preachings and teachings of these gentlemen who went from the East Side of New York and who found that they could do the things in Russia which they could only try to do in America; that he will seek to correct the apparent desire on the part of the people to be misled and befuddled by the doctrine such as the Russian Bolshevik disturbers urge and advocate. Let us see to it in the remaining days of this session, and those of us who have been sufficiently fortunate to be honored with election, in the next Congress that in meeting the problems that will confront us we shall seek to perpetuate the institutions of our Government, strengthen our laws, and make firm the great fragment of the human family and not to be diverted, misled, or beguiled by the soothing-sirup pronunciamentos which may be dealt out to us in doses from time to time by reformers, be they Socialists, anarchists, or others of their ilk. We ought to affirm and reaffirm, again and again, our allegiance to the Government of the United States of America, to its Constitution, and to its laws. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, recently the press of this country has been full of comment upon the action of the Secretary of War in granting wholesale pardons to a lot of so-called conscientious objectors, slackers, or, as they term themselves, political prisoners. These pardons were granted and these men were liberated from prison, were given full pay and an honorable discharge, although they had done everything possible to hinder and obstruct this Government in the prosecution of the war. There possibly may have been some meritorious cases among this large number, but if there were each case should have stood upon its own merits. We have witnessed this unusual procedure of liberating these so-called political prisoners and who were honorably discharged, while there still remained in the same prison over 3,500 prisoners, a great many of whom were sent there for trivial offenses, who at all times stood ready and willing to fight for their country. Some of these 3,500 were sent back here from France, some of them saw actual service on the battle field, and although they were there in prison probably for a short term they are not even considered, they are not pardoned, they are not given discharges and their full pay with mileage. At the same time we witness hundreds of thousands of the boys who are in the Army, both in the camps here in the United States and in foreign countries, who have stood ready and willing to fight for their country, who have asked and desire their discharge so that they may return home and take up their ordinary civil life, and are denied, while these so-called conscientious objectors are given preference over the boys who were not only willing to fight but worked for their country. Yet the Secretary of War is giving preference to these so-called conscientious objectors over these thousands of loyal Americans, who stood ready to pay the supreme sacrifice for liberty on the battle fields. What do these thousands of men in uniform think of Mr. Baker and of his assistants? What will the loyal American citizens not in uniform think of them, especially when they give preference to such men, who call themselves conscientious objectors, as Henry Layman? I hold in my hand a transcript of some of the testimony of the said Henry Layman when he was examined at Camp Funston, Kans. One of the questions which was asked him is as follows: "Read your Bible in Russian or American? Answer. In German." Please note the answer of this so-called conscientious objector. Do you think he is a good American citizen and should be given preference over our good loyal American boys who have fought upon the battle fields of France, who are now clamoring for their discharges? Again I quote from the testimony of this same man: "Question. If a negro were about to rape your mother and the only way that you could prevent it was to shoot him, and you had a gun, would you do it? Answer. No, sir." My God, my friends, what do you think of any department which would give a man of this character, who would make such an answer as this, preference over and above our good loyal American citizens?

My mails have been flooded with letters—and I presume every Member of this House has received them—attempting to set forth the bad treatment of these so-called political prisoners. The most of it is pure propaganda. If these men had complied with the law, they were amply protected in every way, but they did not see fit to comply with the law; on the contrary, they refused to do ordinary work, although the orders from the War Department did not compel them to wear uniforms.

I have here a statement of facts pertaining to conditions which arose between military authorities and conscientious objectors made by Eugene C. Brisbane, captain, Infantry, United States Army, on the 8th day of January, 1919, office of provost marshal, Camp Funston, Kans., which clearly sets forth the facts pertaining to these so-called conscientious objectors. The law and the regulations relating to conscientious objectors read as follows:

THE LAW AND REGULATIONS RELATING TO THE CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR.

1. In dealing with the class of men drafted into the Army known as religious objectors, we must consider the laws and regulations governing the service in that relation. Without regard to the early statutes exempting those who from religious teachings object to taking part in warfare in any form, the question as to what class or classes of men the legislature intended to include in the meaning of the term "conscientious objector" during the existing emergency may be clearly established by a reference to the statutes hereinafter briefly discussed.

Notwithstanding the fact that the highest duty to be performed by the individual citizens of a nation is a prompt response to the call in defense of the country, there is to be found among all peoples the religious fanatic who, because of his belief in a fixed creed, objects to participation in war in a combatant capacity. In time of peace this class of citizens enjoy all the rights and benefits of citizenship. They have no hesitancy in calling upon the police force in their communities to defend them against the lawless element when their rights or properties are subjected to trespass or criminal act, wherein they undergo danger to life and property. They freely use the courts of the land in the settlement of their controversies when it is known to them that the power of the courts is never stronger than the power of the sheriff to execute the decrees of the courts. This power is invariably represented by armed force whenever that force is required to carry into execution the orders of the court.

However, when the Nation is attacked by a well-organized military force, jeopardizing her peace and happiness and even the titles to properties, as well as the lives of her citizens, these religious fanatics who have enjoyed freedom, enforced only by armed strength on the part of their Government, demand exemption from duty with the colors in repeling invasion of her rights and homes, and expect their fellow citizens to defend them and their properties against the common enemy.

In times of national calamity, such as confronts us to-day, it is needless to say that the religious objector deserves no consideration whatever, as a class, that is not extended to all citizens alike. To discriminate among classes in the organization of a national force for the common defense is to create dissention and a division of forces within the Nation that bids fair to lead us to utter defeat through the breaking down of the morale of the people and their military forces.

Regardless of all that may be said against favoring a class or classes of the people by exemption from militia service, Congress saw fit, in section 59 of its act of June 3, 1916, known as the national defense act, enacted during peace times, to provide for the exemption from military service of a designated class in the following words:

"* * * all persons who because of religious belief shall claim exemption from military service, if the conscientious holding of such belief by such persons shall be established under such regulations as the President shall prescribe, shall be exempted from militia service in a combatant capacity; but no persons so exempted shall be exempt from militia service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be noncombatant."

It will be noted that a broad interpretation of this act would operate to release from combatant military service any and all men who claim exemption, and unless such regulations as prescribed by the President thereunder properly controlled the situation, every member of the Military Establishment would be at liberty to refuse to enter actual combat at any time he saw fit to set up his claim for exemption.

However, when the lawmakers were considering this subject under war conditions, they evidently deemed it advisable to change the law to make it applicable to bona fide claims only, and not to leave it to the dictates of the conscience of each individual soldier to establish his rights thereunder, and by section 4 of the act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, known as the draft act, it is provided:

"And nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organization; but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be noncombatant."

It is clear that Congress intended that this provision should only apply to members of well-recognized religious organizations existing at the time of the passage of this act, with a then existing creed or established principles forbidding the members thereof from participating in war in any form, and further, members of such organizations claiming exemption under this act were to be required to establish the fact that they live up to such creed or principles by individually entertaining religious convictions in accordance with the creeds of their various sects.

There is nothing in the law that could be construed to mean that any drafted man would be permitted to walk about the post or camp dressed in civilian clothing. However, the first instructions to the Army under the law exempted a certain class of men from wearing the uniform by the following telegram from the War Department to all division commanders, dated September 25, 1917:

"Secretary of War directs that selected Mennonites who report to your camp for duty be not forced to wear uniform, as question of raiment is one of the tenets of their faith."

On October 10, 1917, the following confidential letter was sent out to all division commanders:

"1. The Secretary of War directs that you be instructed to segregate the conscientious objectors in their divisions and to place them under supervision of instructors who shall be especially selected with a view of insuring that these men will be handled with tact and consideration and that their questions will be answered fully and frankly.

"2. With reference to their attitude of objecting to military service, these men are not to be treated as violating military laws, thereby subjecting themselves to the penalties of the Articles of War, but their attitude in this respect will be quietly ignored and they will be treated with kindly consideration. Attention to this connection is invited to a case where a number of conscientious objectors in one of our divisions when treated in this manner renounced their original objections to military service and voluntarily offered to give their best efforts to the service of the United States as soldiers.

"3. It is desired that after the procedure above indicated shall have been followed for a sufficient length of time to afford opportunity to judge of the results derived from it a report of the action taken and the results obtained under these instructions be submitted to the War Department by each division commander. As a result of the consideration of all these reports, further instructions will be issued by the Secretary of War as to the policy to be observed in the future in the case of conscientious objectors.

"4. Under no circumstances are the instructions contained in the foregoing to be given to the newspapers."

Notwithstanding the fact that the statute clearly defined the term "conscientious objector," the following confidential letter extended its meaning to include any soldier announcing personal scruples against war. This letter was dated December 19, 1917, and was addressed to all camp commanders except Camp Grant:

"1. The Secretary of War directs that until further instructions on the subject are issued 'personal scruples against war' should be considered as constituting 'conscientious objectors,' and such persons should be treated in the same manner as other 'conscientious objectors' under the instructions contained in confidential letter from this office dated October 10, 1917.

"2. Under no circumstances should these instructions be communicated to the newspapers."

Then, on March 11, 1918, the following letter was published to camp commanders:

"1. You are informed that instructions regarding the segregating of conscientious objectors contained in confidential letters from The Adjutant General of October 10 and December 19, 1917, should not be construed as requiring the mingling in one group of different classes of conscientious objectors, who for the good of the service may better be kept apart.

"2. Under no circumstances are the instructions contained in the foregoing to be given to the newspapers."

This letter was followed by an Executive order dated March 20, 1918, published by General Order No. 28, War Department, current series, containing the following:

"I hereby declare that the following military service is noncombatant service:

"(a) Service in the Medical Corps, whenever performed. This includes service in the sanitary detachment attached to combatant units at the front; service in the division sanitary trains composed of ambulance companies and field hospital companies, on the line of communications, at the base in France, and with the troops and at hospitals in the United States; also the service of supply and repair in the Medical Department.

"(b) Any service in the Quartermaster Corps in the United States may be treated as noncombatant. Also, in rear of zone of operations, service in the following: Stevedore companies, labor companies, remount depots, veterinary hospitals, supply depots, bakery companies, the subsistence service, the bathing service, the laundry service, the salvage service, the clothing renovation service, the shoe-repair service, the transportation repair service, and motor-truck companies.

"(c) Any engineer service in the United States may be treated as noncombatant. Also, in rear of zone of operations, service as follows: Railroad building, operations, and repair; road building and repair; construction of rear-line fortifications, auxiliary defenses, etc.; construction of docks, wharves, storehouses, and of such cantonments as may be built by the Corps of Engineers; topographical work; camouflage; map reproduction; supply-depot service; repair service; hydraulic service; and forestry service.

"2. Persons ordered to report for military service under the above act who have (a) been certified by their local boards to be members of a religious sect or organization as defined in section 4 of said act or (b) who object to participating in war because of conscientious scruples but have failed to receive certificates as members of a religious sect or organization from their local board will be assigned to noncombatant military service as defined in paragraph 1 to the extent that such persons are able to accept service as aforesaid without violation of the religious or other conscientious scruples by them in good faith entertained. Upon the promulgation of this order it shall be the duty of each division, camp, or post commander, through a tactful and considerate officer, to present to all such persons the provisions hereof, with adequate explanation of the character of noncombatant service herein defined and, upon such explanation, to secure acceptance of assignment to the several kinds of noncombatant service above enumerated; and whenever any person is assigned to noncombatant service by reason of his religious or other conscientious scruples he shall be given a certificate stating the assignment and reason therefor, and such certificate shall thereafter be respected as preventing the transfer of such persons from such noncombatant service to combatant service by a division, camp, post, or other commander under whom said person may thereafter be called to serve, but such certificate shall not prevent the assignment of such person to some other form of noncombatant service with his own consent. So far as may be found feasible by each division, camp, or post commander, future assignments of such persons to noncombatant military service will be restricted to the several detachments and units of the Medical Department in the absence of a request for assignment to some other branch of noncombatant service as defined in paragraph 1 hereof.

"3. On the 1st day of April, and thereafter monthly, each division, camp, or post commander shall report to The Adjutant General of the Army, for the information of the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War, the names of all persons under their respective commands who profess religious or other conscientious scruples as above described and who have been unwilling to accept, by reason of such scruples, assignment to noncombatant military service as above defined, and as to each such person so reported, a brief, comprehensive statement as to the nature of the objection to the acceptance of such noncombatant military service entertained. The Secretary of War will from time to time classify the persons so reported and give further directions as to the disposition of them. Pending such directions from the Secretary of War, all such persons not accepting assignment to noncombatant service shall be segregated, as far as practicable, and placed under the command of a specially qualified officer of tact and judgment, who will be instructed to impose no punitive hardship of any kind upon them, but not to allow their objections to be made the basis of any favor or consideration beyond exemption from actual military service which is not extended to any other soldier in the service of the United States.

"4. With a view to maintaining discipline, it is pointed out that the discretion of courts-martial, so far as any shall be ordered to deal with the cases of persons who fail or refuse to comply with lawful orders by reason of alleged religious or other conscientious scruples, should be exercised, if feasible, so as to secure uniformity of penalties in the imposition of sentences under articles of war 64 and 65 for the willful disobedience of a lawful order or command. It will be recognized that sentences imposed by such courts-martial, when not otherwise described by law, shall prescribe confinement in the United States disciplinary barracks or elsewhere, as the Secretary of War or the reviewing authority may direct, but not in a penitentiary; but this shall not apply to the cases of men who desert either before reporting for duty to the military authorities or subsequently thereto.

"5. The Secretary of War will review the sentences and findings of courts-martial heretofore held of persons who come within any of the classes herein described and bring to the attention of the President for remedy, if any be needed, sentences and judgments found at variance with the provisions hereof."

With a view to determining the mental condition of the conscientious objector, the following instructions were issued by the War Department on April 10, 1918:

"Referring to the instructions to have a psychological examination of all conscientious objectors made, which were contained in letter of March 6, 1918, the Secretary of War directs that all of these men whom the examination psychologists, for any reason, consider should receive further examination by a psychiatric specialist be examined by such a specialist. In all cases where psychiatric specialists recommend the discharge from service of such men for mental deficiency or derangement their discharge for the good of the service is authorized."

From the above letter it is to be observed that the conscientious objector is placed in a class entirely separate from other soldiers of the Army. Under existing regulations the disposition of mental defects is provided for.

Although all soldiers of the United States Army are at all times subject to the penalties to be imposed by the Articles of War, without the proper application of which discipline can not be maintained, the conscientious objector is exempted therefrom, and the attention of all commanders was called to the provisions of previous instructions by the following War Department letter of April 18, 1918:

"1. With reference to the Executive order dated March 21, 1918, published in General Orders No. 28, War Department, 1918, the Secretary of War directs the attention of all commanding officers to the provisions of paragraph 3 of this order, to the effect that no punitive hardship of any kind be imposed upon conscientious objectors who do not accept assignment to noncombatant service before their cases shall have been submitted to the Secretary of War, and instructions relating to their disposition shall have been issued by him."

On the same day the following memorandum from the Secretary of War to The Adjutant General was published:

"Mr. Keppel has brought to my attention the question raised in my absence as to whether men who accept service in noncombatant branches under the provisions of the President's Executive order shall be required to bear side arms.

"My judgment is that it should be contrary to the spirit of the order to require these men to bear arms if they can not conscientiously do so."

The side arms of a soldier, referred to in the above memorandum, consist of a belt, with bayonet and scabbard, worn, as a rule, to designate men on certain duties.

Extending further consideration and privileges to the conscientious objector on June 1, 1918, the following instructions were published by the War Department:

"1. By the terms of the presidential order of March 20, 1918, men reporting at the training camps under the provisions of the selective service law who profess conscientious scruples against warfare are given an opportunity to select forms of service designated by the President to be noncombatant in character. By direction of the Secretary of War, dated April 22, 1918, instructions were issued by this office April 27, 1918, to try by court-martial those declining to accept such noncombatant service; (a) whose attitude in camp is defiant; (b) whose sincerity is questioned; (c) who are active in propaganda.

"2. All other men who profess conscientious objections now segregated in posts and camps—i. e., those who, while themselves refusing to obey military instructions on the ground of conscientious scruples, religious or other, have given no other cause of criticism in their conduct, and all who have been or may be acquitted by such court-martial—shall be transferred to Fort Leavenworth. Orders for such transfers will be obtained from this office. The commanding officer, Fort Leavenworth, will keep these men segregated, but not under arrest, pending further instructions from this office.

"3. The same procedure shall be carried out as promptly as possible in the cases of men professing similar scruples who may report at posts or camps in the future.

"4. Under no circumstances will conscientious objectors otherwise qualified to perform military duty be discharged from their responsibilities under the selective service law, but the Secretary of War has constituted a board of inquiry, composed of a representative from the Judge Advocate's office (Maj. Richard C. Stoddard), chairman; Judge Julian W. Mack, of the Federal court; and Dean H. F. Stone, of the Columbia University Law School. It will be the duty of this board to interrogate personally each man so transferred. Such men as may be determined by this board to be sincere in their attitude and desirous of serving their country in any way within the limits of their conscientious scruples may be furloughed by the commanding officer, Fort Leavenworth, without pay, for agricultural service, upon the voluntary application of the soldier, under the authority contained in the act of Congress of March 16, 1918, and the provisions of General Order No. 31, 1918, provision being made:

"(1) That monthly report as to the industry of each person so furloughed shall be received from disinterested sources, and that the furlough shall terminate automatically upon receipt of report that he is not working to the best of his ability; and

"(2) That no person shall be recommended for such furlough who does not voluntarily agree that he shall receive for his labor an amount no greater than a private's pay, plus an estimated sum for subsistence if such be not provided by the employer. It is suggested that any additional amount which may be offered for the service of such men be contributed to the Red Cross.

"5. In exceptional cases the board may recommend furlough for service in France in the Friends' reconstruction unit.

"6. If there shall be any instances in which the findings of courts-martial at camps or posts in cases involving conscientious objectors shall be disapproved by the Secretary of War, the men concerned shall also be transferred to Fort Leavenworth and similarly examined and reported upon by the board of inquiry.

"7. Any man who is not recommended for furlough by this board, or who being offered such furlough shall refuse to accept it, or whose furlough shall be terminated for the reasons indicated above, or for other reasons deemed sufficient by the Secretary of War, shall be required to perform such noncombatant service as may be assigned to him, and shall be held strictly accountable under the Articles of War for the proper performance of such service and to strict obedience to all laws governing or applicable to soldiers employed in that status. In the event of disobedience of such laws or failure to perform such service, the offender shall be tried by court-martial, and if found guilty and sentenced to confinement shall be detained in the disciplinary barracks for the term of his sentence.

"8. Pending the final decision in each case, as to the disposal of these men, the directions as to their treatment issued from time to time by order of the Secretary of War remain in force. These may be summarized as follows:

"As a matter of public health, every man in camp, entirely apart from his military status, shall be expected to keep himself and his belongings and surroundings clean, and his body in good condition, through appropriate exercise. Men declining to perform military duties shall be expected to prepare their own food.

"If, however, any drafted man, upon his arrival at camp, either through the presentation of a certificate from his local board or by written statement addressed by himself to the commanding officer, shall record himself as a conscientious objector, he shall not, against his will, be required to wear a uniform or to bear arms; nor, if, pending the final decision as to his status, he shall decline to perform, under military direction, duties which he states to be contrary to the dictates of his conscience, shall he receive punitive treatment for such conduct.

"No man who fails to report at camp, in accordance with the instructions of his local board, or who, having reported, fails to make clear upon his arrival his decision to be regarded as a conscientious objector, is entitled to the treatment outlined above.

"In the assignment of any soldier to duty, combatant or noncombatant, the War Department recognizes no distinction between service in the United States and service abroad."

The instructions were supplemented on June 10 by the following:

"1. The following confidential instructions, supplemental to instructions from this office, June 1 and June 8 (18), 1918, are furnished for your information and guidance:

"2. The board of inquiry referred to in paragraph 4, letter of June 1, is authorized in exceptional cases to recommend furlough for the purpose of engaging in industrial occupations as well as to engage in agricultural work.

"3. Such recommendations will be dealt with in the same manner as is provided in orders with respect to agricultural work."

And on the same date instructions were issued, as follows, concerning the furloughs to be granted these men under circular letter of June 1, 1918:

"1. The following instructions relative to men furloughed to engage in agricultural work, pursuant to instructions from this office contained in circular letter (382.2 Disposition Misc. Div.), dated June 1, 1918, are published for the information of all concerned:

"2. The board referred to in paragraph 4 of the circular letter cited will visit such camps and cantonments at which conscientious objectors are now stationed or to which they may be transferred as the board deems proper for the purpose of conducting the examination referred to in the above-mentioned letter.

"3. The board will be given every facility and assistance to examine all persons claiming to be conscientious objectors, who have not been court-martialed and are not under charges, and, with the consent of the camp commander, such also as are under charges and have not yet been brought to trial.

"4. Furlough will be issued by the commanding officer of the respective camps at which the men to be furloughed are stationed, pursuant to the recommendations of the board. Such furlough shall not be granted until the commanding officer is satisfied that bona fide employment at the prevailing rate of wages in this occupation can be secured. The furlough shall be conditioned upon the man's written agreement that he shall receive no more than private's pay plus a reasonable amount of subsistence, clothing, and medical attention, and that the balance of such wages be paid to the American Red Cross.

"5. Men furloughed pursuant to these instructions will be transferred as of date of furlough to Fort Leavenworth, Kans. Their service records will be sent to the commanding officer, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and upon the termination of their furlough for cause they will be sent to that post.

"6. When it becomes necessary to revoke the furlough of any man furloughed under the provisions of these instructions, the commanding officer, Fort Leavenworth, will request the department commander of the department in which the man is employed to take him into custody and send him under guard to Fort Leavenworth.

"7. The commanding officer concerned will send to Fort Leavenworth, Kans., such of the men so examined by the board as it may recommend. Men so sent shall be held at Fort Leavenworth for further examination and report by the board.

"8. Definite instructions as to the method to be followed in arranging for employment for men to be furloughed under the foregoing instructions will be furnished later."

2. A careful study of the above instructions and orders issued concerning the conscientious objector, in comparison with the law under which such instructions have been issued, clearly shows that those controlling the issuance of such instructions went far beyond the intention of the lawmakers in many instances. A comparatively few men drafted into the service are members of well-recognized religious sects whose creeds prohibit their members participating in war of any kind, and which organizations were in existence at the time of the passage of the law granting their members exemption from combatant service with the military forces.

Add to the few religious objectors contemplated in the law the pacifists, cowards, disloyalists, and others who desire to avoid military service or to interfere in every way possible with the proper disciplining of the Army, and the result is that at each of the training camps there are to be found several hundred of these men doing nothing to assist in the prosecution of the war. The presence of these men in camp, privileged as indicated in the above instructions, injuriously affects the discipline of the entire command.

It was never intended by the legislature that any citizen of the United States should be exempted from service with the colors during the existing emergency. It was not their intention that any class of soldiers should be drafted into the United States Army and encouraged to claim exemption from military service by simply stating their conscientious objections.

Under the above instructions any soldier arrested for a military offense may profess his religious objections to military service, regardless of the requirements of law to show membership in a well-recognized religious sect, and thereby escape any form of punishment.

3. Section 1199, Revised Statutes, provides that the Judge Advocate General of the Army "shall receive, revise, and cause to be recorded the proceedings of all courts-martial." In all cases of trial by general courts-martial the records of trial are reviewed in the office of the Judge Advocate General. If the proceedings are found to be legal and action thereon final, the records are filed. But under the instructions issued March 11, 1918, the conscientious objector convicted by court-martial is extended the privilege of a review of the findings and sentence in his case by the Secretary of War, to whose attention the conviction must be called.

STATEMENT OF FACTS PERTAINING TO CONDITIONS WHICH AROSE BETWEEN MILITARY AUTHORITIES AND CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS.

1. Let me first state that the preceding laws and regulations governing the religious objector and so-called conscientious objector, as issued by the War Department up to the present time, have been very closely adhered to, and in no case do I conscientiously believe any of them have been violated to the most minute extent which I will endeavor to prove in the following samples:

2. When the first draft arrived at Camp Funston there was considerable trouble experienced with the so-called conscientious objectors. The majority of these objectors we found to be in possession of certificates from their church and were either Hutternite or Mennonite believers and were segregated in compliance of confidential letter sent out by the War Department under date of October 10, 1917; also, in compliance of telegram of War Department under date of September 27, 1917. These men were not forced to wear a uniform but were taken into hand by a very competent officer who examined them very carefully as to their actual belief. Many of these men, after very close questioning, and upon being told that they would be put into noncombatant units, accepted their oaths, put on their uniforms and were placed in sanitary trains, Quartermaster Corps, etc., in accordance with General Order No. 28, and in the majority of instances, where men were placed in noncombatant organizations, these men, although still professing to be conscientious objectors, have rendered excellent—also conscientious—service to their Government and in very few cases have these departments experienced any trouble whatsoever with these men.

3. With the balance of the conscientious objectors received, there appeared, not only to be a religious resentment to military duties, but a very antagonistic feeling toward all military persons, and endeavored from the time they arrived in camp to impose as great a hardship upon those directly over them as was possible in their mind.

4. These men were afforded the best possible treatment and in no cases were abused or mistreated by either the guards over them or any of their superior officers. They were not ordered to, or forced to, don the uniform of the United States, but were segregated and the only orders they received at any time were those necessary for their own welfare, both mentally and physically.

5. At the time the first draft was called these men were not segregated into one large group but were segregated in the organizations to which they were assigned, and in one case, referring to my own, although the same occurrence was prevalent throughout the entire camp—two conscientious objectors were received and assigned to my organization. Shortly after their arrival, evidently through propaganda distributed by the enemy of our country through these men, there appeared five other conscientious objectors, or men who claimed to be conscientious objectors. These men gave no end of trouble and the situation became very trying inasmuch as the War Department had issued certain orders and regulations opposing the use of drastic measures upon these men, and it was with great difficulty in complying with these War Department orders that we prevented the spread of this existing condition amongst the more weak-minded men of these organizations. One of these five men openly stated that he was a conscientious objector and he didn't care who knew it, that he had made that decision of his own free will, after having held consultation with God. Upon investigation found that this man had served two or three years in the Missouri National Guard, having served on the Mexican Border, and had also been secretary to some official, I do not remember who, in Washington.

6. In less than one week from the time the draft arrived in this camp we were pestered by large numbers of civilian people, both male and female, in the endeavor to get in communication with the so-called conscientious objectors. This condition existed for some little time until it had grown to such an enormity that these Mennonites would arrive in camp 30 or 40 strong, distributing themselves to the various organizations and would endeavor to convert any of the enlisted men, even though they were not conscientious objectors, whom they could conveniently talk to. In not only my opinion, but in the opinion of the high-ranking officers who were here at that time, this was not only a case where they were endeavoring to post their own religious sect on bulletins and memorandas issued by the War Department for the protection of the conscientious objectors, but was in all appearances a rank deliverance and spread of German propaganda.

7. The increase in the number of conscientious objectors was very small until about January 1, 1918, when there appeared in this camp a handbill which originated after the meeting of the committee representing eight branches of the Mennonite Denomination which was held at Goshen, Ind., on January 9 and 10, 1918, which reads:

"At a meeting of committees representing eight branches of the Mennonite Denomination at Goshen, Ind., January 9 and 10, 1918, attention was called to some trouble in the past which might have been averted if more information had been in the hands of our registered brethren. Consequently, a committee was appointed to publish some authoritive information for immediate use. Another committee will publish later a more complete collection of documents bearing on this subject."

And further, in the same publication, is found the following:

"Our boys who report at their respective camps have the privilege of taking their stand on the following points:

"No uniform.

"No drill.

"No service of any kind in the camp.

"Taking their stand on these points, they will be placed in detention camps.

"They will be offered a list of services considered noncombatant. They need not accept any in violation of their conscience. They will be properly fed and cared for. Those who can not accept any service under the military arm of the Government will be held in detention camps to await such disposition of their case as the Government may decide upon. We recommend that our brethren comply with every requirement of the Government, availing themselves of every opportunity to present their claims for exemption, exercising care they do not commit any act that could be rightly interpreted as desertion or treason; and at the time when they receive the summons to enter the military service they present themselves to the authorities and meekly inform them that under no circumstances that they consent to serve, either combatant or noncombatant, under the military arm of the Government, citing them to the fact that they are members of a church whose creed and principle forbid them to have part in war in any form, and that their conscience coincides with this position; submitting to any penalty the Government may see fit to inflict, trusting to the Lord for guidance and protection."

8. From about March 1, 1918, up to the present time there has been taken from a large number of persons who profess to be conscientious objectors on entering this camp printed handbills, circulars, some of which are supposed to have been signed not only by prominent officials of this country but by the President of the United States, and it has been a rank injustice to other drafted men who are members of this great Army, and our true soldiers, to allow the publishers and possessors of these falsehoods to go unpunished, and it most certainly appears that these men are receiving the support of some very high authority of this country.

9. The following letter was printed upon one of the handbills received in this camp:

"A LETTER FROM PRESIDENT WILSON.

(The bill here mentioned has since become law.—P. H. R.)

"The following letter from the President to Brother H. C. Early is self-explanatory and will be of great interest to our readers:

"MY DEAR SIR: I have received the memorial of the Church of the Brethren with regard to the assignment of members of that church now in the military service, to noncombatant occupations, in agriculture and other constructive pursuits.

"The Secretary of War has presented to the Congress for its approval a bill which will authorize the War Department to furlough, without pay, men in the military service. Should the Congress enact this legislation it will then be possible, under its provisions, to assign by conditional furlough men whose conscientious scruples can not otherwise be met to civilian occupations of the general sort which you indicate. At the same time, the Secretary of War is endeavoring to broaden the list of noncombatant occupation directly associated with the activities of the Army and tells me that he hopes soon to have prepared, for presentation to me, such a list. When this is done it may well be that the members of your church will find services which they can render without invasion of their beliefs, and I trust every effort will be made by your members so that this difficult question can finally be settled in a way consistent at once with the sentiment of those involved and the best interests of the Government.

"Cordially, yours,

WOODROW WILSON."

(From Gospel Messenger.)

Taking all things into consideration, if carefully noted, will bring out the fact that on or about March 1, 1918, a tremendous pressure was brought to bear upon the War Department in order to influence the higher authorities there in favor of the conscientious objectors. The following is a clipping from the Gospel Messenger of March 9, 1918, published letter from W. J. Seigart, written from Huntingdon, Pa., on February 25, 1918:

"Owing to the throng and rush about the War Department and the arduous pressure of responsibility upon these men, it is a marvel how they in any sense get through, and the obtaining of interviews is really embarrassing and not very satisfactory. Matters can be better brought to their attention by correspondence and can thus probably have more studied attention when considered away from the hours when the press is so great and everybody wants a hearing. * * * I have headquarters in Washington at 337 North Carolina Avenue SE., where letters or wire messages may be sent. * * * I also have arrangements with a Member of the House, who is interested, to post me on legislation and other matter that may concern us. * * * there are brethren who have been in camp since October or September who have not yet had a visit and seem not to know that there is a provision for such. There are members in camp who are taking the military drill because they do not know how to get out of it. A little counsel and help from the visitors would release some of them, at least, * * * the congregation should see that persons doing such work be made whole for expenses incurred. The boys should have help. * * *."

The writer then refers to certain publications, such as the Statement to the Churches and Drafted Brethren, with the following remark:

"Every brother in camp and every brother going to camp or likely to be called should have one from his home church with the certificate of membership duly signed. It would be well if many who are not going to camp should have the statement and study it."

It was literature and handbills of this kind distributed around the camps and through many of the organizations which soon caused a marked increase in the number of so-called conscientious objectors; so from January 1, 1918, the number has increased from a mere handful until up to a few days ago there were 553 in this camp, and it is very surprising to know that of those 553 only 21 have been so disobedient or so antagonistic to any military authorities whatever that it has forced the proper authorities to take action against them. This action has been made necessary by two important factors, for both of which the responsibility may be placed on the men themselves.

(a) Their complete and whole-hearted belief in these handbills or German propaganda which was spread through the camps.

(b) They all rest assured, in their own mind, that nothing can happen to them, as they have a great friend in Washington, Mr. Keppel, the Third Assistant Secretary of War, who will support them, "so they state," in anything their conscience tells them to do, and that all other military authorities are to be considered their enemies; therefore the hardships brought to bear upon the guards over them and their superior officers, due to this extreme narrow-mindedness, or in some cases I may even state cowardice, have been of such a nature, at the same time taking into consideration the War Department's instructions, an officer or enlisted men having any connection with them whatsoever is called upon to do the impossible, and I do not believe that these men were treated with any more disrespect, and in some cases I know they were not treated with as much respect in other camps, as they are in this one; but, nevertheless, upon using the utmost precaution and tactfulness in the handling of these men opposition was received at every turn of the wheel from one source or another.

The following gives some information on the status of conscientious objectors as determined at a meeting of the military exemption committee of the western district conference, which sent a delegation to Washington and handed Secretary Keppel a list of questions, which he answered as follows:

"1. What is the status of the conscientious objector who accepts service in one of the departments named by the President noncombatant?

"(a) Must they bear weapons of any kind, including such as revolver, dagger, etc.?

"Answer. No.

"(b) Must they drill with the rest of the men who are preparing for service in the Army?

"Answer. Yes.

"(c) Are such men considered a part of the organized military force of the States?

"Answer. Yes (as part of the noncombatant forces).

"2. Can these men, who because of conscientious scruples can not accept service in one of the three departments named by the President, remain in the camp and do civilian (that is, not under military orders), work without becoming a part of the military organization under any department?

"Answer. It may possibly be; but it would not be wise, because of the resentment of the other men if such men, conscientious objectors, are not uniformed and subject to regular discipline.

"3. (a) What are the rules and what is the plan under which 'conscientious objectors' are to be furloughed for farm work?

"Answer. No definite rules have thus far been adopted, but will soon be issued.

"(b) Would a representative of our conference be permitted to be present and cooperate in a consulting capacity in cases where men of our membership are to be furloughed?

"Answer. Too cumbersome; but I will assure you men that your men will be treated with consideration. Certain men have already been furloughed out, in cooperation with the nearest State agricultural department, for about two months, with the thought that the furlough will be extended under the regulations to be adopted. The furloughing will be placed in charge of a civilian commission, who although not a conscientious objector will be sympathetically disposed, and he will have the advice of a committee of representatives from the Quakers, Dunkards, and Mennonites. The men will not be furloughed to their home communities of their faith.

"4. Would a representative of our people be permitted to be present when a member of our church is under trial by court-martial as a conscientious objector?

"Answer. This is a matter for the court-martial board itself to decide. They may admit a civilian in cases which in their judgment make such action advisable.

"5. Has a conscientious objector who, under pressure of one kind or another, has accepted service in some department of the armed forces of the United States, which he finds to be contrary to his conscientious convictions, thereby forfeited his rights as a conscientious objector?

"Answer. Yes; unless such service was accepted under duress. In that case he must bring positive proof that undue pressure was brought to bear on him and caused him to accept service contrary to his conscientious convictions.

"6. Can a conscientious objector be employed in the Hospital Department without at any time bearing weapons of any kind while engaged in such service?

"Answer. Yes; absolutely. A new department of the hospital service will be established for the purpose of teaching disabled men new lines of occupation, suited to their condition, such as gardening, fruit growing, and small farming. Such disabled men will not go back to war, and helping and teaching such men will not assist in the war. This will be an opportunity for service for nonresistants in human reconstruction work.

"There will also be published a list of different kinds of civilian service for conscientious objectors, including clothes and shoes and other trades and lines of work.

"We feel that we should state it as our convictions that the heads of the War Department are sincerely endeavoring to handle the problem of the nonresistant citizens with a most sympathetic spirit of kindness, fairness, and consideration, anxiously careful that the individual freedom of conscience should be sacredly respected and shielded. That such a spirit prevails in Washington in this trying time may well be recognized by all Mennonites as a cause for deepest gratitude to God and to our Government in Washington.

"The delegation.

"H. P. KREHBIEL, Newton, Kans.

"PETER H. UNRUSH, Goessel, Kans."

In view of Mr. Keppel's answers to the above questions anyone would most naturally suppose that these would be complied with, not only by the military authorities but by the conscientious objectors themselves. In answer to question (a), from a military standpoint these men were not forced to carry side arms or weapons of any kind, nor did any dispute ever arise that I am aware of or upon investigation have been able to find out over this question.

Answering question (b) and the answer to same:

In the majority of cases where these men were ordered to drill with their organization they complied, but not with the spirit that should have been shown and the interest that should have been taken, taking into consideration Mr. Keppel's statement that they should drill and the acceptance of this statement by their own delegation. Most of these men had to be kept in awkward squad or placed in development battalions, not because they did not have the brain or the ability to learn but due to their prominent and antagonistic feeling on their part toward anything military. Some of these men actually refused to go out and drill, even after threatened with punishment, which punishment should have been justifiable and was justifiable according to War Department order, but in the early stages of the game no punishment was inflicted on these men.

(c) The answer to which was, "Yes."

Again, in a large majority of these cases these men did accept noncombatant service, and it appears that in these cases a large proportion of them have given very good service to their country. However, there is still quite a number of these men who remained antagonistic and refused to accept anything that was offered them.

In answer to No. 2, question (a).

The man who accepted noncombatant service donned the uniform of the United States; those who did not accept anything which was offered them refused to wear our uniform.

Answer to No. 3, question (a).

In some cases where men were furloughed for farm work: These furloughs were obtained through sympathizers of theirs who brought pressure to bear upon the War Department, which in some cases, according to their own statements, were falsehoods. In one case, that of Pvt. Louis Kopelin, telegram received June 14, commanding general Camp Funston, Kans. Grant Pvt. Louis Kopelin, said to be in Twenty-third Company, One hundred and sixty-fourth Depot Brigade, Camp Funston, Kans., indefinite furlough, without pay or allowance, and direct to report immediately at own expense to J. J. Sheppard, Fort Scott, Kans., for employment. Forward service record to commanding general Central Department, with proper notation therein, showing status of soldier. Expedite and report action. Signed "McCane."

On June 16 Mr. J. I. Sheppard stated he had seen the Secretary of War personally and had been assured that furlough would be granted. In reply to a communication sent to Mr. Sheppard, extracts have been taken, dated June 18. "It pleases me to comply with your request to give you a short statement of the object and purpose of the mission to England, France, and Italy upon which Pvt. Kopelin had gone as secretary. Mr. Sheppard states that he is a true American socialist and that Pvt. Kopelin has been attached to this mission with the hopes that they may offset the lies which are spread through this country by socialists other than through American socialists.

Why did the War Department order this man furloughed for farm work, or did they not know that the mission was other than that represented to them in request of this man's furlough?

In answer to questions b, 4a.

As nothing pertaining to the above questions has been brought up in this camp will not try to debate on these questions.

In answer to question 5.

At no time were conscientious objectors forced or even undue pressure brought to bear upon them, leaning toward their acceptance of military duties, therefore those men violating their acceptance of military duty were entitled to and should have received the proper disciplinary action for their misconduct.

In answer to question 6.

State that in some cases conscientious objectors were transferred and assigned to both medical and hospital units, and are at no time required to bear weapon.

In view of the above questions and their answers I sincerely believe that the military authorities at Camp Funston have exerted every effort possible to carry into effect the policies of the War Department laid down.

On December 12, 1918, the following telegram was received at this camp from the War Department:

"212 KSJ 130GVT GNS 1W,

"WASHINGTON, D. C., 4.15, December 12, 1918.

"COMMANDING GENERAL,
"Camp Funston, Kans.:

"Discharge Maj. Gustav C. Taussig, Infantry; Maj. Frank S. White, junior judge advocate general; Capt. R. W. Wittman, military police; Capt. Joseph E. Young, One hundred and sixty-fourth Depot Brigade; and Capt. S. H. Negrotto, Sixty-fifth Pioneer Infantry, from the service as soon as settlement of accounts, completion of records, etc., required in cases of all officers discharged in accordance with general plans for demobilization have been made. Following form of order will be used by you in this connection, 'By direction of the President and under the provisions of section 9, act of Congress approved May 18, 1917, Capt. John Doe, Infantry, is discharged from the service of the United States to take effect this date.'

"HARRIS."

In reference to the above telegram, received from the War Department, it was not known in this camp why these men were discharged other than they had been in close connection, and had been at different times commanding officers over these conscientious objectors, and as they have without question carried out their orders to the letter, it appears that a rank injustice was done them upon the sending of this telegram. The matter was immediately taken up with the War Department through various sources, and on December 17 the following telegram was received: "Reference your telegram 17th, suspend action of discharge of Maj. Taussig and Maj. White until you receive further instructions from War Department." Signed "Harris. 4.15 p. m." In the case of the other three officers included in this telegram, action was suspended on account of their being members of the Regular Army and that such discharge was illegal. The following is a report which reached this office in the form of a handbill, supposed to have been a copy of a diary kept by the conscientious objectors who were in the guardhouse pending confirmation of the sentences which had been imposed upon them by a general court-martial.

Dated Thursday, September 5, 1918.

REPORT OF TREATMENT OF CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS AT CAMP FUNSTON GUARDHOUSE.

On Saturday, September 14, they state that Col. Barnes, provost marshal, called at the guardhouse and ordered them to stand at attention, and when they refused to comply he proceeded to kick the legs of the men; one man (Kaplin) stated he had his legs and ankles bruised as the result, and that upon the colonel leaving the guardhouse he hinted to the prisoners that he would be tempted to pardon them if they would beat these men up. This was not so, as the other prisoners of the guardhouse testified upon being questioned.

On Friday, September 27, they state that while taking their exercises (which in no case they underwent willingly), they were grossly maltreated. They state the bayonet was applied to all of them, one man, Larson, receiving a scar. Two others, Kaplin and Berger, were beaten by the butt end of a rifle and all were kicked and shoved about, and that later in the day, when they were called out and refused to march around the building, bayonets were again used, and upon the guards insisting upon their marching in a strict military posture kicks and blows were rained upon them. One man, Eichel, refused to submit to this abuse, and a guard seized him by the neck, forcing him around the building, heaping blows and kicks upon him at the same time. Later on in the evening one man, Steiner, refused to walk and states he was seized by the ears and dragged around the building. They state a few days after that they were forced under cold shower baths with their clothes on, the result of which one man, Sandin, collapsed and became sick, and upon asking the officer of the day for medical attention was refused.

These are but a very few of the various abuses that they claim were heaped upon them while in the guardhouse, and anyone with half a mind can very readily determine that the claimed abuses are rank falsehoods, as it is ridiculous to believe that any officer or enlisted man is going to deliberately incriminate himself by violating strict regulations that were laid down by the War Department. These men persisted in making the statements that they knew were upheld by the War Department, and that sooner or later this matter or condition would be referred to Mr. Keppel, who would immediately see to it that their superiors were punished.

The following is a copy of a letter mailed to Julius R. Greenberg by his father, inclosed with a letter of his father's own handwriting, which we have here and which states that Mr. Keppel has advised him that he, Julius R. Greenberg, is one of those chosen to be discharged by order of the War Department:

Copy of inclosure.

"WAR DEPARTMENT,
"THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S OFFICE,
December 10, 1918.

"Re Julius R. Greenberg case.

"1. Report from the Judge Advocate General's office states that this is one of the several general court-martial cases from Camp Funston recently received in the office of the Judge Advocate General, where recommendation was made that the findings and sentence be disapproved and the soldier restored to duty.

"The case goes to the President for action.

"By order of the Secretary of War.

"(Signed) R. J. HERMAN,
"Adjutant General."

[The following in own handwriting of the writer:]

"For your information, will let you have further information when available.

"(Signed) F. B. KEPPEL."

While dwelling on the subject of various communications, which are claimed to have originated by the War Department, quote the following:

"In the September issue we published a letter to President Wilson on the subject of those in jail for antiwar agitation. The following correspondence explains itself:

"'THE WHITE HOUSE,
"'Washington, July 30, 1918.

"'MY DEAR MR. SINCLAIR: Referring to your recent communication, the President has asked us to invite your attention to the inclosed copy of a letter which he has received from the Secretary of War.

"'Sincerely, yours,

"'J. P. TUMULTY,
"'Secretary to the President.'

"'WAR DEPARTMENT,
"'Washington, July 22, 1918.

"'DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Thank you for sending me Upton Sinclair's interesting communication. I think, however, he should be informed that we are now doing absolutely all that public opinion will stand in the interest of conscientious objectors and others whose views do not happen to coincide with those of the vast majority of their fellow countrymen.

"'I have given directions that all the court-martial cases having to do with these people shall be carefully and sympathetically reviewed in the light of the experience gained by the special board of inquiry, consisting of Judge Mack, Dean Stone, and Maj. Stoddard. The terms of imprisonment which conscientious objectors may, in the last analysis, be compelled to serve will be served in the Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, where the men have a wholesome outdoor life and are kept busy upon things that are worth doing. Most of the conscientious objectors who declined to accept military service in any form, however, are now engaged in farm work at a private's pay, through cooperation between the Department of Agriculture and the War Department.

"'I do not know how many of what Mr. Sinclair calls political prisoners are now under the control of the Department of Justice, but if you care to have me do so I could find out from the Attorney General whether there are any prisoners under his direction whom he thinks it wise to have transferred to Fort Leavenworth.

"'Respectfully,

"'NEWTON D. BAKER,'
"'Secretary of War.'"

Following are statements made to commanding general Camp Funston, Kans., relative to the increased defiance on the part of conscientious objectors after November 1, 1918:

1. During the last few days the prisoners held in my guardhouse awaiting trial who are conscientious objectors have been individually examined by the inspector general at his quarters at the Foreign Mission Building. I have no idea what transpired during the examination of these men, but their defiance to military authority has increased, and I believe it is partly due to the manner in which they were treated by the inspector general and the conditions surrounding the investigation.

2. For some time we have been greatly hampered in the work of caring for these prisoners. Our attempt to properly discipline them and make them abide by the prison rules is seriously affected by the numerous inspections and investigations ordered by the War Department. Upon each of such inspections these men add one more name to their list of sympathizers, and have come to the belief that those of us who are immediately responsible for their keep, care, and discipline are overriding the rules and regulations set out by the War Department and that they have no friends here.

3. As a matter of fact, every conscientious objector prisoner under the control of the provost guard has been treated with such great leniency and given such consideration that those prisoners who are loyal soldiers and confined for purely military offenses, required to suffer all the penalties of discipline because of their being good soldiers, have become disgruntled and dissatisfied in the service. This is quite naturally true when men who have refused to do their duty as soldiers are confined with them and extended privileges never before extended to military or other prisoners.

4. This subject, which has been transferred from a mole hill to a mountain, is now a serious one for those responsible for the care of the prisoners. Not only fellow prisoners, but the guard over such men, hold them in utter contempt, and human nature in man is so constituted that true soldiers can not be made to treat this class of soldiery with any degree of respect. To add to this by encouraging these men in the belief that the War Department and its officials are in full sympathy with their conduct is to make it impossible for any officer properly to conduct the prison.

5. It is therefore recommended that, if during the present investigation further testimony is to be taken of these prisoners, the inspector general be required to visit the guardhouse for that purpose and that these prisoners be not sent from there for the purpose of interrogation. It is further recommended, in due respect for the decent soldiers, that these men be segregated in a guardhouse separate and apart from any other prisoners, to enable the officers charged with their protection to deal with them as sympathetically as may be required without lowering the discipline in the guardhouse where good soldiers are confined.

(Signed) J. W. BARNES.
Colonel, Infantry, United States Army.

Memorandum for the commanding general.

Subject: Prisoner Lester G. Ott.

1. As it has recently come to my knowledge that one of the prisoners in the military police guardhouse who has given much trouble by reason of his attitude to service of any kind is a man named Lester G. Ott, who was formerly in my employ, I beg to submit certain facts in connection with him which may throw light upon the sincerity of some of the so-called conscientious objectors.

2. Prior to my assignment to duty I was in active practice of the law at Cincinnati, Ohio, as the junior member of the firm of Worthington, Strong & Stettinius. In the late summer of 1917 I employed Ott as a law clerk upon the recommendation of a young lawyer who had been his classmate at the Cincinnati Law School, and of the dean of that school. Ott told me that he had been rejected for military service, because of insufficient weight, by his local draft board at Hamilton, Ohio, and, as I recall it, also told me that he had been refused admission to one of the officers' training camps for the same reason. He further said that he had never been pro-German, and that his friends were not German sympathizers.

3. During the months of December, 1917, and January, 1918, Ott acted as an associate legal adviser to one of the local draft boards at Cincinnati, and, I presume, took the oath set forth in section 317 of the selective-service regulations, as all of the associate legal advisers to local draft boards were required to do so. The oath is probably now on file with the adjutant general of the State of Ohio. As far as I know, Ott's work as a legal adviser was satisfactory, and I heard no complaint that he was endeavoring to dissuade registrants from entering the military service.

4. Early in 1918, at my suggestion, Ott became a member of Company C of the Cincinnati Home Guard, drilled with it, and did guard duty as an armed sentinel on at least one occasion, during the floods in the Ohio River. As a member of the home guard he also took an oath to support and defend the Constitution against all enemies of the United States.

5. After about three months' service in the Cincinnati Home Guard, Ott resigned, because he had taken additional night employment which prevented his attending drills. Late in April or early in May, he also left the employ of my firm in order to take a position as inspector in some factory doing Government work, because it enabled him to make a larger salary. Shortly thereafter he was placed by his local draft board in class 1 as physically fit for service, was drafted, and sent to Camp Sherman.

6. In June, 1918, I was shown a letter written by Ott, in which he said that he had drilled for a time, but nobody seemed to want him; and as he had been placed with the conscientious objectors, he expected shortly to get furloughed for farm work. I also heard that after he had been at Camp Sherman for some time he was nominated for the office of prosecuting attorney of Butler County, Ohio, on the Socialist ticket.

7. During the time of his employment by my firm, Ott's work as a law clerk was fairly satisfactory, but he was unmanageable, and did not show a willingness to receive instructions. From my knowledge of his character, I am convinced that his objection to military service is based solely on his personal dislike to discipline of any kind, and that his present defiant attitude is due to the type of stubbornness which is shown by a balky mule.

8. Yesterday evening, at the suggestion of the division judge advocate, I called upon the inspector general, Brig. Gen. Williams, who had interrogated Ott in an investigation of complaints made by conscientious objectors, in order to furnish him with the above information, which I thought might assist him in arriving at conclusions in his present investigations. Gen. Williams first told me that he did not know whether or not Ott was conscientious, as the special board to examine into the sincerity of conscientious objectors had decided he was. After referring to his files, however, he said that Ott's case had not yet been decided by that board. I then told him that Ott had been employed by me as a law clerk, and that I felt I knew something about his attitude toward bearing arms. The inspector general, however, refused to allow me to continue, and said politely that the matter was of no interest to him.

The following reports of conscientious objectors were submitted by Camp Commander Maj. C. E. Desobry—one dated October 14, 1918; the other November 17, 1918.

These reports are contradictory in their entirety; and I honestly believe—in fact, am almost certain—that pressure was brought to bear on Maj. Desobry upon submitting the second report, which originated from a source other than in this camp:

"OFFICE OF CAMP INSPECTOR,
"Camp Funston, Kans., October 14, 1918.

"From: Camp inspector.
"Memorandum: For executive officer.
"Subject: Investigation of treatment of conscientious objectors, with recommendation.

"1. Pursuant to verbal instructions from headquarters, Camp Funston, I this day made an investigation of the treatment received by alleged conscientious objectors now in the guardhouse at this camp. From my visit to the guardhouse I found in one cell of ample space 18 of these men. One other was found to be confined in a room by himself in another part of the guardhouse. It appears that these men are in fact mutineers, although under the law they probably couldn't be tried for mutiny. They absolutely and positively refuse to obey any military order or any instructions that appear in any way to be from a military source. They are determined to follow their own individual inclinations and show an utter disregard and contempt for any military rule or regulations imposed upon them. This condition makes it extremely hard for the guard over them to properly handle them. If they are told to take a bath, they will or they won't, as they see fit. They will not march to meals in any orderly formation. If they are to go in or out of a door and decide that by so doing they are obeying a military order, they refuse to do so. Any number of other instances may be quoted to show their attitude toward the military authorities and the Government. Their attitude is extremely exasperating to those who are required to guard and care for them. This has caused possibly in some instances an over amount of force being used to require them to perform necessary things. It is very difficult, particularly for enlisted men over them, to handle these men with gentleness, kindness, and firmness to the proper degree.

"(Signed) S. M. WILLIAMS,
"Lieutenant Colonel, General Staff, Executive Officer."

The attitude of the members of the guard placed over those individuals and all other enlisted men, including prisoners, is naturally one of extreme hostility. From my observation of the surroundings of these men, I believe there is no real foundation for complaint of treatment or criticism of the methods adopted. I believe that under the circumstances they are as well taken care of as could be possibly expected. They are properly housed, properly clothed, properly fed, and are given ample opportunity to maintain cleanliness of both person and surroundings. They are given opportunity to take exercise necessary to maintain their health. No punitive hardships whatever are imposed upon them. One thing, then, I believe necessary is to see that the treatment they receive from those over them is proper and just.

2. In order to insure the proper treatment, care, and security of these men I recommend the following:

3. Recommendation.

(a) That under provisions paragraph (256), Manual of Interior Guard Duty, United States Army, a commissioned officer be detailed as officer in charge of prisoners. This officer to have charge of all prisoners in the camp guardhouse; that he censor all outgoing mail of the conscientious objectors; that he handle incoming mail for these men as prescribed for general prisoners in paragraph (382), Manual of Interior Guard Duty; that he be in charge of the special guard for conscientious objectors to be recommended below; that this office be charged with the duty of seeing that no person be permitted to communicate with any of these conscientious objectors, either directly or indirectly, unless so authorized by the camp commander or the commander of the provost guard; that he make frequent and irregular inspections of the guardroom where these men are confined to see that no unauthorized articles are kept by them, and that all windows, doors, floors, walls, and ceilings are not tampered with, with the view of providing means of communicating with outside persons; that he further be charged with the duty of seeing that these men are sent to meals at the proper time; that they are kept under proper guard while going to and from meals; that they receive proper food; that they be given an opportunity to bathe at least twice a week; that they are given ample opportunity to wash their own clothes; that they be given opportunity to obtain necessary medical attention when sick; that they are not mistreated by those placed over them.

(b) That a special guard consisting of two noncommissioned officers and six privates specially selected for their military bearing, firmness, kindness, and proper conception of military justice be detailed over these conscientious objectors. This recommendation is made with the idea of securing uniform treatment of these men and to remove any opportunity for criticism of treatment of these conscientious objectors by members of the guard.

(c) That these conscientious objectors be allowed to have in their possession only their necessary clothing and toilet articles; that no books, magazines, papers, or reading matter whatsoever be allowed these men, except papers, books, and magazines of recognized worth; that these men be allowed only such reading matter on Sundays; that they be allowed no smoking material of any kind at any time; that they be allowed no eatables, save and except those that are regularly furnished them; that they be turned out into the inclosure for exercise for not less than two hours daily; that they be allowed to write not more than one letter per day; that they be not allowed to have any money in their possession; that such postage stamps as they may require be permitted to remain in their possession; that their writing material be kept by the prison officer and issued by him to them when necessary.

(d) That they be confined in one of the cell rooms by themselves, and that no other prisoners be confined with them.

Major, Inspector General.

All witnesses were examined separate and apart from each other.

The record of their testimony is hereto appended.

4. The following facts are deduced:

First. That during the months of September and October, 1918, 19 enlisted men who claimed to be conscientious objectors and who were awaiting trial for violation of the sixty-fourth article of war were confined in the guardhouse at this camp.

Second. That, due to an apparent absence of instructions, the prison authorities attempted to treat these enlisted men as ordinary prisoners awaiting trial.

Third. That these enlisted men refused to observe prison regulations; in fact, refused to recognize military authority.

Fourth. That at least on three occasions some of these enlisted men were put on bread and water diet for refusing to obey prison regulations.

Fifth. That some of these enlisted men at one time went on a hunger strike as a protest, as stated by some of them, of the conditions imposed on them.

Sixth. That on several occasions some of them were given cold shower baths for refusing to observe prison regulations, this order being given by Capt. R. W. Wittman, Military Police Company, Tenth Division, officer in charge of prisoners.

Seventh. That upon several occasions some of them were given cold shower baths after refusing to take them as a matter of personal cleanliness.

Eighth That the guard attempted to compel them to take exercise in the inclosure, and as a rule succeeded.

Ninth. That on the night of September 7, 1918, they were deprived of their beds and one of them was deprived of his blankets as a disciplinary measure, by order of Capt. Joseph H. Buckley, Infantry, United States Army, officer of the day, acting under instructions from Maj. Gustav C. Taussig, Infantry, United States Army, officer in charge of prisoners.

Tenth. That on the night of September 23–24, 1918, these men were paraded every time the relief of the guard was formed as a disciplinary measure, this order being given by Capt. Richard C. Meek, Infantry, United States Army, officer of the day, acting under instructions from Maj. Gustav C. Taussig, Infantry, United States Army, officer in charge of prisoners.

Eleventh. That on the morning of October 8, 1918, Pvt. Hyman Block, one of the alleged conscientious objectors, was given a cold shower bath with his clothes on before appearing before the court-martial appointed to try him.

Twelfth. That on the morning of October 8, 1918, while attempting to compel Pvt. Ulysses De Rosa, one of the alleged conscientious objectors, to exercise by marching around the inclosure of the guardhouse, the guard found it necessary to pick him up from the ground, and that afterwards they gave him a shower bath.

Thirteenth. That on the morning of October 9, 1918, Col. John W. Barnes, Infantry, United States Army, commanding Trains and Military Police, Tenth Division, while attempting to compel some of the alleged conscientious objectors to stand at attention struck at least two of them—Pvt. Thomas Shotkin and Julius R. Greenberg—on the feet and legs with his riding crop.

Fourteenth. That on the morning of October 19, 1918, Sergt. John Bell, Military Police Company, Tenth Division, while commander of the guard, ordered two of the alleged conscientious objectors—Pvt. Lester G. Ott being one of them—to assist in cleaning up the latrine, and upon refusal struck him.

Fifteenth. That on various other occasions when some of the alleged conscientious objectors refused to take exercise by marching around the inclosure they were forcibly required to do so by members of the guard.

Sixteenth. That these alleged conscientious objectors received sufficient food to sustain life and health and had sufficient time in which to eat.

Seventeenth. That they received proper medical attention.

Eighteenth. That they were never deprived at any time of drinking water for any time of sufficient length to endanger their health or cause them any hardship.

Nineteenth. That at times the members of the guard, particularly Sergt. John Bell, Corpl. John T. Stretcher, and Pvt. (first class) Roy F. Piper, Military Police Company, Tenth Division, in carrying out the instructions given them used means and language too drastic in compelling their obedience.

Twentieth. That a feeling of hostility existed between the members of the guard and the alleged conscientious objectors, due to the feeling on the part of the guard that these alleged conscientious objectors should be required to perform the military duties required of others.

5. Conclusions:

First. That the prison authorities were in a very difficult position in their efforts to enforce discipline among these alleged conscientious objectors due to their absolute defiance of all military authority.

Second. That summary punishment for breaches of prison discipline on the part of these alleged conscientious objectors was the only method, in fact, that could be used for the very obvious reason that trial by courts-martial of these men for such offenses and the awarding of forfeitures and confinement with hard labor would have had no effect on them due to their attitude toward military authority and the probability of their being convicted of a violation of the 64th Article of War followed, in all probabilities, by a sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service and confinement at hard labor for a long period of time.

Third. That the absence of orders published by the War Department, governing special treatment of these alleged conscientious objectors was the reason the prison authorities attempted to compel, on the part of these men, the same observance of prison regulations as was required of the other prisoners.

Fourth. That the giving of shower baths as a disciplinary measure was too drastic at times and other means should have been used to enforce discipline.

Fifth. That the methods used in compelling these men to take exercise by marching around the guard house was too drastic at times.

Sixth. That the placing of these men on a bread and water diet was unauthorized by the manual of interior guard duty as they were neither general or garrison prisoners (but see 2d conclusion).

Seventh. That Col. John W. Barnes, Infantry, United States Army, in striking the alleged conscientious objectors with his riding crop was not, under the law, justified and violated the 96th Article of War.

Eighth. That Sergt. John Bell, Military Police Company, 10th Division, was not justified in striking the alleged conscientious objectors on the morning of October 19, 1918.

Ninth. That Maj. Gustav C. Taussig, Infantry, United States Army, permitted too drastic measures to be used in compelling the alleged conscientious objectors to take exercise.

Tenth. That Capt. R. W. Wittman, Military Police Company, 10th Division, permitted too drastice measures to be used in compelling the alleged conscientious objectors to take shower baths and exercise.

Eleventh. That Sergt. John Bell, Corpl. John T. Stretcher, Pvt. (first class) Roy F. Piper, Military Police Company, 10th Division, and other members of the guard used means and language too drastic in carrying out their instructions, but due to conflicting testimony received it is not very probable they could be held responsible.

Twelfth. That Corpl. Joseph A. Olson, Military Police Company, 10th Division, commander of the guard on the morning of October 8, 1918, was responsible for the sending Pvt. Hyman Block to the court-martial room in wet clothes.

Thirteenth. That Pvt. De Rosa was handled unnecessarily rough on the morning of October 8, 1918, but in view of the very conflicting testimony it is not probable any members of the guard could be held responsible.

Fourteenth. That the members of the guard in giving testimony in this investigation were, in a great many instances, evasive, withheld the truth and undoubtedly gave false testimony.

6. Recommendations:

First. That Col. John W. Barnes, Infantry, United States Army, be brought to trial under the 96th Article of War for striking with his riding crop Pvt. Thomas Shotkin and Julius R. Greenberg, Company A, 1st Casual Battalion, Fort Riley, Kans., on the morning of October 9, 1918.

Second. That Sergt. John Bell, Military Police Company, Tenth Division, be brought to trial under the ninth article of war, for striking Pvt. Lester G. Ott, Company A, First Casual Battalion, Fort Riley, Kans., on October 19, 1918.

Third. That Corpl. Joseph A. Olson, Military Police Company, Tenth Division, be brought to trial under the ninth article of war, for allowing, while commander of the guard, the sending of Pvt. Hyman Block, Company A, First Casual Battalion, Fort Riley, Kans., to the court-martial room in wet clothes.

Fourth. That Maj. Gustav C. Taussig, Infantry, United States Army, be reprimanded for permitting unnecessarily rough measures being used in compelling the alleged conscientious objectors to take exercise.

Fifth. That Capt. R. W. Wittman, Military Police Company, Tenth Division, be reprimanded for permitting the use of measures of too drastic a nature in compelling the alleged conscientious objectors to bathe and take exercise.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON].

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, on this, the 12th day of February, the anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, it is very interesting to consider for a few moments the progress of the colored people of this country who feel greatly indebted to him for his efforts in securing for them freedom and opportunity.

On September 22, 1862, President Lincoln issued his emancipation proclamation wherein he stated that on January 1, 1863, all persons held as slaves within certain States were to be free. The close of the Civil War found the colored man free—not only free, but he was invested with all the rights and responsibilities of citizenship.

How he has progressed since that time is now a matter of history, reduced to figures and facts, and it is well for us to consider them, bearing in mind that the civilization and progress and accomplishments of this race have taken place in the last half of a century.

In 1915 the races of the world were in about the following proportions: Yellow, 703,000,000; white, 560,000,000; colored, 258,000,000.

To give an idea of the great increase in the efficiency of the colored race I desire to submit the following figures:

Homes owned, 1866, 12,000; 1916, 600,000.
Farms operated, 1866, 20,000; 1916, 981,000.
Business conducted, 1866, 2,100; 1916, 45,000.

Wealth accumulated, 1866, $20,000,000; 1916, $1,000,000,000.
Now let us turn to educational statistics:
Percentage literate, 1866, 10 per cent; 1916, 75 per cent.
College and normal schools, 1866, 15; 1916, 500.
Teachers in public schools, 1866, 600; 1916, 36,900.
Students in public schools, 1866, 100,000; 1916, 1,736,000.
Property for higher education, 1866, $60,000; 1916, $21,500,000.
Expenditures for education, 1866, $700,000; 1916, $14,600,000.
The religious progress of the colored race has been wonderful, and here are the figures:
Number of churches, 1866, 700; 1916, 42,000.
Number of communicants, 1866, 600,000; 1916, 4,570,000.
Number of Sunday schools, 1866, 1,000; 1916, 43,000.
Number of Sunday-school pupils, 1866, 50,000; 1916, 2,400,000.
Value of church property, 1866, $1,500,000; 1916, $76,000,000.
In 1914, in the State of Georgia, colored citizens made returns upon $38,603,307 worth of property and owned 1,592,555 acres of land.
In North Carolina colored citizens made returns upon $32,197,890 worth of property.
In Virginia colored people owned 1,674,823 acres of land and had $37,851,973 worth of real and personal property.
In 1900 colored people were interested in 51 banks and insurance companies that held policies to the amount of $25,800,000.
Colored people have interested themselves in playgrounds for children, social improvement, negro uplift, civic improvement, health improvement.
They have won prizes in raising corn, pigs, cotton, potatoes, and other vegetables.
They have noted preachers, inventors, teachers, sculptors, actors, singers, painters, composers, and musicians.
The colored man in the wars of the United States has always shown himself loyal, patriotic, and ready to fight, never flinching from duty.
The blood of colored men has been shed upon every battle field from the Boston massacre to the time of the signing of the armistice last November.
Crispus Attucks, a colored man, was the first to fall in the Boston massacre, March 5, 1770.
Samuel Lawrence led a company of colored soldiers at Bunker Hill.
Peter Salem fired the shot that killed Maj. Pitcairn.
The Black Legion in 1779 covered themselves with glory at the siege of Savannah.
Over 3,000 served in the Revolutionary War and fought for the independence of this Nation.
They served with Commodore Perry on Lake Erie, who spoke highly of their bravery, courage, and fearlessness.
They fought under the great Jackson at New Orleans, and helped turn back the British on that eventful day.
They marched with Gen. Scott into Mexico and suffered with David Crockett on the Alamo.
Nearly 200,000 fought in the Union armies during the Civil War, and showed their bravery on numerous occasions.
On November 23, 1861, at a review of Confederate soldiers 1,400 colored soldiers marched, out of the 28,000 in the review.
It was the famous Tenth Cavalry that came to the rescue of Col. Roosevelt in the first battle in Cuba.
The Twenty-fifth Infantry took a prominent part at El Caney and the Ninth and Tenth at San Juan Hill.
In this present world war thousands of colored soldiers went over the top for freedom and democracy.
Over 33 colored people have received Carnegie medals, 3 graduated from West Point, and they have a lower percentage of crime than many foreign races that come to this country.
What the colored man needs is education and an equal opportunity. Education is the only safeguard for free institutions, and if this opportunity is given the colored race what will he do in the next 50 years?
Lynchings are a form of anarchy, whether the person lynched is black, white, or yellow. They should be discouraged by all the means and all the power at the Government command. If one crowd of people can lynch one person, whether he is innocent or guilty, one never knows who will be the victim of the next lynching.
I am in favor of giving every man, black or white, an even opportunity to work out his own salvation.
Equal opportunity is the essence of a free government; without it a free government ceases to exist.
Every child in this country should be given an opportunity to obtain an education. It should be a part of the fundamental law of the land. Republics that have failed in the past have failed because the people were not all educated.
"There is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that it hardly behooves any of us to speak ill of the rest of us." That is a good policy,

I desire to speak strongly for the education of the colored man, for the care of his health, and the giving him an opportunity to work out his own future.
Many colored pupils have graduated from public schools and colleges at the head of their classes, and what one colored pupil has done many others can do and will do if given an opportunity.
In the city where I live—Cleveland, Ohio—there are colored lawyers and doctors, who stand very high in their profession, and some of the most eloquent preachers I ever listened to.
They are but representatives of the future of the colored citizen in the professions.
In conclusion let me state that if a people can accomplish these things in 50 of the first years of their freedom, what will they accomplish in the second 50?
Time alone can answer the question. [Applause.]
Mr. FRENCH, by unanimous consent, had leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.
Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SMITH].
Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, of course an Army and Navy are absolutely necessary to the protection and welfare of the Government, not only for the purpose of its own defense but also to see that its rights are protected and its sovereignty maintained. A short time ago it was absolutely necessary that the United States should engage in war. We found ourselves very inadequately prepared, but with the enthusiasm, with the spirit of determination of the citizens of the Republic, we set about immediately to organize an army. I am pleased to say that the test of the Republic was shown in the patriotism of its soldiers.
We have sometimes heard that a kingdom or a monarchy was the best fitted to assemble its soldiers, because their subjects are taught to serve and obey; but history has proven upon every field in many wars that the American soldiers eclipse the soldiers of any nation as fighters under every condition and never falter at any time or in any clime. [Applause.]
They came from their homes, they came willingly, and they were not urged. They were eager to go to the front. They did not request to fight alone in their own country. They raised no constitutional question that they could not be compelled to go into a foreign country to fight. But, as stated in the little poem of "Bill"—

They wanted to go over to France,
And wear those blooming pants;
They wanted to be before it was done
A roaring, fighting, son of a gun.
They wanted to follow wherever they led;
They wanted to prove their blood was red,
They wanted to go to France.
They wanted to go over to France and learn to take a chance.
They wanted to be before it was done
A roaring, fighting, son of a gun;
They wanted to hike and carry a pack,
And they didn't care if they didn't come back,
They wanted to go over to France.

Those who remained at home do not ask us for congratulations because they did not have to go to France, but they say that they are sorry they were not given the chance to serve in the front lines, go over the top, and follow the flag in a foreign clime. This war has demonstrated that the country need not be afraid when the time comes about the boys rallying to the flag. I do not care whether it is to suppress or fight Bolshevism or the I. W. W., or anarchy, the country is safe in the hands of the great American citizen and soldier. [Applause.] There is no place here for sedition. There is no place here for those who advocate a different form of government than ours. And why? Because we absolutely have the best Government the sun shines on. More men have fought for the principles upon which the Government of the United States is founded, more men today are ready to uphold and advocate the blessings and benefits of our Republic, than ever before. We have become more united and the foundations of our institutions have been strengthened by and because of the war. And woe to the traitor who seeks to undermine our Government or intrigue against our Nation. No men or set of men, organized or unorganized, should conspire against it. Wherever a republic has been formed or a new nation come into being, since the Republic of the United States, that country has turned to the Republic of the United States for its guiding principles. Our Republic is the oldest, and it goes on, anchoring its hope, its welfare, and its future prosperity, so full of opportunities, to the patriotism of its citizens. Here every man is the equal of every other man in the eyes of the law, marching on to a destiny that knows no bounds. Here in this our blessed Government let each and every one of us not only dedicate our life but also our sacred honor and our utmost resources to the limit against every foe, whether foreign or domestic,

My friends, the citizens of this Government gave these men willingly and they went willingly. We have won this war. Some think that never again ought there to be a time when the United States would have to rely upon the navy of another nation. One gentleman addressing this House yesterday said that and I wondered how many other nations relied upon the Navy of the United States. It came out at the right time. It came to the rescue. How many nations depended upon the soldiers of the United States?

The great question of demobilization is now upon us; and now that the war is over I think these men should be returned to their homes and to their previous occupations. They did not enlist or enter the Army for the purpose of making a life work of soldiering. I think that they should now be demobilized and every man returned to his home who has a place waiting for him. I think it would be a good plan if a survey of the men in the Army were taken and those who have positions waiting for them discharged and sent home, so that they may pursue their former vocations.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. No one wants to see the boys come back more quickly than I do, but I want to ask this. The gentleman said the war is over.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I did not mean that abstractly if I did.

Mr. LAZARO. Is the war really over?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is not.

Mr. LAZARO. And we saw fit to go into this war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly; and very properly; to save our Nation and prevent German world dominion over us as well as all other nations, as I believe.

Mr. LAZARO. And it is our war as well as it is their war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is no doubt about that now.

Mr. LAZARO. The question is, Ought we to come back before the treaty of peace is signed?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman more time.

Mr. LAZARO. In that connection I would like to know if the gentleman knows how many men are required as an army of occupation until the peace treaty is signed, and whether or not we are bound to contribute our quota to that army of occupation?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not think that we are bound to contribute our quota to the army of occupation. I think a great mistake was made in signing the armistice before we marched our Army into Berlin, much as I defer to the conclusion reached by our military leaders to do so. I think further than that that if our Commander in Chief is over there to establish this league of nations he ought to wait until he forms and agrees upon a treaty of peace. That, in my opinion, should come first. If any league of nations will compel us to furnish an army to protect the borders of these small European states and nations or to keep the boys or an army in Europe, or to keep or to send them into Russia, then I am against it. I do not think that our Army has any place, when this war is won, in a foreign country of Europe. We did not send our Army and our Navy into Europe or enter the war for the purpose of policing or permanent occupation. We sent it there to bring Germany to time, as I recollect the declaration of war. We have finished that job. The other nations can now take care of Germany, and we should bring our boys home. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. But the gentleman does not answer my first question. I asked the gentleman whether or not this war was our war as well as theirs and whether or not the war was over, and the gentleman said that the war was over.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, I wish to modify that by saying it is not completely over yet, but Germany is licked. I think there is a great deal of unrest over there still, but I feel absolutely sure that England, France, Italy, and our allies can take care of Germany, and if Germany wants more of it these European allies can give her all she wants. I think the war is not in shape yet that all troops can be actually taken away, but, as stated, I think there are plenty of other troops over there to complete the work. We do not ask for any territory; we say that we are not asking for any indemnities; but I think we should have some pay for our losses when the other nations get theirs. If other nations outside of Belgium and France get nothing, of course we do the same. If this league of peace compels us to pay a part of the total cost of this war, as some of the published reports claim, then I am against that. I do not want any league formed for that purpose. [Applause.]

As I understand it and as I read and remember, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin were for a league of nations. Washington told us to avoid entangling foreign alliances. They called it then a congress of nations. I am for peace. I have often made use of the quotation to beat the swords into plowshares, and I have recited Tennyson's Locksley Hall so many times throughout my district that I think they all have heard it. I am essentially for peace. We will have peace in due course. The fighting has ceased, and it should take no longer to demobilize the Army than it did to mobilize it and put it into the field.

I particularly think it was a great mistake to send our boys into Russia. We debated the Navy bill for days on the floor of the House, and we have debated the Army bill all of to-day, but no one seems to know or can tell just why our Army was sent into Russia, or how long it will remain there, or when it will be returned. The people, the parents of the boys, and the country are greatly worried and very solicitous about them. Already leagues and societies are formed and are petitioning Congress for their return. I want to close my remarks by inserting a telegram which I received from one of these organizations. I wish our Commander in Chief would command the American troops to return from Russia to America. I am sure that this telegram expresses the sentiment of the country, and I hope our troops now in Russia may return home without further delay. An article appearing in the Battle Creek Inquirer, the leading paper published in that city, of February 9, is headed as follows:

Relatives of men in Russia meet to-day—A mass gathering is called for 2 o'clock in city hall for an exchange of views.

The telegram above referred to follows:

BATTLE CREEK, MICH., February 9, 1919.

Congressman J. M. C. SMITH,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the wives, parents, brothers, sisters, and friends of the boys in Russia, ask you to get in connection with Senators TOWNSEND and JOHNSON and all other Senators and Congressmen you possibly can, and, if possible, bring about the very early recall of our boys from Russia, as we have no quarrel with the Russian people, and we understand our boys are in grave danger.

RUSSIA RECALL LEAGUE,
By BUELAH CALDWELL, Secretary.

[Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUFKIN], and he is the last speaker.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Chairman, this House on Saturday adopted a conference report making the law of this land, so far as this body is concerned, the largest single tax measure in the history of the world, a tax measure which proposes to extract $6,000,000,000 from the pockets of the American people. Yesterday we commenced to spend some of the money which we are going to raise by that tax bill. We started in by appropriating over $700,000,000 for the naval bill and in authorizing over $400,000,000 more. To-day we are starting in to spend some more of that tax. We are commencing the consideration of the largest Army appropriation bill in the history of this country in peace times, and in the short time that is accorded me to-night I desire to read a letter which I have received to-day from one of my constituents, a prominent professional man in Massachusetts, who gives what seems to me to be some very interesting comments on the present administration of these large appropriations. The letter is dated Boston, February 8, 1919, and is as follows:

BOSTON, February 8, 1919.

Hon. WILLFRED W. LUFKIN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LUFKIN: As a constituent of yours, I desire to thank you for your position on the income-tax bill now pending in Congress for $6,000,000,000 to assist in carrying on the war. I hope that you will be able to come home and help in the victory loan, the drive for which is soon to be started. The Government needs every financial assistance to carry on the war now raging about the peace table in Paris. I am particularly interested in the above matter, as I have a son now in France who enlisted as a private who would not have been reached in the draft, being in class 4. He was offered a commission as a second lieutenant in the Quartermaster Department, but declined it, thinking his duty was to fight. He went overseas in June, leaving a wife and a child less than 4 months of age. In a letter written December 28, the last one received by me, he informed me that the last letter he received from home was dated October 1, mailed in Paris by an English officer who sailed from Halifax. No letter from his wife since September. Since July 1 he has received one month's pay, which, after deducting his wife's allowance and his insurance, left him in the vicinity of $5. Since June I have sent him by checks and cables $700, hoping that some of it at least might reach him, but they have not. Packages for Christmas also failed to arrive.

I know that it is not the fault of the Government that his mail is not delivered or that he has not received his pay, for Gen. Pershing urged every one to write, write, write to their husband or son, as nothing in the world cheered a soldier like letters from home (there has been at least five letters every week since his departure and no delivery of mail with the exception of the letters before named since August). If he needs letters to cheer him up, I am much worried for fear that he may develop acute melancholia; or that the $4 paid him by the Government may lead him into a wasteful and extravagant habit in his mode of life and make it harder for him when he returns and has nothing but his profession to fall back on for the support of himself and his family. Could you not get a portion of the hundred million dollar appropriation that you voted for to feed the hungry of Russia, Bulgaria, Turkey, Italy, and France, to keep down the rising tide of social unrest. I am sure that France, always generous, would be pleased to give up all or any part of her contribution to pay off an American soldier. He would at once put it in circulation in their country. Would it not have been well to have amended the bill providing that said sum should be paid when our own soldiers had received what was due them? Of course I know that this is not the fault of our Government that letters are not delivered or that the paymaster has not the money to give the boys their monthly pay, but it is the niggardly and parsimonious American people that have embarrassed this Government in not furnishing sufficient money to carry it on to a successful termination.

I write this letter "more in sorrow than in anger," but when you appreciate that the deaths from the influenza in this country were so terribly exaggerated in the French papers, and you keep receiving letters from one over there without one word of complaint, simply begging for letters, letters, letters—"Are you alive?" etc.—it gets under an old man's skin in time. If you will get me a passport to France I will go over and carry letters from his wife and mother, a picture of his baby, and a little cash from the old man, without any expense to this Government. I will pay my taxes without a murmur, subscribe for the victory loan, buy thrift stamps, make contributions to the Red Cross, Salvation Army, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association, milk for French babies, and potatoes for Irish ones; will send all of my old clothes to the Belgians, pay the luxury tax on my new ones; will go without liquor after July 1; will keep all the commandments and wish there were more for me to keep—all of this, O Lord, will I do, if you will only get one little postal card to my son on the other side announcing that his wife and daughter, mother and father still live.

[Applause.]

You might also bring, incidentally, to the attention of the one who is responsible for this situation the words of the Prophet Isaiah, "They praise me with their lips, but their hearts are far from me."

Very truly, yours,

P. S.—Do not let my name appear if you use this letter, as they might send the kid to Siberia.

[Applause.]

And so it has been all along the line. From the very day the American forces landed in France the mail conditions have been intolerable and the system of payments, especially to the wounded and sick men in the hospitals, a disgrace to any great organized effort of this sort. At the beginning the War Department passed the buck to the Post Office Department, and it was promptly passed back again. "The mail conditions are improving," said the Postmaster General and the Secretary of War on this side. "Conditions are improving" echoed Gen. Pershing and his staff across the sea. Apparently everyone was satisfied except the officers and the men themselves, who continued to receive no mail or mail at very irregular intervals and who still considered a regular pay day as a total stranger.

"But this is war," said the defenders of the administration. "These soldiers can not expect to have things go on with the regularity in vogue during peace times." This argument might be sound were it not for the fact that no such conditions existed in the English Army. Apparently the English and Canadian soldiers received both their pay and mail with regularity and dispatch. But allowing for all the difficulties to be overcome while the troops were on constant move during the period of hostilities, what excuse is there for these conditions to continue and even to grow worse now that most of the units are located at fixed points? What excuse is there for a wounded American soldier in a hospital for months to have received no mail since last summer, though his family had written him on an average of four times a week? What excuse is there for these letters to be returned to the father and mother of that boy, letters which were properly and fully addressed, as described in a letter which I have recently received from a constituent in Marblehead, Mass. Listen to this:

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: To you the people from this district pour out their troubles. Here goes mine: I have a son, a private in Battery A, One hundred and first Regiment, Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces. He has been wounded three times in action, and has been cited by Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, formerly commanding the Twenty-sixth Division, for heroic acts of bravery under enemy fire.

On January 2, 1919, we received a letter from him, dated December 12, 1918. At that time he was on his way back from the hospital (Base 19) to his battery, and he gave his address Army Post Office 709, American Expeditionary Forces. In that letter he stated that he had not received a single word from home since August, 1918, a period of over four months. Never a week passes by that less than four letters, besides newspapers, are mailed to him by we home folks, and he was terribly worried about us, as he knew that the influenza was raging here. To-day we received 11 letters we had addressed to him. The envelopes, which I am inclosing in this letter, that you may note the stamped dates on them and also see that they were properly addressed.

I hold those envelopes here, all clearly and completely addressed.

You may note that the first date is August 25, and in the boy's letter of December 12 he wrote that the letter of August 19 was the last one he received.

I am a patient and loyal man and have endured many things in silence, because the country was at war. But now patience ceases to be a virtue when I think of the inefficient way in which this Democratic Government has treated the wounded soldiers. We were advised to write letters to our boys, to keep up their morale, but it seems that Secretary Baker and Postmaster General Burleson, of cable-grabbing fame, are so interested in the political future of the Democratic Party and the furtherance of their own political future that such a thing as a home letter to a poor wounded boy lying in a hospital 3,000 miles from home is of no moment to them. It is easier to transport that letter 3,000 miles across the ocean and 3,000 miles back than to make an attempt to find the wounded boy.

God knows, and He only, where all the letters we wrote in October and November and December are. Perhaps they are on the way back to this country, and that poor boy of mine will wait in vain to hear from home.

If you could find out for me just where he is located back in his battery or at a replacement camp, I would send him a cablegram to let him know that we home folks are all right. His mother is terribly worried about the boy worrying about us. If the inclosed envelopes will be of any assistant to you in helping to arouse the majority (thank God, soon to be in the minority) party to some semblance of their responsibility to the people and not their party, you can use them in any way you please.

If the Barnum and Bailey circus parade now going on in Europe is over, and if the descriptions of that triumphal tour have all been cabled across to this country, I would suggest that President Wilson devote part of his time to straightening out the Burleson mess of congested mail conditions. Col. House is there with him, and if they are not enough, perhaps some more Texas politicians could be sent over to help out.

Seriously, Mr. Congressman, I am sore to-night when I think of the worry that has been needlessly inflicted upon my kid by the mess this administration has made in looking after the comfort and welfare of our boys. Thanking you for what you have done for me and all Marblehead in this war, I close.

Very truly, yours,

And these complaints are not confined to any one group of people or to any one section of the country. I quote you from an editorial from the Lowell Sun, one of the leading Democratic newspapers published in the district represented by my colleague, the Hon. JOHN JACOB ROGERS, who himself has for months been making a fight against existing conditions. Listen to what the editor of that Democratic newspaper has to say:

One of the most glaring instances of the failure of overseas mail to arrive at its destination in France was brought to my attention a day or two ago when I heard the story told by a Lowell young woman, who in one mail received back 38 of her own letters, written over a period of several months. The next day brought several more. Why they never reached the soldier to whom they were addressed is not known, but that does not alleviate hours of disheartening waiting which he doubtlessly experienced. A soldier away from home, without mail, soon loses his enthusiasm for the job at hand. The Government, and more acutely the postal department, should have realized this and made more than ever possible effort to get overseas mail through. This is not a remote case by any means, although it is the most deplorable piece of evidence yet brought to our attention.

Here is a case from Salem, Mass., describing another abuse now going on in France, to wit, the practice of transferring men discharged from the hospitals to new units under orders to continue indefinitely in France instead of restoring them to their old divisions and comrades, slated for an early return to this country.

Hon. WILLFRED W. LUFKIN.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor of calling your attention to a case which I should like very much to have your opinion of. My son, a corporal in Company B, One hundred and fourth United States Infantry, was sent to a hospital on October 28 with trench feet. In a letter received from him, under date of December 10, he states that he was discharged from the hospital the last of November and, with some more men of the Twenty-sixth Division, was marched to Dillon and assigned to the Three hundred and nineteenth Regiment, Eightieth Division. In a cablegram published in the papers yesterday it is stated that the Twenty-sixth Division had been ordered home. On inquiry I am informed that the Eightieth Division has not been slated for an early return. Do you think it is right for the Twenty-sixth Division to come home and some of the men who have been with it ever since it left here, men who have fought with it all through the war, be left behind? Do you think it is right to leave them over there because they were unfortunate enough to be sent to a hospital? My son has a wife depending on him for support, and if there is any possible way to have him return with the outfit he belongs with I wish you would be kind enough to let me know. I have taken this matter up with Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, and am inclosing his reply, which I would thank you very much to return with the answer to this letter.

Sincerely, yours.

The letter from the office of Maj. Gen. Edwards, formerly commanding the Twenty-sixth Division, but now commanding the Department of the Northeast in this country, indicates that this nefarious practice referred to by my constituent was once broken up, but apparently it has now again been resumed.

HEADQUARTERS NORTHEASTERN DEPARTMENT,
99 Chauncey Street, Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter in regard to your son * * * has been received, and the general directs me to tell you that after long efforts he succeeded in getting an order published which required all soldiers to be sent back to their own organizations when discharged from the hospital. Apparently this order has been revoked since we left France, or somebody has violated the order in sending your son to another organization.

It is to be regretted that he could not return to his own outfit which is the same as home to him in a military sense, and if there is anything I could do to adjust the matter I would be only too glad to do it, but the American Expeditionary Forces are far away, and a matter of this sort would be very difficult to correct. * * *

Yours, very truly,

JOHN W. HYATT,
Major, Infantry.

Here is another letter from Marblehead, Mass., rockbound in both its shores and its republicanism. This letter indicates how some of the money which we voted to take out of the people's pockets in taxes last Saturday is being spent. It also indicates how one Republican in that town looks with favor upon the gallant efforts of my friend and colleague, Congressman JAMES A. GALLIVAN, in his fight for justice to the officers and men of the Twenty-sixth, or Yankee, Division. Here is what he says:

MY DEAR SIR: I hope that you are supporting Congressman GALLIVAN in the volleys which he is pouring forth against existing conditions. I could vote for GALLIVAN with enthusiasm. Here in Marblehead two coast patrols were brought into the harbor five weeks ago. The boats are out of commission, but still the 20 men are boarding in town, at the Government's expense, doing nothing and drawing their pay. Every one of these men declares he wants to get out and get to work and not idle his days away without object or purpose. Twenty men's salary for five weeks to be added with 10,000 others to the taxes imposed upon every man who owns a hut that he calls or thinks his own. Secretary Baker has monkeyed with Congress about long enough, and I rejoice that it was a Massachusetts man who had the shades of Roosevelt to stand and rebuke him. With kindest regards for your success, I remain,

Yours, truly,

I might quote from similar letters for hours. Every Member of this House could probably do the same. But we must do more than quote from letters. We must find out who is responsible for these shortcomings, and we must place the blame where it belongs, regardless of who gets hurt. This should be one of the first and most important tasks of the new Congress. The American people demand an answer, and it is apparently impossible to obtain it from this Congress. But some committee, either a regular or a special one, must undertake these investigations once we are called into special session. I am a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department. The function of that committee is to investigate just such matters as the ones to which I have referred. The committee has never had a meeting during the present Congress. I have never had the honor even of meeting the chairman; but with the coming of the new Congress, with a Republican chairman at the head, I predict that this committee will resume the functions for which it was intended, will endeavor to find out and tell to the American Congress and the American people who is responsible for all this cussedness and neglect in the comfort and care of our victorious warriors.

Mr. LUFKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The bill, H. R. 15608, was erroneously referred to the Private Calendar, whereas it should be on the House Calendar. The Chair therefore refers it to the House Calendar.

RATIFICATION OF PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has a certificate from the governor of Nevada announcing the ratification of the prohibition amendment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. MCCORMICK was granted leave of absence for five days on account of important business.

REPRINT OF A BILL.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of the bill H. R. 15796.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PRINTING ADDRESS OF SENATOR LODGE ON LATE EX-PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] expected to ask unanimous consent to have the House print 20,000 copies of the address delivered by Senator LODGE on Sunday upon the life, character, and public services of Ex-President Roosevelt. In his absence and with his approval I make that request, the copies to be circulated through the folding room.

The SPEAKER. To be published as a House document?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that 20,000 copies of Senator LODGE's eulogy on Col. Roosevelt be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire how many that would allot to each Member?

The SPEAKER. Fifty.

Mr. ROGERS. Reserving the right to object, which I shall not do, I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he has any information as to the character of the paper which will be used in this reprint, and whether he knows there is any way by which a rather better quality of paper can be used than is habitually employed in the printing of the speeches of Members of the House?

Mr. WALSH. I have no knowledge upon that point, but I think the chairman of the Committee on Printing could see that a better quality of paper is used for the printing of this document.

Mr. ROGERS. I suggest that the Members interested confer with the chairman of the Committee on Printing and urge that that be done.

Mr. WALSH. From the conversation I have had with him, I know that he would favor that.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, there have been instances where the House has ordered certain speeches printed as a House document, and where it has been printed in a form different from the ordinary document, and well fitting the occasion. I assume that will be the case in this instance.

Mr. WALSH. That can be done without any specific order of the House?

Mr. STAFFORD. Without any specific order of the House.

The SPEAKER. I do not know how it is done, but Senator KNOX made a speech in the Senate not long ago that was printed in much larger type and on better paper than the average congressional speech.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I had in mind speeches delivered by yourself and the gentleman from North Carolina and others anent the retirement of Representative John J. Fitzgerald, and which I asked unanimous consent to be printed as a document, and they were compiled in a very fitting form.

The SPEAKER. I do not think there will be any doubt about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. That will undoubtedly be properly taken care of by the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the House print 20,000 copies of the address of Senator LODGE on the late Theodore Roosevelt, to be distributed through the folding room. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PRINTING OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed 14,000 copies of the conference report on the revenue bill, half of them to go to the House folding room and half to the document room.

The SPEAKER. Has the Senate passed on it?

Mr. KITCHIN. This is within the $500 limit.

The SPEAKER. But has the Senate agreed to the conference report?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the form in which the gentleman proposes to print this conference report show the text as it will actually be enacted, without any of these lines stricken through?

Mr. KITCHIN. Just exactly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that 14,000 copies of the conference report on the revenue bill be printed, half to be distributed through the folding room and half through the document room. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I understand that general debate on the military appropriation bill has not been concluded.

Mr. KITCHIN. The understanding is that it has been concluded with the exception of the speech by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who will have an hour to-morrow.

Mr. STAFFORD. And after that it will be considered under the five-minute rule?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 13, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 13, 1919.

Rev. G. W. Popkins, of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Oh, Lord God, our Father, Father of Jesus Christ the Savior of the world, incline Thy ears this morning and hear the prayers of Thy people. We thank Thee, Lord, for the blessings that have waited upon this Nation from its earliest history until the present moment. May we be guided in the future by Thy spirit, counseled by Thy wisdom, protected by Thy power, and saved by Thy grace. Guide these Thy servants here with Thy wisdom, and may they be lively instruments in Thy hands for accomplishing great good for this Nation and through the Nation for the world. We humbly ask it all in Jesus's name.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, February 11, 1919, when on request of Mr. MCKELLAR, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

BOLSHEVIST PROPAGANDA IN WASHINGTON (S. DOC. NO. 386).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Attorney General, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 11, 1919.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: Permit me to acknowledge receipt of the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 5th instant, which, after reciting that "it is the duty of the Attorney General to enforce the laws of the United States," directs me to report to the Senate what steps, if any, I have taken to investigate the two meetings referred to, the speeches made therein, the names of the speakers and those who supported them, and what, if any, steps I have taken to enforce the laws of the United States in the premises.

The meetings referred to took place in the city of Washington, at Poli's Theater and the Masonic Temple, on the 2d and 3d instant, respectively.

Being aware that it is my duty to enforce the laws of the United States, I had already instituted investigations of these meetings before the Senate resolution was received. Representatives of the Department of Justice were present at the meeting of the 2d, and I am in possession of rather full stenographic notes of all that occurred. What I consider accurate reports of occurrences at the meeting of the 3d are also in my possession. I believe that my department is accurately informed as to the speeches made, the names of the speakers, and everything of importance that occurred on these two occasions. This data has been and is receiving proper consideration. I shall take such action as in my judgment is warranted.

The resolution states that the speakers at these meetings advocated the subversion of the Government of the United States by force and violence. Such advocacy would, of course, be a violation of the laws of the United States. The Attorney General will appreciate it if the Senate will transmit to him the evidence on which this statement is based.

Respectfully,

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General.

Mr. JONES of Washington. My colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is not here; and I suggest that the communication from the Attorney General lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Very well; it will lie on the table and be printed.

EMBARGO ON COTTON EXPORTS.

Mr. HARDWICK. I present resolutions adopted by the State-wide cotton convention held at Macon, Ga., February 6, 1919. I ask the Secretary to read the resolutions, and then I am going to ask that they be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Resolutions adopted at State-wide cotton convention, Macon, Ga., Feb. 6, 1919.]

Whereas the New York and other cotton exchanges are no longer legitimate mediums of exchange, but have degenerated into gambling machines which, in the hands of interested speculators, has been used as an instrument for years to deprive the farmers of the South of a fair price for cotton; and

Whereas the continued existence of said New York and other cotton exchanges as at present operated is a menace to the prosperity of the South, and, being upon the same level with the Louisiana lottery, should be abolished in the same manner by legislation; and

Whereas our Senators and Representatives in Congress have from time to time attempted to curtail the gambling in the New York Cotton Exchange by certain legislation; and

Whereas this legislation has not been effective, and in a measure has impliedly recognized the right of the New York Cotton Exchange to gamble in futures between certain limits: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the cotton planters and business men of Georgia in convention assembled at Macon:

First. That we call upon our Senators and Representatives in Congress to introduce and pass more stringent measures regulating the New York and all other cotton exchanges.

Second. That in said legislation it shall be provided that before any person or firm shall offer to sell cotton on the New York Cotton Exchange they shall file with the secretary or bookkeeper of said New York Cotton Exchange an affidavit showing where said cotton is deposited and the grade of each bale.

Third. That said New York Cotton Exchange shall publish from day to day the number of bales offered for sale and the number of sales actually consummated, and the names of the parties buying and selling, and also showing where the actual cotton is located.

Fourth. That the books and business of the said New York Cotton Exchange shall at all times be under the inspection and control of the United States Government, through any of its duly appointed agents, and that it shall be also provided in said legislation that if any person or firm shall make a false affidavit that the same shall be a crime, to be punished by fine or imprisonment, or both.

Resolved, That this convention condemn the practice of the New York Cotton Exchange tendering nine grades of cotton on middling contracts. We demand of our representatives in Congress that the law regulating this exchange be so amended as to require delivery of the actual grade contracted for on any exchange.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, if the Senate will indulge me for just a moment, I wish to say that accompanying the resolutions the commissioner of agriculture of the State of Georgia sent me a letter, from which I wish to quote. He says:

GEORGIA DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Atlanta, February 10, 1919.

Hon. THOMAS W. HARDWICK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We attach hereto copy of extracts from the minutes of the State-wide cotton convention held in Macon, Ga., Thursday, February 6.

This meeting was attended by about 700 farmers, bankers, warehousemen, and merchants. Notwithstanding the fact that all roads in middle Georgia were rendered impassible for automobile travel by heavy rainfall, 80 Georgia counties were represented in this meeting. It is conceded that the meeting was the most thoroughly representative and more thoroughly in earnest than has ever been in any similar meeting.

The principles laid down in the resolutions attached are the representative views of our ablest and most conservative thinkers. The entire atmosphere of the meeting from beginning to end evidenced the unalterable determination of the Georgia people to stand shoulder to shoulder in this fight to protect cotton farmers and all cotton allied interests from the attacks of a money-mad class of spinners and exchange gamblers.

Unless the morally illegal practices into which the cotton exchanges have degenerated are curbed by national legislation and the natural laws of supply and demand be permitted to rule the markets of America, then the American producer has, in addition to handicaps imposed upon him by the changeable seasons during which his crops are produced, added the unsurmountable obstacle of the "stacked deck" fixed by the speculator regulating downward the selling prices of his hard-won products.

There are so many movements afoot, many of which emanate from Washington, to bring about a general downward trend of prices, which the unscrupulous money-maker is utilizing to his own selfish ends, it becomes vitally necessary to the welfare of the American farmer, and therefore to the American people, that the greatest statesmen devote their greatest consideration and deepest thought to the problems which unjustly handicap the farmer or interfere with the only sane balance in preservation of values—that is, the natural law of supply and demand.

We beg you to throw the weight of your influence to the side of the producer and, in advance, know full well that, as far as the power of the Georgia delegation carries, the interests of our farmers will be cared for.

Very truly, yours,

J. J. BROWN,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. President, let me say, if the Senate will indulge me for a moment more, that, in addition to the complaint voiced by the commissioner of agriculture and outlined in the resolution, in my judgment the cotton farmers of the South, and especially of Georgia, are suffering, far more than from the causes indicated in these resolutions, from an unjust and indefensive embargo upon our cotton, which was imposed as a war measure and which is maintained now, under conditions of peace, at an incalculable cost to the cotton producers of the country.

Mr. President, when this war broke out in Europe, and long before this country had become a party to it or it was even feared that it might become a party to it, when the market of the cotton planter throughout the world was suddenly destroyed by the war, the Government then took the position that the economic law of supply and demand must control in this matter. Various schemes of relief, some of which were more or less fantastic, that were suggested in the two Houses of Congress were promptly, and in most cases I admit properly, denied by the Congress and by the Government.

It does seem to me, however, that the same rule of action ought to obtain now and that, the country being at peace once more, not technically at peace but with the armistice declared and fighting ended, there is no need whatever of an embargo of any kind against any country on cotton. The economic law of supply and demand ought to control and govern this situation. It seems to me that the cotton producers of the South can only get relief when these artificial barriers to the free movement of cotton are removed.

It appears to me further, Mr. President, that if we are to have a $700,000,000 Navy per year in order to guarantee peace among the nations of the world and to promote the interest of the society of nations, and the South is expected to contribute its part of the tremendous appropriations that are necessary to carry on this and projects of similar magnitude in every branch and line of government, it will be necessary that these restrictions on the free movement of our great product shall be removed and that cotton shall be permitted to at least stand on its own merits and its own basis in the markets of the world.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Is the embargo universal against any export of cotton?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; against all exports of cotton controlled by a licensing board here in Washington, not only against countries with which we were formerly at war but against every neutral country on earth.

Mr. LODGE. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. HARDWICK. The result is that British spinners and the interests that are controlling the British Government in the interests of the British spinners are largely controlling and largely influencing the price of our cotton and of every movement connected with that product.

The cotton farmers of the South and the people of the South are entitled to demand at the hands of this administration that the depressing influence of this embargo shall be removed at once, not only on neutral countries, about which there can be no possible doubt, but in my judgment also as against every country on the earth. Certainly it can do no harm to let cotton go to Germany, or Holland, or Norway, or Sweden, or any country on earth where the money can be put up to buy it. The producers of the South, who have made this cotton with their toil and in their sweat, are entitled to this relief as a matter of common fairness, of absolute justice, and they will not be satisfied with less. Indeed, unless they have lost their manhood they will not accept less. I ask that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 18) relating to the establishment of a free, united, and independent Polish nation.

Whereas one of the 14 points proposed by President Wilson for the establishment of a permanent world peace provides for the creation of a free, independent, and united Poland, with access to the sea; and

Whereas liberty and justice loving people the world over are united in their acknowledgment that Poland is entitled to a free, independent, and autonomous existence and self-government and is entitled to all the Polish territories which belonged to her prior to her dismemberment and partition: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That we favor the establishment of an independent Polish State, composed of all Polish territories, inclusive of those which give Poland access to the sea, to the end that justice be done to the Polish nation, that the territories which were taken from her in violation of all international rights shall be restored, and in order that by the creation of such a State a durable peace of the world will be materially assured; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, properly attested by its presiding officers, be sent to the President of the United States, to the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, and to each of the United States Senators and Representatives of Wisconsin.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 17) urging the Senate of the United States to pass bill H. R. 13366, authorizing soldiers, sailors, and marines who served in the war with Germany and her allies to retain their uniforms.

Whereas bill H. Whereas the privilege accorded by this bill is a fitting tribute by the people of the United States and the Nation to the valor and glorious services of the boys who served in the United States Army in the present war: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That this legislature respectfully memorialize and urge the Senate of the United States to promptly pass bill H. R. 13366; and be it further

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House resolution 11.

Whereas the largest metal mining industry in the State of Kansas is the zinc mining industry; and

Whereas the said industry has been greatly crippled by reason of the immense importations of zinc ore from foreign countries, which said importations amounted in four years ending July 30, 1918, to the huge total of 824,000 tons; and

Whereas the War Industries Board has recently removed the embargo of April, 1918, which prohibited the use of ship bottoms for the importation of zinc ores; and

Whereas there are now 350,000 tons of zinc ore concentrated in Australia ready for shipment to the United States, together with a potential importation of 150,000 tons of zinc ore per year from Mexico and Canada: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Kansas, That immediate action is necessary to save the zinc mining industry of the State from destruction by reason of these huge importations, and therefore the Congress of the United States is hereby requested to take immediate action to save said industry by attaching a rider to the present revenue bill providing for a tariff of 2 cents per pound upon the metallic content of all zinc ore imported into the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Congressmen from the State of Kansas be requested to immediately confer with the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House with a view to having such a provision incorporated in the revenue bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I present a communication signed by the mayor of the city of Grand Rapids, Mich., embodying resolutions adopted at a meeting of the citizens of that city regarding the American troops in the Archangel region. I wish to say in connection with the resolution that I am in cordial sympathy with the purpose and the object sought to be obtained. I should like to have them read. They are very brief.

There being no objection, the communication was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

CITY OF GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.,
February 6, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At a meeting of the citizens of this city held Wednesday evening, February 5, the following resolution was adopted:

"Whereas the United States Government is now maintaining an armed force in northern Russia, among whom are a number of soldiers from this city and vicinity; and

"Whereas it appears that the force there maintained is wholly inadequate to cope with the forces sent against them, and there is grave danger that their maintenance as at present will result in many if not all of the soldiers being overcome by the forces opposed to them; and

"Whereas it appears that their maintenance in north Russia at this time is not necessary for the safety and welfare of the country or necessary as a military measure: Therefore

"Resolved, That we, the citizens of the city of Grand Rapids, most earnestly protest against the retention of our boys in Russia; and further

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be and he hereby is requested to withdraw said force at as early a date as practicable to the end that their lives may not needlessly be sacrificed in maintaining an unnecessary military venture; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Secretary of War, to the Congressmen from this district, and to the Members of the Senate from this State, and ask the Congressmen and Senators to cable the President to this effect."

Respectfully,

CHRISTIAN GALLMEYER,
Mayor.

Mr. FERNALD. I present a petition signed by a large number of citizens of the State of Maine, requesting Congress to enact into law a bill providing for the national ownership and Government operation of all the railroads in the country. I ask that the petition without the signatures be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 10, 1919.

To the Hon. BERT FERNALD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

We, the undersigned, citizens of the State of Maine, respectfully urge upon you, and through you the Congress of the United States, to have enacted into law a bill similar to or identical with H. R. 10550, providing for the national ownership and Government operation of all railroads within the territory of the United States and its possessions necessary for the furnishing of transportation to the people of the United States, including all lands, terminals, and equipment required or desirable for successful operation; and that you will cause this petition to be noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and referred to an appropriate committee.

Respectfully submitted.

GEORGE A. HAYHURST
(And others).

AMERICAN FORCES AT BREST, FRANCE.

Mr. CALDER. Several weeks ago the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] submitted a Senate resolution asking for an investigation of the conditions existing at the army camp at Brest, France. I have received numerous letters and calls from people interested in that subject, and I present to the Senate a telegram which I received this morning on the subject. I wish that the Committee on Military Affairs would take immediate steps to investigate this matter. I ask that the telegram be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 9, 1919.

United States Senator WILLIAM H. CALDER,
Washington, D. C.:

My daughter, Frances Williams, manages Memorial Hut at Brest. Reports conditions frightful for American troops. Hopes for investigation.

Mrs. JAMES HARVEY WILLIAMS.

SERVICE OF WOMEN IN THE WAR.

Mr. CALDER. I have a resolution adopted by the Woman Suffrage Party of the City of New York, urging Congress to enact legislation providing for the proper decoration of women who have served in our Army in France. The resolution is very short, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD. I know that no Senator will object to that request, for it deals with the women who served our country.

The resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

WOMAN SUFFRAGE PARTY OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK,
New York, February 6, 1919.

[Passed at a conference held Feb. 3, 1919, at 373 Fifth Avenue, New York City.]

We, the leaders, officers, and members of the New York City Woman Suffrage Party, hereby declare our belief that it is only just for the Nation to show some honor to the heroic women who enlisted under the War Department for service as nurses in the military hospitals and for canteen, welfare, and reconstruction work under the supervision of the various war organizations.

And that this honor may take concrete form we appeal to all committees whose duty it is to welcome the home-coming soldiers to take due cognizance of the return of our war sisters.

And we strongly urge the War Department to bestow upon women who have rendered military service of a high order medals or other insignia of honor, or if present rules forbid this we call upon Congress to pass a bill that will make possible national recognition of the women war workers' services and sacrifices.

Miss ADALINE STERLING,
Corresponding Secretary.

ARMY DEMOBILIZATION.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in relation to the telegram which the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] has just submitted I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], if he can inform the Senate how rapidly the demobilization of the Army is taking place and what number of men are being demobilized daily?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I regret exceedingly that I can not give the Senator from Idaho any information on that subject, except what he doubtless has and has seen in the newspapers. That is about the only information our committee has on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. Well, of course, I see certain items in the newspapers, and I always believe what I see in the newspapers. Still, at the same time, I thought perhaps the Senator from Oregon, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, might have some specific official statement in regard to it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I regret very much to say, Mr. President, that I do not get any official statements from the War Department nor have conference with them unless specially requested. Other Senators have the same source of information that I have in that respect. Our committee has been pretty busy all the time taking up matters which have been presented to us and are of pressing importance. This matter has not been called to the attention of the committee; but if the Senator from Idaho desires to have it taken up and have an inquiry made into it we shall be glad to do so.

Mr. BORAH. I was not, even by inference, criticizing the Committee on Military Affairs. I know the committee is very busy, and I know it is attending to its business in the proper way.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 711) thereon.

The committee has only reported one or two amendments to the bill, and I shall in due time ask to have it considered by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BECKHAM, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the bill (S. 5556) to provide for the erection of memorials and the entombment of bodies in the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater, in Arlington National Cemetery, Va., reported it without amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4949) for the relief of J. C. Garrett, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 714) thereon.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14945) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 715) thereon.

Mr. WOLCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 5371) for the relief of Roland S. Robbins, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 717) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 4526) for the relief of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co., reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 716) thereon.

FALLS BRIDGE IMPROVEMENT CO.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill (S. 5478) granting the consent of Congress to the Falls Bridge Improvement Co. to construct a bridge across the Tug River was wrongly referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce. I ask that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

COOS BAY WAGON-ROAD GRANT.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar 595, H. R. 8625, it being entitled "A bill to accept from the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled 'An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State,' commonly known as the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant, to provide for the disposition of said lands, and for other purposes." The bill passed the House, was duly referred to the Public Lands Committee of the Senate, and was reported out without amendment. It affects only my State. It is recommended by the Departments of the Interior and Justice, as well as by those who are interested in the grant, who are anxious to have the bill passed and to adjust the differences between the United States and the grantees in reference to the terms of the grant. It will not, I am sure, take a moment to consider the bill. If it is not passed now, it means that another year's taxes will have to be assessed against the property eventually. The Government of the United States receives a large part of the money that is to come from the sales of the lands within the limits of the grant, the State of Oregon a smaller portion of it, and the grantees a part in satisfaction of their interest therein.

Mr. BORAH. If the matter leads to debate, the Senator will not ask for its consideration?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In that event, I will not ask to have the bill considered, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That upon the execution and delivery by the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, of a deed satisfactory to the Attorney General of the United States, reconveying to the United States all the right, title, and interests of the said Southern Oregon Co. in and to the lands situated in the counties of Coos and Douglas, in the State of Oregon, and embraced within the limits of the grant made by the United States to the State of Oregon by the act of March 3, 1869, entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," commonly known as the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant, and now involved in litigation pending in the Supreme Court of the United States under the style and title "The Southern Oregon Co. against the United States," the said lands shall again become a part of the public domain, and the United States shall pay to the Southern Oregon Co. the sum of $232,463.07. The execution and delivery of the aforesaid deed within 30 days from and after the approval of this act shall constitute the acceptance of this act by the said Southern Oregon Co.; and upon the approval of such deed by the Attorney General of the United States the aforesaid suit shall be dismissed and all matters of difference, controversy, and litigation between the United States and the said Southern Oregon Co. arising out of said land grant shall be deemed fully settled, adjusted, and terminated: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to prevent the United States from instituting and maintaining such suits or actions as may be necessary to recover the value of timber or other material heretofore cut or removed from any of said lands without the consent of the Southern Oregon Co.

SEC. 2. That the taxes accrued, unpaid, and delinquent on the said lands on the date of the delivery of the deed provided for in the preceding section shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior as soon as may be after this act becomes effective, and a sum sufficient to make such payment and also to provide for the payment of the said sum of $232,463.07, as provided for in section 1 of this act, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That the said lands shall be classified and disposed of in the manner provided by the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L. p. 218), for the classification and disposition of the Oregon & California Railroad grant lands: Provided, That such persons who, being citizens of the United States, have continuously leased from the said Southern Oregon Co. for a period of not less than 10 years, or who under lease from said company have cultivated and placed valuable improvements upon any of said lands classified as agricultural, not exceeding 160 acres to each person, shall be allowed a preference right of six months in which to purchase such lands from the United States by paying therefor the sum of $2.50 per acre and reimbursing the United States for the taxes paid on such land: Provided further, That where any of such leased lands have been resided upon, to the same extent and in the same manner as is required under the homestead laws, since the 1st day of December, 1913, by any person duly qualified to enter such lands claiming adversely to such lessee, and who has improved the land and devoted some portion thereof to agricultural use, and who shall have maintained his residence to the date of his application, the claim of such settler and resident shall be superior to that of the lessee, and he shall be allowed the preference right of entry afforded actual settlers by section 5 of the act of June 9, 1916, aforesaid.

SEC. 4. That the title to all money arising out of said lands and now on deposit to await the final outcome of said suit now pending in the Supreme Court, as aforesaid, is hereby vested in the United States, and the United States is subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the obligee or obligees, and especially of Harry E. Laughlin as commissioner, under any contract for the purchase of timber on said lands.

SEC. 5. That all moneys received from or on account of said lands and timber and the timber thereon under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in a separate fund to be designated "The Coos Bay Wagon Road grant fund," which fund shall be disposed of in the following manner: A separate account shall be kept in the General Land Office of the sales of said lands and timber within each of the two counties of Coos and Douglas, and after the proceeds from such sales amount to a sum equal to that applied to pay the accrued taxes in that county and a sum equal to $2.50 per acre for each acre of such land therein title to which is revested in the United States pursuant to the provisions of this act, 25 per cent of all other moneys received from said lands shall be paid to the treasurer of the county in which the lands sold are situated for common schools, roads, highways, bridges, and port districts, to be apportioned by the county courts for the several purposes above mentioned; and the remainder shall become a part of the general fund in the Treasury of the United States. The payments herein authorized shall be made by the Treasurer of the United States upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, as the fund accumulates in the Treasury: Provided, That none of the payments to the counties provided for in this section shall be made until the Treasury has been reimbursed in the amount paid to the Southern Oregon Co. and also for all taxes paid pursuant to the provisions of section 2 of this act.

SEC. 6. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect; and any person, applicant, purchaser, entryman, or witness who shall swear falsely in any affidavit or proceeding required hereunder or under the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior shall be guilty of perjury and liable to the penalties prescribed therefor.

SEC. 7. That the sum of $12,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, or otherwise, to complete the classification of the lands as herein provided, which amount shall be immediately available and shall remain available until such classification shall have been completed.

SEC. 8. That this act shall become effective upon its acceptance by the Southern Oregon Co. in the manner provided by the first section hereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I ask that the report of the committee may be printed in the RECORD in explanation thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report (S. Rept. No. 650) submitted by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, is as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8625) to accept from the Southern Oregon Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Oregon, a reconveyance of the lands granted to the State of Oregon by the act approved March 3, 1869, entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," commonly known as the Coos Bay wagon-road grant, to provide for the disposition of said lands, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, begs leave to report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The necessity for the above legislation is clearly set forth in House Report No. 687 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, as follows:

"The history of the Coos Bay wagon-road grant and the reasons for this legislation are in brief as follows:

"The grant in question was made to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Coos Bay to Roseburg, in Oregon. The grant was made March 3, 1869 (15 Stat., 340), hereinafter set forth. The State selected the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. to construct the road, and by act of its legislature October 22, 1870, hereinafter set forth, transferred all its rights and interests in and to the grant to said company subject to all the conditions and limitations prescribed in the act of Congress by which the grant was made to the State.

"The wagon road was constructed by said company in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress of March 3, 1869. By act of Congress approved June 18, 1874 (hereinafter set forth), issuance of patent to said granted lands was authorized to said Coos Bay Wagon Road Co., and in pursuance thereof patents were issued by the United States to said company for 105,120.11 acres.

"By mesne conveyances the Southern Oregon Co., mentioned in the bill H. R. 8625, became the owner of the granted lands December 14, 1887, in so far as the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. was competent to transfer them, with the exception of approximately 7,500 acres previously sold by the road company and one of its successors to individuals.

"In addition to said sale of 7,500 acres, some 4,500 acres of land have been disposed of to different parties, so that the entire area undisposed of is approximately 93,000 acres.

"On account of the violation of the terms of the granting act, which prohibited sales in quantities greater than 160 acres to any one person and at a price exceeding $2.50 per acre, the Attorney General of the United States filed suit for a forfeiture of the land grant in the United States court for the district of Oregon. This court and the circuit court of appeals refused to grant a forfeiture, but decreed that the Southern Oregon Co. be enjoined from making further sales in violation of law and from making any sale or disposition whatever of the land and timber until Congress shall have reasonable time within which to provide for their disposition in such manner as it may deem proper, at the same time securing to the company all the value conferred by the granting act. The case is now pending on appeal by defendant before the Supreme Court of the United States.

"The following letter from the Attorney General of the United States gives more in detail the history of the grant and the reasons in favor of H. R. 8625 as introduced:

"DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
"Washington, D. C., January 21, 1918.

"Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
"Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
"House of Representatives.

"MY DEAR SIR: I have just received your letter of the 19th requesting a report on House bill No. 8625, present Congress, authorizing an acceptance from the Southern Oregon Co. of a reconveyance of the lands constituting the Coos Bay wagon grant in the State of Oregon.

"The grant in question was made to the State of Oregon by the act of March 3, 1869 (15 Stat., 340), to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, and was upon condition that the granted lands should be sold in quantities not greater than a quarter section to any one person and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre. By an act of October 22, 1870, the Legislature of the State of Oregon donated the lands to the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co., subject to all the conditions and limitations prescribed in the act of Congress by which the grant was made to the State.

"Upon certificate from the governor of the State that the road had been constructed, four patents were issued by the United States, as follows: No. 1, dated February 12, 1875, for 42,496.93 acres; No. 2, March 18, 1876, for 1,080 acres; No. 3, November 8, 1876, for 61,111.53 acres; and No. 4, February 17, 1877, 431.65 acres, making an aggregate of 105,120.11 acres.

"Prior to 1876 the Wagon Road Co. disposed of in small quantities about 7,500 acres of the lands to individuals, some sales embracing as much as an entire section of land, and on May 31, 1875, the company entered into an agreement to sell all of the lands and the road to one John Miller for the price of $1 per acre for the lands, and on that day the company executed to Miller a deed for all of the lands that had then been patented and which had not been sold to individuals—that is to say, about 3,500 acres. The contract with Miller provided that the balance of the lands would be conveyed to him as soon as the patents were procured from the Government. In furtherance of this agreement the Wagon Road Co. on January 7, 1884, executed a deed to one William H. Besse for the lands that had been patented to the company since the date of the deed to Miller in 1875, for an alleged consideration of $91,715.05; and by mesne conveyances these lands were conveyed to the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. on January 4, 1884. In the meantime Besse had acquired by intermediate conveyances the lands that had been deeded to Miller in 1875. He conveyed them to one Russell Gray on December 29, 1883, and Gray on January 5, 1884, transferred them to the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. So that in 1884 the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. became the owner of the entire grant in so far as the Oregon Road Co. was competent to transfer it, with the exception, of course, of the area of approximately 7,500 acres that had been previously conveyed to individuals.

"In order to secure certain bonds that had been issued by it the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. executed a deed of trust conveying all of its property to the Boston Safe Deposit & Trust Co., of Massachusetts, which company was in 1886 succeeded as trustee by William H. Rotch and Edward D. Mandell; and during that year proceedings were begun in the United States court for the district of Oregon to foreclose the deed of trust, as a result of which a sale of the property was ordered and was made by a master to Rotch, one of the trustees, and one W. W. Crapo, who on December 14, 1887, transferred the property to the Southern Oregon Co.

"By a joint resolution approved April 30, 1908 (35 Stat., 571), Congress authorized and directed the Attorney General of the United States to institute such proceedings as might be necessary to enforce all the rights and remedies of the United States growing out of this grant. In pursuance of that law the Attorney General filed a suit in the United States court for the district of Oregon praying, among other things, for a forfeiture of the land grant. However, before this suit proceeded to a determination, the Supreme Court of the United States had decided the somewhat similar case growing out of the Oregon & California Railroad land grant (238 U. S., 393), in which it held that while the railroad company had violated the law in selling lands contrary to the terms of the grant, such violation nevertheless did not operate as a forfeiture of the entire grant. In view of the action of the Supreme Court in the railroad case, the district court for Oregon, on July 12, 1915 (225 Fed., 560), rendered a decision and entered a decree in the present case along the lines of the Supreme Court's decision in the railroad case; and on the appeal of the Southern Oregon Co. the decree of the district court was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals February 13, 1917 (241 Fed., 16). By this decree the company is enjoined from making further sales in violation of the law and from making any sale or disposition whatever of the land and timber until Congress shall have a reasonable time within which to provide for their disposition in such manner as it may deem proper, at the same time securing to the company all the value conferred by the granting act. The Southern Oregon Co. took a further appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, where the case is now pending.

"The bill upon which you request my views authorizes a settlement of this litigation in the following manner: Upon the execution and delivery by the Southern Oregon Co. of a deed satisfactory to the Attorney General, reconveying to the United States all of the company's right, title, and interest under the grant, the lands are to become again a part of the public domain, and the United States is to pay the Southern Oregon Co. the sum of $232,463.07, whereupon the suit now pending in the Supreme Court is to be dismissed and all matters of difference, controversy, and litigation between the United States and the Southern Oregon Co. arising out of this land grant are to be fully settled, adjusted, and terminated.

"The bill also provides that the taxes accrued and unpaid on the lands at the time of delivery of the deed of reconveyance provided for shall be paid by the United States, and a sum sufficient to make that payment and also to provide for the payment of the sum of $232,463.07 to the company is appropriated by the bill.

"The bill further provides that the lands are to be classified and disposed of in the manner provided for the classification and disposition of the Oregon & California Railroad grant lands by the Chamberlain-Ferris Act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218); and after the Treasury is reimbursed for the taxes paid on the lands and in the amount paid the Southern Oregon Co. the balance of the proceeds is to be distributed as follows: Twenty-five per cent to the county in which the lands sold are situated for common schools, roads, highways, and bridges, and port districts; 25 per cent to the State treasurer to become a part of the irreducible school fund of the State; 40 per cent to be paid into the reclamation fund; and the remainder to become a part of general fund in the Treasury.

"The evident purpose of the bill is to dispose of this somewhat complicated and vexatious matter without further litigation or further delay of any sort. The act is to become effective, upon acceptance by the Southern Oregon Co., within 30 days from and after its approval, and there has been filed in this department a proposition by the president of the company for the settlement of the case, which gives absolute assurance of the company's acceptance of the bill if enacted into law.

"Since the acquisition of the grant by the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. and the Southern Oregon Co. some 4,500 acres of land have been disposed of to different parties, so that the entire area undisposed of is now approximately 93,000 acres, and the amount to be paid the company is at the rate of $2.50 per acre of this area. At the trial of the case in the district court the Southern Oregon Co. offered evidence showing receipts and disbursements on account of the land grant as follows:

"Receipts.

Sale of lands	$24,500.00
Sales of timberlands and timber	77,621.47
Leases of lands	10,937.44
Chittam bark	11,223.01
Total	124,281.92

"Disbursements.

Land expense, cruising, fire protection, etc	$17,229.61
Improvement on land made by lessees	1,399.05
Stumpage expenses, cost of delivering logs	4,475.35
Chittam bark, expenses of marketing	17,904.12
General expenses	218,207.83
General taxes	325,305.17
Special road taxes	5,787.47
School taxes	762.90
Legal expenses	6,077.15
Interest	218,829.49
Total	815,978.44
Receipts	124,281.92
Excess disbursements over receipts	691,696.52
Interest	218,829.49
Excess disbursements over receipts, other than interest	472,867.03

"It should be noted that the disbursements do not include the price originally paid by the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. for the land grant. I have given little consideration to the alleged price paid by the Southern Oregon Co. at the time of its purchase from the trustees in 1886, for the reason that the new company was but, in my judgment, a reorganization of the old company; and, so far as I have been able to gather, the only new money advanced was a sum sufficient to cover the expenses of the foreclosure proceedings. However, it is clear from the evidence that the Oregon Southern Improvement Co. paid $120,000 for the land grant at the time of its purchase in 1884, and, as above stated, that amount was not included in the disbursements, apparently having been overlooked.

"I do not feel that the company should be properly credited with all the items of disbursements submitted at the time of the trial; for example, general expenses, amounting to $218,207.83; general taxes, amounting to $325,305.17; interest, amounting to $218,829.49. The general expenses were probably incurred in connection with other matters than the land grant, because the company's holdings were not limited to these lands. The same thing may be said of the general taxes, and it is not satisfactorily shown why the item of interest should be charged as a disbursement on account of the land grant. I am satisfied, however, that the company has expended more than $200,000 in taxes on the lands, and I have no reason to question other items of expense aggregating, say, $50,000, while it is clear that $120,000 was paid as purchase price for the lands, all of which aggregates $370,000.

"These lands are situated in the counties of Coos and Douglas and the company has paid no taxes since the year 1908. The taxes in Coos County, without penalty and interest, for the years 1909 to 1916 amount to $233,636.45, while with the penalty and interest these taxes amount to $366,693.95. The net tax claimed by Douglas County, where the smaller portion of the grant is situated, amounts to $32,463.55, while the penalty and interest in this county are $9,699.11, making a total for Douglas County of $42,162.66; or, the total tax claimed by both counties, $408,846.61. It will thus be seen that if Congress assumes the obligation of paying all the accrued taxes, with penalty and interest, the total cost to the Government will amount to $641,309.68.

"For obvious reasons I must refrain from discussing in a communication of this character the legal questions involved in the case and upon which its determination may depend, and therefore shall merely say that upon equitable grounds I think the settlement of the litigation should be authorized along the lines laid out in the bill. Assuming a favorable decision in the Supreme Court, the matter must then be referred to Congress for action and followed by further litigation to determine the measure of the grant, the moneys received by the company on account of it, and the balance due, all of which will, of course, involve months, if not years, of delay. The company has made nothing out of the land grant; on the contrary, it has become deeply involved in debt, having expended far more than it will receive under this settlement. These lands, which at the time of the grant were worth very little—certainly not more than $1 per acre in the aggregate—are now worth $15 or $20 per acre, or at least one million and a half or two million dollars in all, and by the proposed settlement the Government will make not less than a million dollars in excess of the amount it is to disburse on account of the grant, even assuming that Congress will authorize the payment of the taxes, with penalties and interest.

"The measure of taxes to be paid should, in my judgment, be determined by Congress, and I will not go further than to suggest that the provision in this regard should be made plain so as to indicate clearly whether it is to include penalties and interest; and if so, to what extent. The disposition of the lands and the distribution of the proceeds are likewise matters not primarily within the jurisdiction of this department, and I therefore have no comment to make thereon.

"Very respectfully,

"T. W. GREGORY,
"Attorney General.

"The following is the proposal of settlement made by the Southern Oregon Co.:

"In the Supreme Court of the United States. Southern Oregon Co. v. United States of America.

"To the United States of America:

"In order to bring about a speedy determination of the controversy involved in the above-entitled suit and to settle matters of dispute between the United States and the Southern Oregon Co., the Southern Oregon Co. hereby agrees to execute a quitclaim deed to the United States for all the lands involved in the above litigation and described in the bill of complainant herein, except for lots 2, 3, and 4 of section 7 and lot 3 of section 29, township 26 south, range 12 west, the said lands having been sold by Coos Bay Road Co., at a price and in a quantity in accordance with the act for the sum of $232,463.07, providing the United States will agree to discharge all unpaid taxes against said lands and relieve the Southern Oregon Co. from any obligation in relation thereto, and will release the Southern Oregon Co. from any claim by reason of the judgment for costs in this suit and from all claims which the United States might be considered to have or assert on account of sales heretofore made by the Southern Oregon Co. or its predecessors in interest, or on account of moneys received by said Southern Oregon Co. or its predecessors in interest, through leases, sales of personal property, or on any account.

"In order that there may be no misunderstanding hereafter as to the meaning of this proposal, it must be understood and agreed that the acceptance by the United States of our deed for such lands as are embraced in the bill and are claimed by us fully settles and discharges all claims of every nature and character which ever have been asserted or might hereafter be asserted against the Southern Oregon Co. because of its claim of ownership of the lands embraced in the Coos Bay wagon-road grant, or on any account whatever.

"The granting act of March 3, 1869 (15 Stat., 340), is as follows:

"'Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the State of Oregon, to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, alternate sections of public lands, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width on each side of said road: Provided, That the lands hereby granted shall be exclusively applied to the construction of said road and to no other purpose, and shall be disposed of only as the work progresses: Provided further, That the grant of lands herein made shall be upon condition that the lands shall be sold to any one person only in quantities not greater than one quarter section, and for a price not exceeding $2.50 per acre: And provided further, That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States, or otherwise appropriated by act of Congress or other competent authority, be, and the same are hereby, reserved from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be necessary to locate the route of said road through the same, in which case the right of way to the width of 100 feet is granted: And provided further, That the grant hereby made shall not embrace any mineral lands of the United States, or any lands to which homestead or preemption rights have attached.

"'SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That lands hereby granted to said State shall be disposed of only in the following manner; that is to say, when the governor of said State shall certify to the Secretary of the Interior that 10 continuous miles of said road are completed, then a quantity of the land hereby granted, not to exceed 30 sections, may be sold, and so on from time to time until said road shall be completed; and if said road is not completed within five years no further sales shall be made, and the lands remaining unsold shall revert to the United States: Provided, however, That the entire amount of public land granted by this act shall not exceed three sections per mile for each mile actually constructed.

"The following is the report of the Secretary of the Interior, Franklin K. Lane:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"Washington, February 6, 1918.

"Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
"Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
"House of Representatives.

"MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: In response to your request of the 14th instant for a report on House bill 5625, I have the honor to submit the following:

"The general purpose of this bill is to authorize the acceptance, on behalf of the United States, of a reconveyance from the Southern Oregon Co. of the lands granted to aid in the construction of a military wagon road by the act of March 3, 1869, from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, Oreg., with certain conditions attendant upon such acceptance, to wit, the payment to the said company of the sum of $232,463.07 and the taxes due the counties of Coos and Douglas, in said State, amounting, with interest, penalties, and costs, at the present time to $408,846.

"The report of the Attorney General on this bill of the 21st instant, contains a very complete statement of the facts leading up to the present proposed measure—the grant and its covenants, the failure of the company to observe such covenants, and the resulting litigation now pending for the forfeiture of said grant—and reaches the conclusion, after a consideration of the somewhat analogous case growing out of the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., and the judicial proceedings for the forfeiture thereof, that the settlement of the present litigation should be authorized in the manner proposed herein. This conclusion of the Attorney General seems to rest on the assumption that a decision favorable to the United States will be rendered in the suit now pending, which will require thereafter action by Congress, as in the Oregon & California case, followed by further litigation to determine the existing equities of the parties, all of which will involve a period of considerable delay, the interest and penalties on the unpaid taxes in the meantime accumulating, while if the settlement is effected as proposed the Government will ultimately realize, after payment of all claims now contemplated against the United States, a sum of probably not less than $1,000,000, without further litigation.

"I am constrained to abide by the conclusion of the Attorney General as to the policy of this bill as to the legal and equitable considerations involved, as well as the interests of the Government from a financial standpoint, without further comment. An additional reason for this conclusion is found in the fact that the lands involved in this measure lie adjacent to those included within the Oregon & California grant, and if title thereto is revested in the United States, as now proposed, will form a substantial addition thereto of valuable timberlands, which in itself will be an item of no little advantage in future timber sales by the Government.

"The proposed disposition of the lands and the timber thereon is practically along the lines covered by the act of June 9, 1916, in dealing with the Oregon and California grant, and so far as similar thereto calls for no comment at the present time. An exception, however, to this is found in a provision contained in section 3 of the bill, to the effect that where citizens of the United States have continuously leased from the defendant for a period of not less than 10 years any of said lands classified as agricultural not exceeding 160 acres to each person they shall be allowed a preference right of six months in which to purchase said lands from the United States by paying therefor the sum of $2.50 per acre; an exception, however, being made to this provision in the interest of bona fide settlement claims maintained since December 1, 1913. This provision introduces an element of adjustment that I do not think should be recognized. Under no circumstances could tenants of the defendant acquire such equities as would entitle them to purchase the land from the United States on the resumption of title thereto.

"Section 4 of the bill, declaring that the title to all money arising out of said lands and now on deposit to await the final outcome of pending litigation shall be vested in the United States is intended to cover a sale made with the approval of the Department of Justice and confirmed by the court for the timber upon a part of section 35, township 26 south, range 12 west, Willamette meridian, the proceeds to be held in escrow pending termination of litigation.

"The remainder of the bill, in so far as it provides for the disposition of the proceeds of the land and the timber thereon, to which title will be secured if this bill becomes law, is practically in keeping with the similar provisions of the Oregon and California act and calls for no special consideration at the hands of the department.

"Consideration of the situation presented, aside from any questions of law or equity involved, particularly in view of the course pursued with respect to the Oregon and California grant lands, brings me to the conclusion that the present bill should receive favorable consideration at the hands of Congress, with one amendment, however, inserting, in line 13, page 2, after the word 'State,' the phrase 'free from all claims and encumbrances, save and except the taxes due the counties of Coos and Douglas, in the State of Oregon.' With this amendment and the exception heretofore noted, I have the honor to recommend the enactment of the proposed measure.

"Cordially, yours,

"FRANKLIN K. LANE, Secretary.

"The Secretary of Agriculture, D. F. Houston, made the following report:

"FEBRUARY 13, 1918.

"Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
"Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
"House of Representatives.

"DEAR MR. FERRIS: Receipt is acknowledged of a copy of the bill (H. R. 8625) providing for the disposition of what are commonly known as the Coos Bay wagon-road grant lands, with the request that your committee be sent such suggestions as this department may see fit to offer.

"The bill is in many respects similar to the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218), providing for the classification and disposition of the so-called Oregon & California Railroad grant lands. It provides in section 1 that upon the execution and delivery by the Southern Oregon Co. (the present owners of the lands) of a deed satisfactory to the Attorney General reconveying in the United States all right, title, and interest of said corporation to said lands, they shall become a part of the public domain, the United States shall pay to the company the sum of $232,463.07, and the litigation between the United States and the said company now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States shall be dismissed.

"Section 2 provides that all taxes accrued and unpaid on said lands at the date of delivery of said deed shall be paid by the United States and appropriates a sum sufficient for such payment and also for the payment provided in section 1. It is provided in section 3 that the lands shall be classified and disposed of in the manner provided by the act of June 9, 1916, supra, except that citizens of the United States who have leased continuously from the company for not less than 10 years not exceeding 160 acres of said lands classified as agricultural shall be allowed a perference right of six months in which to purchase them at $2.50 per acre, and if any of such leased lands have been resided upon adversely to the lessee and improved and cultivated as required by the homestead laws since December 1, 1913, by a person qualified to enter such lands, he shall be allowed the preference right of entry afforded actual settlers by section 5 of the act of June 9, 1916, supra. Section 4 vests in the United States the title to all money arising out of said lands and now on deposit awaiting the final outcome of said suit now pending in the Supreme Court and subrogates the United States to all rights and remedies of the obligee or obligees under any contract for the purchase of the timber on said lands.

"Section 5 provides that all moneys received from the said lands and the timber thereon shall constitute a special fund and provides for the disposition of the same.

"Section 6 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to perform any and all acts and make rules and regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of the act, and provides that any person swearing falsely on any affidavit or proceeding required thereunder shall be liable to the penalties prescribed for perjury.

"By section 7 there is appropriated the sum of $50,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, or otherwise, to classify the lands as provided in the bill.

"This department is interested in this measure in two particulars. First, it is now protecting these lands, upon request of the Interior Department, until such time as the Supreme Court of the United States shall decide the case now before it involving the proper disposition of the lands. The money obtained for this protection is an appropriation of $10,000 made in the act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat., 372). Second, section 7 of the bill proposes that the $50,000 appropriated may be used to enable the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, to complete the classification as provided for in the bill. No doubt your committee will be informed by the Department of the Interior of the acreage and location of the lands to be thus disposed of and by the Department of Justice as to the status of the suit now on appeal before the Supreme Court of the United States. While a very small portion of the lands are within national forests and should be retained by the Government for growing timber, this department has no recommendation to make regarding them now, since it is believed that details of this character will have to be worked out later by special legislation.

"For this reason this department has no objection to the passage of the bill in its present form.

"Very truly, yours,

"(Signed) D. F. HOUSTON, Secretary.

"As section 3 of the bill provides that the lands shall be classified and disposed of in the manner provided by the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat. L., p. 218), for the classification and disposition of the Oregon and California railroad-grant lands, said act is as follows:

"'Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the title to so much of the lands granted by the act of July 25, 1866, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad in California to Portland, in Oregon," as amended by the acts of 1868 and 1869, for which patents have been issued by the United States, or for which the grantee is entitled to receive patents under said grant, and to so much of the lands granted by the act of May 4, 1870, entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon," for which patents have been issued by the United States, or for which the grantee is entitled to receive patents under said grant, as had not been sold by the Oregon & California Railroad Co. prior to July 1, 1913, be, and the same is hereby, revested in the United States: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the right of way to the extent of 100 feet in width on each side of the railroad and all lands in actual use by said railroad company on December 9, 1915, for depots, sidetracks, wood yards, and standing grounds.

"'SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, or otherwise, is hereby authorized and directed, after due examination in the field, to classify said lands by the smallest legal subdivisions thereof into three classes, as follows:

"'Class 1. Power-site lands, which shall include only such lands as are chiefly valuable for water-power sites, which lands shall be subject to withdrawal and such use and disposition as has been or may be provided by law for other public lands of like character.

"'Class 2. Timberlands, which shall include lands bearing a growth of timber not less than 300,000 feet board measure on each 40-acre subdivision.

"'Class 3. Agricultural lands, which shall include all lands not falling within either of the two other classes:

"'Provided, That any of said lands, however classified, may be reclassified if, because of a change of conditions or other reasons, such action is required to denote properly the true character and class of such lands: Provided further, That all the general laws of the United States now existing or hereafter enacted relating to the granting of rights of way over or permits for the use of public lands shall be applicable to all lands title to which is revested in the United States under the provisions of this act. All lands disposed of under the provisions of this act shall be subject to all rights of way which the Secretary of the Interior shall at any time deem necessary for the removal of the timber from any lands of class 2.

"'SEC. 3. That the classification provided for by the preceding section shall not operate to exclude from exploration, entry, and disposition under the mineral-land laws of the United States any of said lands, except power sites, which are chiefly valuable for the mineral deposits contained therein, and the general mineral laws are hereby extended to all of said lands except power sites: Provided, That any person entering mineral lands of class 2 shall not acquire title to the timber thereon, which shall be sold as hereinafter provided in section 4, but he shall have the right to use so much of the timber thereon as may be necessary in the development and operation of his mine until such time as such timber is sold by the United States.

"'SEC. 4. That nonmineral lands of class 2 shall not be disposed of until the Secretary of the Interior has determined and announced that the merchantable timber thereon has been removed, and thereupon said lands shall fall into class 3 and be disposed of in the manner hereinafter provided for the disposal of lands of that class.

"'The timber on lands of class 2 shall be sold for cash by the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, or otherwise, to citizens of the United States, associations of such citizens, and corporations organized under the laws of the United States, or any State, Territory, or District thereof, at such times, in such quantities, and under such plan of public competitive bidding as in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior may produce the best results: Provided, That said Secretary shall have the right to reject any bid where he has reason to believe that the price offered is inadequate, and may reoffer the timber until a satisfactory bid is received: Provided further, That upon application of a qualified purchaser that any legal subdivision shall be separately offered for sale such subdivision shall be separately offered before being included in any offer of a larger unit, if such application be filed within 90 days prior to such offer: And provided further, That said timber shall be sold as rapidly as reasonable prices can be secured therefor in a normal market.

"'The Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as the purchase price is fully paid by any person purchasing under the provisions of this section, issue to such purchaser a patent conveying the timber and expressly reserving the land to the United States. The timber thus purchased may be cut and removed by the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, within such period as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, which period shall be designated in the patent; all rights under said patent shall cease and terminate at the expiration of said period: Provided, That in the event the timber is removed prior to the expiration of said period the Secretary of the Interior shall make due announcement thereof, whereupon all rights under the patent shall cease.

"'No timber shall be removed until the issuance of patent therefor. All timber sold under this act shall be subject to the taxing power of the States apart from the land as soon as patents are issued as provided for herein.

"'SEC. 5. That nonmineral lands of class 3 shall be subject to entry under the general provisions of the homestead laws of the United States, except as modified herein, and opened to entry in accordance with the provisions of the act of September 30, 1913 (37 Stat. L., p. 113). Fifty cents per acre shall be paid at the time the original entry is allowed and $2 per acre when final proof is made. The provisions of section 2301, Revised Statutes, shall not apply to any entry hereunder and no patent shall issue until the entryman has resided upon and cultivated the land for a period of three years, proof of which shall be made at any time within five years from date of entry. The area cultivated shall be such as to satisfy the Secretary of the Interior that the entry is made in good faith for the purpose of settlement and not for speculation: Provided, That the payment of $2.50 per acre shall not be required from homestead entrymen upon lands of class 2 when the same shall become subject to entry as agricultural lands in class 3: Provided further, That during the period fixed for the submission of applications to make entry under this section any person duly qualified to enter such lands who has resided thereon, to the same extent and in the same manner as is required under the homestead laws, since the 1st day of December, 1913, and who has improved the land and devoted some portion thereof to agricultural use, and who shall have maintained his residence to the date of such application, shall have the preferred right to enter the quarter section upon which he was so residing whether such lands shall be of class 2 or class 3 and where such quarter section does not contain more than 1,200,000 feet board measure of timber, and where the quarter section contains more than the said quantity of timber such person may enter the 40-acre tract, or lot or lots containing approximately 40 acres, upon which his improvements, or the greater part thereof, are situated: Provided further, That a prior exercise of the homestead right by any such person shall not be a bar to the exercise of such preference rights: And provided further, That all of the following-described lands which may become revested in the United States by operation of this act, to wit: Township 1 south, range 5 east, sections 23 and 35; township 1 south, range 6 east, sections 3, 5, 7, 9, 17, 19, 29, 31, and 33; township 2 south, range 5 east, sections 1 and 3; township 2 south, range 6 east, sections 1, 3, 5, 7, 9, and 11; township 2 south, range 7 east, section 7; township 3 south, range 3 east, section 15; township 4 south, range

4 east, sections 11 and 13; township 4 south, range 5 east, sections 19 and 29; and township 12 south, range 7 west, sections 15, 21, 23, 27, 33, and 35, Willamette meridian and base, State of Oregon, shall be withheld from entry or other disposition for a period of two years after the approval hereof.

"'SEC. 6. That persons who purchase timber on lands of class 2 shall be required to pay a commission of one-fifth of 1 per cent of the purchase price paid, to be divided equally between the register and receiver, within the maximum compensation allowed them by law; and the register and receiver shall receive no other compensation whatever for services rendered in connection with the sales of timber under the provisions of section 4 of this act.

"'SEC. 7. That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to institute and prosecute any and all suits in equity and actions at law against the Oregon & California Railroad Co., and any other proper party which he may deem appropriate, to have determined the amount of moneys which have been received by the said railroad company or its predecessors from or on account of any of said granted lands, whether sold or unsold, patented or unpatented, and which should be charged against it as a part of the "full value" secured to the grantees under said granting acts as heretofore interpreted by the Supreme Court. In making this determination the court shall take into consideration and give due and proper legal effect to all receipts of money from sales of land or timber, forfeited contracts, rent, timber depredations, and interest on contracts, or from any other source relating to said lands; also to the value of timber taken from said lands and used by said grantees or their successor or successors. In making this determination in the aforementioned suit or suits the court shall also determine, on the application of the Attorney General, the amount of the taxes on said lands paid by the United States, as provided in this act, and which should in law have been paid by the said Oregon & California Railroad Co., and the amount thus determined shall be treated as money received by said railroad company.

"'SEC. 8. That the title to all money arising out of said grant lands and now on deposit to await the final outcome of said suit commenced by the United States in pursuance of said joint resolution of 1908 is hereby vested in the United States, and the United States is subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the obligee or obligees, and especially of Louis L. Sharp as commissioner, under any contract for the purchase of timber on the grant lands.

"'SEC. 9. That the taxes accrued and now unpaid on the lands revested in the United States, whether situate in the State of Oregon or State of Washington, shall be paid by the Treasurer of the United States, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, as soon as may be after the approval of this act, and a sum sufficient to make such payment is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

"'SEC. 10. That all moneys received from or on account of said lands and timber under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States in a special fund, to be designated "The Oregon and California land-grand fund," which fund shall be disposed of in the following manner: The Secretary of the Interior shall ascertain as soon as may be the exact number of acres of said lands, sold or unsold, patented to the Oregon & California Railroad Co., or its predecessors, and the number of acres of unpatented lands which said railroad company is entitled to receive under the terms of said grants and the value of said lands at $2.50 per acre. From the sum thus ascertained he shall deduct the amount already received by the said railroad company and its predecessors in interest on account of said lands and which should be charged against it as determined under section 7 of this act; and a sum equal to the balance thus resulting shall be paid, as herein provided, to the said railroad company, its successors or assigns, and to those having liens on the land, as their respective interests may appear. The amount due lien holder shall be evidenced either by the consent, in writing, of the railroad company or by a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction in a suit to which the railroad company and the lien holders are parties. Payments shall be made from time to time, as the fund accumulates, by the Treasurer of the United States upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, however, That if, upon the expiration of 10 years from the approval of this act, the proceeds derived from the sale of lands and timber are not sufficient to pay the full amount which the said railroad company, its successors or assigns, are entitled to receive, the balance due shall be paid from the general funds in the Treasury of the United States, and an appropriation shall be made therefor. After the said railroad company, its successors or assigns, and the lien holders shall have been paid the amount to which they are entitled, as provided herein, an amount equal to that paid for accumulated taxes, as provided in section 9 hereof, shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States, thereafter all other moneys received from the sales of land and timber shall be distributed as follows:

"'A separate account shall be kept in the General Land Office of the sales of land and timber within each county in which any of said lands are situated, and, after deducting from the amount of the proceeds arising from such sales in each county a sum equal to that applied to pay the accrued taxes in that county and a sum equal to $2.50 per acre for each acre of such land therein title to which is revested in the United States under this act, 25 per cent of the remainder shall be paid to the State treasurer of the State in which the land is located, to be and become a part of the irreducible school fund of the State; 25 per cent shall be paid to the treasurer of the county for common schools, roads, highways, bridges, and port districts, to be apportioned by the county courts for the several purposes above named; 40 per cent shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act; 10 per cent shall become a part of the general fund in the Treasury of the United States; and of the balance remaining in said Oregon and California land-grant fund, from whatsoever source derived, 25 per cent shall be paid to the State treasurer of the State in which the land is located, to be and become a part of the irreducible school fund of the State; 25 per cent shall be paid to the treasurer of the county for common schools, roads, highways, bridges, and port districts, to be apportioned by the county courts for the several purposes above named; and the remainder shall become a part of the general fund in the Treasury of the United States. The payments herein authorized shall be made to the treasurers of the States and counties, respectively, by the Treasurer of the United States, upon the order of the Secretary of the Interior, as soon as may be after the close of each fiscal year during which the moneys were received: Provided, That none of the payments to the States and counties and to the reclamation fund in this section provided for shall be made until the amount due the Oregon & California Railroad Co., its successors or assigns, has been fully paid and the Treasury reimbursed for all taxes paid pursuant to the provisions of section 9 of this act.

"'SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect; and any person, applicant, purchaser, entryman, or witness who shall swear falsely in any affidavit or proceeding required hereunder or under the regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior shall be guilty of perjury and liable to the penalties prescribed therefor.

"'SEC. 12. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture or otherwise, to complete the classification of the lands as herein provided, which amount shall be immediately available and shall remain available until such classification shall have been completed.

"'Approved, June 9, 1916.'

"Section 1 of this bill provides that the Southern Oregon Co. shall be paid the sum of $232,463.07 for a deed, satisfactory to the Attorney General of the United States, reconveying to the United States all the right, title, and interests of said company in and to the lands now involved in the litigation pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, amounting approximately to 93,000 acres, said sum of $232,463.07 being the value of said lands at $2.50 per acre; said value of $2.50 per acre being the value conferred by the granting act, which value the court decreed should be secured to the Southern Oregon Co.

"Section 2 provides for the payment of taxes, which, according to the above letter of the Attorney General, amount to $408,846.61 for the years 1909 to 1916.

"While the Government is required to pay to the Southern Oregon Co. $232,463.07, and for delinquent taxes $408,846.61, total $641,309.68, this sum is to be repaid to the Government from the sale of grant lands and timber, and in addition thereto 75 per cent of all other moneys received from said lands is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. That the Government will be amply repaid is shown from the estimates of the value of the lands.

"Mr. S. W. Williams, special assistant to the Attorney General, having charge of the suit, testified in the hearings that the 'land grant is easily worth $2,000,000'; that the land has two or three billion feet of timber on it; that 'we have sold timber on 400 acres of this land at $2 per thousand.'

"Ex-Gov. Oswald West, of Oregon, testified that $3,000,000 would be realized from the grant lands.

"R. W. Marsters, county judge of Douglas County; B. F. Nichols and W. E. St. John, county commissioners; and George Neuner, district attorney, estimate the value of the grant lands to be double Mr. Williams's estimate, or $4,000,000.

"On the basis of the estimate of Mr. Williams, special assistant, the Government would profit by the proposed adjustment in this bill more than $1,000,000; on the basis of the estimate of the value of the grant lands made by the county judge and commissioners of Douglas County, the Government's profit would be over $2,000,000 clear profit.

"Section 3 of the bill provides for preference rights to lessees of said Southern Oregon Co. and to settlers.

"The following letter from George M. Brown, attorney general of the State of Oregon, sets forth the claim of said lessees and settlers to preference rights:

"OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
"Salem, Oreg., February 14, 1918.

"Hon. S. W. WILLIAMS,
"Assistant to the Attorney General of the United States,
"Department of Justice, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR SIR: I have read with much interest your testimony before the Public Lands Committee, and have just written to Representatives SINNOTT and HAWLEY in reference thereto.

"It is my belief that you intend to be absolutely fair in all your statements before the committee, but I think you are not fully informed as to some of the facts requested by the committee.

"This letter is for the purpose of attempting to point out the facts in reference to some of the settlers on the land and their failure to acquire title, as well as to the kind of a road that was originally constructed.

"There are settlers on this land who have settled upon the same in good faith, and there are lands situated along the road that are capable of cultivation, although much of the land in the Coos Bay-Roseburg wagon-land grant consists of mountain, rock, and forest. I personally know men among the settlers on the land who have dwelt upon the same for more than 30 years and have cleared valuable homes from what was once a dense wilderness. These people were persuaded that the company had to sell to them tracts of land in quantities not to exceed 160 acres at the price of $2.50 per acre. The company did not sell and the Government took no action to enforce the covenant to sell.

"I can not speak for all settlers, but I know in some cases where they have lived upon the land, improving the same year after year, hoping and believing that the company would sell, and in order to protect themselves from ejectment they executed leases. By reason of these leases they have become tenants of the company. However, the truth is, these people settled upon the land in good faith, thinking that the United States would ultimately require the company to convey.

"You are familiar with the case of Nichols v. Southern Oregon Co., reported in 135 Federal Reporter, 232. I will state that Nichols is an old-time resident of Coos County, and relying upon the covenant that the lands were granted with certain terms contained in the granting act which restricted sales of such lands in quantities to single purchasers of not more than 160 acres and at a price not greater than $2.50 per acre, tendered the purchase price for 160 acres of land included in the grant. Bellinger, district judge, held in said case that—

"'These restrictions were mere incidents of the grant. * * *. Whatever rights existed in respect to these restrictions belonged to the United States. No interest was created in the complainant. He is not a beneficiary in the grant, and he has no standing to complain that the State has violated its conditions in the manner in which it has disposed of the granted lands. That is a matter that can only be taken advantage of by the United States.'

"I have also read your testimony as to the character of the road that was constructed by the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co.

"It is my conviction from information given by old settlers who were over the road soon after its construction that it was a good mountain road. For some years freight was transported over the same from the tidal waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg. This could not have been carried over a range of mountains such as the Coast Range at the point where the old Coos Bay wagon road crossed unless a fairly good road had been built. However, I am not inferring that it was an ideal road. Nearly 20 years after its construction the State of Oregon and the counties of Douglas and Coos built another road leading from Roseburg to Myrtle Point, in Coos County, by way of Camas Valley, and in recent years this last-mentioned road has been the chief thoroughfare. This was true at the time you went over the old Coos Bay wagon road. For a number of years the principal mail route from Roseburg, Douglas County, into Coos County was by way of Camas Valley. Thereafter the Coos Bay wagon road, from Brewster Valley, situated in Coos County, over the Coast Range Mountains into Douglas County, became out of repair.

"From Brewster Valley, almost to the termination of the road, Coos County has in recent years regraded and planked the same.

"These lands have been upon the tax roll of Coos County for a great many years, and it would be a great hardship on the county to deprive her of the revenue derived therefrom, unless it is returned in some such way as is proposed by the pending bill. The same applies in some measure to Douglas County, but the greater portion of the lands are situated, as you know, in the county of Coos.

"Very truly, yours,

"GEO. M. BROWN,
"Attorney General.

"S. W. Williams, special assistant to the Attorney General, wrote concerning the preference rights as follows:

"616 JOURNAL BUILDING,
"Portland, Oreg., April 2, 1918.

"Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
"Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
"House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

"MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I have been approached by a number of persons who are interested in the pending legislation, which provides for the settlement of the litigation involving the Coos Bay wagon-road grant in this State and the subsequent disposition of the lands by the United States. Some of these people have been living on the lands for a number of years, some have leased the lands and cultivated them, while others placed improvements upon the lands, perhaps without any lease; but, as I understand it, most, if not all, of them went upon the lands under some sort of promises from the officials of the Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. or the Southern Oregon Co. that lands could be purchased at a reasonable price. These promises, it is needless to say, the company has not kept.

"I have informed those who approached me that the bills now pending in Congress in regard to the matter contain a provision whereby those who have leased land from the Southern Oregon Co., or its predecessors for more than 10 years will be allowed a preference right to purchase the lands for $2.50 an acre, provided that they are found to be of the agricultural class. I have also informed them that the House committee did not seem favorably impressed with this provision, and that I also understood that the Secretary of the Interior had reported adversely to it; but, in view of their insistence, I agreed to lay the facts before your committee.

"Mrs. Hester Harmon claims to have settled on lot 1 of section 13, township 28 south, range 12 west, 44 years ago, and has lived on it continuously ever since.

"Grove G. Swan claims an interest in the south half of the southeast quarter of section 21, township 28 south, range 11 west, having settled there in 1870. He has improved a part of one 40-acre tract.

"E. P. Mest claims to have settled in July, 1872, on 20 acres of land in section 21, township 21 south, range 11 west, and has continued to reside on the land, together with 120 acres he purchased from the Southern Oregon Co. Has paid rent to the company for the use of 20 acres, upon which a part of his building is situated.

"Mrs. Dora A. Krantz has possession of 40 acres in section 15, township 28 south, range 11 west, and has had it for 20 years. She has fenced and cultivated the land.

"T. G. Barker claims that his father settled in July, 1874, on the southwest quarter of section 5, township 27 south, range 11 west; that he lived there 25 years and in 1900 turned the land over to his son.

"Mrs. W. G. Robbins in July, 1913, leased 40 acres in section 7, township 28 south, range 12 west, from the Southern Oregon Co. She has improved it and made it her home.

"G. P. Miller had married into a family who had spent several thousand dollars in clearing and improving a tract of about 120 acres in the grant, lived on it for a number of years, and was finally ejected by the Southern Oregon Co.

"The above are but a few of those who, I think, rightfully claim to be entitled to equitable consideration when the Government comes to disposing of these lands. From what I can learn, there are perhaps between 50 and 100 others similarly situated. I see no reason why they should not be given a preference right to purchase the lands at $2.50 per acre, provided that they also be required to reimburse the Government for the taxes it is to pay on these lands. In the first place, if the lands are entered under the homestead law, as they necessarily must be, the Government will receive only $2.50 per acre from the homesteader, who will not be required to pay the taxes the Government is going to pay. These people who have spent time and money, and in some instances no inconsiderable amount, are certainly entitled to more consideration than one who has done nothing. I have talked with a number of them who seem to be perfectly willing to reimburse the Government for the taxes it may pay on these lands and in addition pay $2.50 per acre in cash, while the homesteader will be allowed from three to five years to pay it.

"Of course, some of these people, those who have been actually living upon the land, will probably be given a preference right to homestead, but all of them have not lived upon the land. Some lived upon adjoining lands and others perhaps several miles away. I do not know just how this is, but I am reliably informed that all of those who have leased and improved the lands did not live upon them.

"I have written to my department in Washington, reporting the result of my inquiry into the attitude of the State and county officials here on that provision of the bill concerning the division of the net proceeds resulting from the sale of lands and timber in this grant, and I understand that ex-Gov. Oswald West, who represents the two counties directly involved, will be in Washington about the time this letter reaches there and will inform the committee in regard to the matter. I assume that my department will also take the matter up with you.

"I trust that you will understand the spirit in which I am writing to you in regard to the claims of these people who have been leasing and improving the lands on this grant. Some of them are very much interested in the matter and will lose what is to them a great deal unless some provision is made for their relief.

"If there is anything further that I can do in regard to any feature of the bill, please let me know. With kind personal regards, I am,

"Sincerely, yours,

"S. W. WILLIAMS,
"Special Assistant to the Attorney General.

"Section 5 of the bill provides that after the Government is reimbursed from the sale of grant lands for the moneys advanced to pay the Southern Oregon Co. and to pay the taxes the remaining proceeds from such sales shall be paid 75 per cent into the Treasury of the United States and 25 per cent to the treasurer of the county in which the lands sold are situated for common schools, roads, highways, bridges, and port districts.

"The bill as introduced followed the provisions of the act of June 9, 1916, above set forth, for the disposition of the Oregon and California railroad grant lands. This act gave 50 per cent of the proceeds to the State of Oregon and to the counties, 40 per cent to the reclamation fund, and 10 per cent to the Treasury of the United States.

"The committee amended section 5 so as to give the Government 75 per cent and the counties 25 per cent.

"In support of the allowance to the counties of 25 per cent for common schools, roads, and port districts it may be said: The grant lands are in Coos and Douglas Counties; 55 per cent of Douglas and 30 per cent of Coos County are now nontaxable, the nontaxable portions composing forest reserves and land removed from taxation on account of the revestment of the Oregon and California land grant by the Government.

"The revestment by the Government of title to the Coos Bay wagon-road grant, contemplated in this bill, will take from the tax rolls 93,000 acres, and consequently throw the burden of taxation on the remaining lands, now heavily burdened with taxation.

"Douglas County, only 45 per cent of which is taxable, on account of forest reserves and the revestment of the Oregon and California railroad grant, has now a bonded indebtedness of $555,000 for highway construction; the port of Umpqua, in this county, has a bonded indebtedness of $200,000 for harbor improvement. This county had in 1910 a population of 19,674.

"Coos County, which in 1910 had a population of 17,959, has an indebtedness of $1,250,000, of which $650,000 is a bonded indebtedness for the improvement of Coos Bay Harbor.

"The money expended by said counties in harbor and road improvements has enhanced and will continue to enhance the value of the Government timber in the forest reserves and revested lands, the bonded indebtedness for such expenditures will be a continuing burden on the remaining lands, and as the grant lands, hereby revested in the Government, may possibly remain off the tax rolls for many years, it seemed equitable to the committee that 25 per cent of the proceeds from the sales of the revested lands should be allotted to the counties for common schools, roads, highways, and port districts. In addition to the above expenditures for port and highway improvements, these counties are annually taxed for a fire patrol to protect the timber in said counties, including the timber on the grant in question and on other grants.

"The following statement of facts was submitted to the committee by the county judge, commissioners, and district attorney, of Douglas County.

"ROSEBURG, OREG., March 11, 1918.

"Hon. JOHN N. TILLMAN,
"Chairman Subcommittee of Committee on the Public Lands,
"Washington, D. C.

"DEAR SIR: Pursuant to the request of Hon. NICHOLAS J. SINNOTT and Hon. W. C. HAWLEY, Representatives in Congress from the State of Oregon, we, the undersigned, duly elected and qualified officials of Douglas County, Oreg., wish to submit herewith on behalf of said Douglas County and its citizens a statement of fact for the information of the subcommittee on the Public Lands in connection with the consideration of H. R. 8625, which has for its object the disposition of the lands known as the 'Coos Bay wagon-road land grant.'

"HISTORY.

"The Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. was a company duly organized for the purpose of building a wagon road from Roseburg, Douglas County, Oreg., to the tidal waters of Coos Bay, and primarily for the development of the southwestern part of the State of Oregon, and particularly for the establishment of commerce and communication between Roseburg, Douglas County, Oreg., and Coos Bay. The topography of the country which the road traversed was very rough, densely wooded, and very mountainous. The distance from Roseburg to Coos Bay, the beginning and terminus of this highway, is 61 miles.

"The Coos Bay Wagon Road Co. was composed of pioneer residents and business men of Roseburg, as follows: Aaron Rose, sr., J. F. Watson, Thomas J. Beale, J. N. Eberline, J. M. Arrington, D. L. Watson, S. Hamilton, and A. R. Flint.

"A number of these honored pioneers figured conspicuously in the development of the Northwest, and particularly of the State of Oregon. The character of these men and the purpose for which the organization was formed dispels and precludes any idea that they had any other purpose in view than the upbuilding of their State and community. The capital stock of this company was $60,000. Like many business ventures, it proved to be more expensive than at first contemplated. Mr. J. M. Arrington, one of their number, had some knowledge of civil engineering and was also a mountaineer, and he was chosen as the civil and constructing engineer who selected the route for the location of the road. More than $60,000 subscribed to the capital stock was expended before the completion of the road to the tidal waters of Coos Bay. Eleven miles of this road followed the Coquille River from the summit of the Coast Range of mountains, which divide Douglas and Coos Counties. A great portion of this distance was made by blasting rock from the side of the mountains along the river, and this proved very expensive construction. When it was completed it was a splendid mountain road, but its maintenance proved to be more expensive than its construction, for the reason, as stated before, of the very rough topography and the winter storms, which resulted in the destruction of much of it, and necessarily great portions of the road had to be rebuilt or repaired each year, and this proved the source of constant loss to the company. However, immediately after its completion mail, passenger, and stage routes were started, and considerable freighting was done over the road between Coos Bay and Roseburg. It served as the main highway between Douglas and Coos Counties for many years, and was kept up, in the main, by the company during this time. Afterwards the road was taken over, the part lying in Coos County by said county and the part in Douglas County by Douglas County.

"The whole history of the organization of this company and the construction of this road proves conclusively that its object was the development and building up of these counties and of the southwestern part of Oregon. The land grant which was made to the company did not repay the stockholders for the amount of money expended by them. At that time timberlands were of very little value, and most of this grant was composed of land chiefly covered by timber. The men who constructed this road did it honestly, and they intended to and did construct a highway which, when completed, was one of the best roads in Oregon, but the expense of maintaining the road was greater than the original costs of its construction. On the completion of the road, which was during the term of Hon. S. F. Chadwick as governor of Oregon, the governor himself personally inspected the road together with one or two commissioners appointed for that purpose. One of the commissioners, a Mr. William Jackson, was of Coos County. Upon their inspection and performance of the duty devolving upon them the road was accepted.

"All of these pioneers, to the best of our knowledge, are no more. However, for reference we may give the names of Hon. J. W. Hamilton, circuit judge of the second judicial district of Oregon, Roseburg, Oreg., and a son of S. Hamilton, one of the company which constructed this road, and who has personal knowledge of every detail thereof, and Hon. Stephen J. Chadwick, associate justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington, son of S. F. Chadwick, then governor of Oregon, and others, if your committee wish to make a further investigation of the facts herein stated.

"PRESENT CONDITION.

"The road is being used to-day, and that portion thereof from Roseburg to the Coos County line, some 20 or 22 miles, is in good condition. The greater portion of said road in Coos County is in first-class condition. However, the portion of 11 miles following the Coquille River is not in very good condition. It is being traveled and used and kept open, and automobiles by the hundreds traverse this road every summer. Some 15 years after the construction of this road a new road was constructed from Roseburg to Coos Bay, following a lesser gradient, and it has been used since that time, and we might say that the latter road traverses the more settled parts of Douglas and Coos Counties.

"AREA OF COUNTY.

"The area of Douglas County is approximately 5,000 square miles. Fifty-five per cent of this area is nonassessable, being that portion composed of forest reserves and lands removed from taxation on account of the revestment of the O. & C. Railroad land grant in the Government. Therefore 45 per cent of this county must carry the burden of the whole thereof.

"VALUATION.

"The valuation of this county is approximately $28,000,000. A valuation of $6,000,000 was taken from our tax rolls by the revestment of the O. & C. Railroad land grant; and by the removal from taxation of the Coos Bay wagon-road grant this valuation will be further reduced, imposing a still greater burden upon the remaining assessable property.

"ROADS.

"Douglas County has approximately 2,200 miles of road to maintain and approximately 2,300 bridges of more than 10 feet in length to keep up. Nearly one-half of this burden and expense of the construction and keeping up of these roads and bridges covers those which are adjacent to or through Government lands; in other words, nontaxable property. One hundred and five miles of the Pacific highway is located within this county. This is a highway of military importance; in other words, an interstate and an international highway. The highway from Roseburg to Coos Bay, of which some 40 miles is in Douglas County, is considered of military importance, and it requires thousands of dollars annually to keep it in repair, to say nothing of construction or improvement.

"BONDED INDEBTEDNESS.

"On June 4, 1917, the people of Douglas County voted a bonded indebtedness of $555,000 for the construction or improvement of its main highways. The port of Umpqua, situated in the northwestern part of the county, bonded itself for $200,000 for the construction and improvement of the harbor at the mouth of the Umpqua River. In addition to this, the various road and school districts tax themselves heavily annually to keep up the roads and schools in the county, to say nothing of the municipal bonded indebtedness of the various municipalities within the county. We merely call attention to these facts to show that by the removal of these lands from the tax roll and put in a condition where it will be years before they will be replaced upon the tax rolls of Douglas County a great burden is imposed upon the taxpayers and owners of property, which undoubtedly will inure to the detriment of the development of this portion of the great State of Oregon. The Coos Bay wagon-road grant is enhanced in value by the improvements voted by the people of Douglas County. Of the roads that are to be improved and constructed, a number of them traverse this grant. The port of Umpqua in its development of the harbor greatly enhances the value of the timber upon this grant. The State and county are required to tax themselves annually for a fire-patrol tax to conserve the timber upon this and other grants, the county in particular paying all of this tax, for the State taxes the county and most of the counties are required, in addition to the payment of the State tax, to pay one-third of the money expended for fire patrol within the respective counties.

"The valuation given at the hearing before the House Committee on the Public Lands is manifestly too low. We should say, conservatively, that the grant is nearly double the value placed thereon at said hearing. This wagon-road grant includes some of the best timber within the State of Oregon. It is nearly all on the coast slope and a great portion accessible to tidewater. Some of these 160 tracts that we have personal knowledge of cruise fifteen to sixteen million feet of timber. In addition to that a good portion of this land will be valuable when the timber is removed for dairy and grazing purposes. This is mentioned merely for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that the Government should not hesitate to administer the grant on account of losing money thereon.

"CONCLUSION.

"We think it is manifestly unfair to place any portion of the proceeds of this fund derived from the sale of this timber upon this grant or the lands thereof into the reclamation or any other fund. The State and counties in which this land grant is located have been burdened for years with heavy taxation. They will be burdened for years to come in carrying out the policy of caring for and protecting the timber thereon, and as a matter of equity and justice they should be entitled to all of the proceeds from the sale of said timber and lands over and above the actual costs of administration by the Government. The State and counties have not been negligent in this matter. The whole history of the grant shows that the best of faith entered into the entire transaction, and we believe that as a matter of fairness, equity, and justice we are entitled to at least a substantial percentage of the proceeds from said sales for the construction of roads and the maintenance of the schools of the county and State in which this land is situated, and we trust that your committee will give due consideration to the facts hereinbefore stated. We would gladly send you the sworn statements if you so desire, but being at a great distance from the deliberation of your committee, we can not personally be present to urge our cause.

"Respectfully submitted.

"County Judge.
"B. F. NICHOLS,
"County Commissioner.

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. From the Committee on Printing I report an original resolution, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona reports from the Committee on Printing a resolution, which will be read.

The secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 452), as follows:

Resolved, That the manuscript submitted by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] on January 29, 1919, entitled "Proceedings of the conference on the American merchant marine," held in the auditorium of the new National Museum, Washington, D. C., January 22–23, 1919, be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator from Arizona ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of that resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that Congress has enough printing of its own to do now without going outside and printing the proceedings of other bodies. If this manuscript is printed, I can not see why conferences held upon every public question in every part of this country should not also be printed. There is no difference whatever, except as to the subject matter.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should like to suggest to the Senator, inasmuch as he and I have for months and months made a very serious and earnest effort to keep all extraneous matter out of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, although the Senate has refused to stand by us in that effort, that I am sorry to see the Senator object now to a matter that comes from the committee with a favorable recommendation. It is true that the committee has had no meeting, but it has been polled. The Senator from Utah was not seen—they did not see me until this morning—but the committee has been polled and every member of the committee except the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] has been interviewed, and they all agreed to the printing of the proceedings referred to in the resolution. Under the circumstances I did not hesitate to ask unanimous consent; but I wish to say here and now that if the Senator will stand with me again, and if the Senate will stand behind us, we will save the Government a million dollars next year in connection with its printing.

Mr. BORAH. Is the request for unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. BORAH. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution goes to the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry with regard to the objection of the Senator from Idaho. Not knowing what his reason or purpose is, when he permits everything else to go into the RECORD without objection, I am at a loss to know why he objects to the printing of something which has been recommended in a report of the committee. I want to know whether or not it is in order for me to move that the resolution be considered?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if this resolution should be passed, the proceedings would not, of course, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; but I wish to say to the Senator now—and it will only take me a few moments, if the Senator from Idaho will not object——

Mr. LODGE. The resolution has gone to the calendar.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I objected for two reasons. In the first place there are certain matters which I wished to have disposed of this morning before 2 o'clock, and it seemed that the resolution of the Senator from Arizona was going to lead to debate. In the second place, I desire to say to the Senator from Arizona that he is mistaken when he says I have always permitted these matters to go into the RECORD. On the contrary, I have voted with him and sustained him in every contention he has made in regard to such matters.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not think that there is any doubt about that; but I should like to say to the Senator that if he would confine his objection to matters which have not been favorably passed upon by the committee I would feel his support to be more effective.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This situation is perfectly plain. It is a report of a committee, and has to go to the calendar if there is objection. That is all there is to it.

JOHN A. GAULEY.

Mr. ROBINSON. From the Committee on Claims I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 5471) for the relief of John A. Gauley, and I submit a report (No. 713) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a very small claim.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John A. Gauley, of Arlington, Mass., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,200, and said sum is hereby appropriated as compensation for personal injuries suffered by said Gauley in the course of his duties as an employee of the War Department at the Watertown Arsenal, Watertown, Mass.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, on Tuesday last I entered a motion to reconsider the votes by which the bill (S. 3992) to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians was ordered to a third reading and passed, the bill having been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs. My motion was coupled with a request that the bill be returned from the House, and I understand it has been complied with. I should like to say that I have talked with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who introduced the bill and who also reported it from the committee, and the action I am about to ask the Senate to take is entirely agreeable to him.

I am not expressing any opinion as to the merits of the bill, but it seems that the bill was reported without giving a hearing to one tribe of Indians who wished to be heard, and it is only for the purpose of giving them an opportunity to be heard that I desire the Senate to take the action I am about to ask it to take. I ask that the motion to reconsider be put, and then I wish to move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska that the votes whereby the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK, COLO.

Mr. SHAFROTH. From the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 171) to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of the act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, and I submit a report (No. 712) thereon.

Mr. President, this bill is identical with one which passed the Senate last January a year ago, the number of the Senate bill being 1555. I ask unanimous consent that the bill passed by the House, which, as I have said, is identically the same bill as that passed by the Senate, word for word, comma for comma, and period for period, be considered at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I told the Senate two years ago that when we limited the amount of money that could be expended in the Rocky Mountain National Park—and the only way the bill could have gotten through Congress at the time was by limiting the expenditure—there would be legislation proposed repealing that law, and, of course, that is what the bill now reported by the Senator from Colorado does. It merely means that hereafter the $10,000 limit that was placed on expenditures for that park in the act creating it will be removed, and hereafter there will be no telling what amounts will be expended. That is the object of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state that this subject has been before the Senate a number of times, and twice has a bill on this subject been passed by the Senate, the last time being on the date given by me. It went over to the House and a Representative from Colorado secured a report on his bill, which is an exact copy of the bill which I had passed here in the Senate. The House bill is simply a substitute for the bill already passed by the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; if there is any doubt as to the statement I have just made, I object and will ask that the bill go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does the Senator insist upon his objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; if the Senator is going to doubt what I have said.

Mr. SHAFROTH. No; nobody doubts what the Senator has stated. The object of this bill, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an objection, and the bill has gone to the calendar.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will ask whether the Senator will withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. LODGE. I object. We have the conference report here on the revenue bill, which is to be disposed of as soon as possible, and I object to further discussion.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to examine into the question of the adoption of a zone system for the construction of buildings in the District of Columbia., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment relative to the pay of civilian employees under the Navy Department on leave of absence, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of teachers of group A, class 6, including seven principals of graded manual-training schools in the public schools of the District of Columbia from $1,000 each to $1,200 each, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Pursuant to the notice I gave on yesterday, I submit a resolution and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 451) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following:

"Provided, That with the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress no standing committee of the Senate shall consist of more than 17 members."

SCHOONER "HENRY O. BARRETT."

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 3123) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett. It provides for the sending of a claim to the United States Court of Claims for adjudication.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owners of the schooner Henry O. Barrett, rising out of a collision between said schooner and the U. S. monitor Ozark, off Five Fathom Bank Lightship, on the 19th day of April, 1917, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett by reason of damages to and detention of said schooner may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and that the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision if any shall be found to be due either for or against the United States upon the same principle and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties with the same rights of appeal.

That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owners of said schooner Henry O. Barrett, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, provided that such suit shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act.

That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled, "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMER "MAYFLOWER."

Mr. WEEKS. I also ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Order of Business 639, being Senate bill 2902, which is a bill of exactly the same character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, we have passed four or five bills this morning by unanimous consent without having them read or anybody knowing what they are about. I do not believe the Senate ought to pass bills in this way. I think this bill ought to be read, anyway, before unanimous consent is given for its consideration.

Mr. WEEKS. I am quite willing that the bill shall be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the owner of the steamer Mayflower and the claims of the passengers on board said steamer rising out of a collision between said steamer and the United States submarine L–10 in President Roads, Boston Harbor, on the 11th day of August, 1917, for and on account of the losses alleged to have been suffered in said collision by the owner of said steamer Mayflower through damage to and detention of said steamer Mayflower, and by the passengers on said steamer by reason of personal injuries sustained in said collision, may be submitted to the United States court for the district of Massachusetts, the district in which said collision occurred, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty: Provided, That the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the legal damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principle and measure of liability with costs as in like cases in admiralty between private parties, with the same rights of appeal: Provided further, That should damages be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said steamer Mayflower and her passengers, or any or either of them, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated: And provided further, That such suit or suits shall be brought and commenced within four months after the passage of this act: And provided further, That the mode of service of process shall conform to the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SALARY OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY OF NEW YORK.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2124) to fix the salary of the United States district attorney for the eastern district of New York.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States district attorney for the eastern district of New York shall be at the rate of $6,000 a year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further bills or joint resolutions? If not, concurrent and other resolutions are in order. [A pause.] The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a preceding day.

The Secretary read Senate resolution 444, introduced by Mr. JOHNSON of California on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate United States soldiers should be withdrawn from Russia as soon as practicable.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, on the 12th day of December last I presented a resolution asking the policy of this Government toward Russia. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It reposes there safely and silently at the present time. To-day I have read, in the news reports that have come to us of the proceedings in the English Parliament, the statement of Lloyd George yesterday concerning the policy of the United States of America. I read in the statement of the premier of Great Britain yesterday that the United States no longer would send troops into Russia and no longer would extend any aid, substantially, in the matter of intervention.

I want to congratulate the United States, I want to congratulate the Congress of the United States, I want to congratulate the all-seeing eye of the United States Senate, the Committee on Foreign Relations, that finally now we have learned from the lips of the premier of Great Britain, when such a resolution has been before the Senate since December 12 last, the policy of the United States Government with respect to Russia.

This policy, thus announced, I am very glad to commend. The action of the President in that regard, if his action be correctly described, I not only commend, but I am delighted that finally he has made plain thus, and even in this manner, exactly what the United States in the future will do in its relations with Russia. Indeed, I reecho what was said yesterday by Lloyd George in regard to the Bolsheviki in Russia. I reecho every characterization that he then indulged regarding the men who are in control of that unhappy land and in regard to the policies they pursue. I reecho it with all of the adjectives, and would reecho it, if I were possessed of the power, with all of the eloquence that we will hear upon this floor, and that we have heard in the past, in denunciation of Bolsheviki principles and in denunciation of those at the head of the Bolsheviki movement in Russia.

At the outset of what little I have to say—because I shall endeavor to conclude very rapidly—I want to make it plain that the question that is involved in the resolution I have introduced here and that is before the body to-day—the mere expression of an opinion upon the part of the United States Senate—is a question that involves not Bolshevism at all, not the fantastic formulæ of Lenine and Trotzky, not the massacres or the blood spilling to which they have resorted, not their rapine, not their plunder, not their assassinations. What we have involved in this resolution is an American policy for American boys, that deals with American blood, and the reason why I feel as I do upon this subject with all the force of my being is that by our supineness—aye, were it not invidious I would say by our cowardice—we are risking in Russia to-day 5,000 precious American lives without the hope of consummation of any policy of this Government, without the hope of benefiting in any degree any plan or any scheme or any purpose that may be entertained by our Government or by any man upon this floor.

The denunciation of Bolshevism is finally the refuge that those who oppose a resolution of this sort take in dealing with this subject. This is mere cuttle-fishing of the issue. We camouflage it because we dare not act upon the subject; camouflage it because, indeed, we dare not face the truth and do what we ought to do in behalf of Americans and American boys in Russia; camouflage it with that denunciation of Bolshevism and that denunciation of the formulas of Lenine and Trotzky we have listened to in recent days; denounce Bolshevism as you will, in any fashion that you wish; I will agree with all that you may say in detestation of all that is transpiring in Russia. That is apart from what I am seeking to do. It is apart, indeed, from what is transpiring with American boys over there. It is apart from what ought to be the duty of the American Congress and what ought to be the duty of the United States Senate in passing upon a question of this sort.

I have listened here in the last few weeks to speeches by various eloquent Members of this body concerning the Bolsheviki and the horrible doctrine the Bolsheviki express. Do you know who are making Bolsheviki in this country? And I use the term not as a term which may mean a certain set of socialistic or anarchistic formulas but as synonymous with an unhappy, a discontented, and a rebellious spirit. Do you know who make Bolsheviki in America? You and I are making the Bolsheviki of this country when you and I, seeing the law violated, the Constitution rent and torn, dare not take our stand in behalf of American blood and American soldiers, who, without warrant of law and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, are killing and being killed in Russia to-day. That is the sort of thing that makes Bolsheviki, using the word in the aspect and in the characterization to which I have just alluded. When the men who are intrusted with the enforcement of the law, who have held high their hands and sworn that they would protect the Constitution of the United States, trample it under foot and permit boys of theirs to be murdered in Russia, in violation of that Constitution, that is the sort of thing, my Senators, that makes Bolsheviki in a nation, and that is the sort of thing that makes unhappy, discontented, and rebellious people.

Oh, you may say to-day that you can wage warfare without declaring war because you have confidence in the President of the United States. You may answer that you can kill and be killed in defiance of the law and the Constitution, because you know that your President, as he exists to-day, will do his full duty in the premises. Beware—take care—of the precedent you are establishing now. If you permit one President of the United States or one administration to wage war without declaring war, beware—take care—of what some other President of the United States, in whom you may not have the same confidence, and for whom you upon the other side may not have the same trustful, affectionate love, may in the future do.

And we here, when we violate this Constitution; we here, every time we have battered down one of the barriers that has been interposed by the law for the protection of individual liberty; we here, when we add another rent to the already tattered organic document of ours—we here are establishing a precedent now by which we may be plagued in the future, and by which that document that is sacred to all of us may in the future be set at naught.

The facts concerning Russia you all know; but they have been succinctly set forth recently in such a fashion that I dare read them to you so that you may know them, and then, if you wish, vote down this resolution or refer it again to the Foreign Relations Committee, where it may be bottled up for all time in the future.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I hope the Senator does not mean to imply that the Committee on Foreign Relations bottles up resolutions that are sent to it. This is the second time during his address that the Senator from California has referred in that way to the Foreign Relations Committee. Permit me to say to him that no resolution which has come to the Committee on Foreign Relations in recent months has received so much attention and consideration as the resolution to which he has referred, which he introduced, concerning our relations with Russia. I feel justified in saying that that resolution was considered at several meetings; that at the last meeting we were ready to vote upon it, but unfortunately only one Member of the Republican side of the Senate was there—because, I believe, of a Republican conference—and out of deference to the request of that Member a vote upon the resolution was deferred until the next meeting.

The Foreign Relations Committee is not in the habit of bottling up resolutions. The resolution of the Senator from California has received fair consideration; and if this resolution is referred to the committee, I can say to the Senator that it will receive fair consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. May the Lord save this resolution if it shall receive the same consideration that the resolution of December 12 received at the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee!

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not making the statement that the committee will report it out. If the committee is opposed to it, the Senator certainly would not expect the committee to report it out; but I object to the term "bottling up" the resolution, which implies that we suppressed it.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator from California will allow me, we took up the resolution of inquiry which the Senator introduced, and my memory was that we considered it quite fully, and that then the committee voted not to report it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Since we have entered into a discussion of that, I may say that it was amended in the first place by striking out the preamble, and I think there were other considerations presented for amending it still further. I think there was a tie vote on that particular proposition. I do not think I ought to go into details as to what was done with the resolution, but I do feel justified in saying that it received more extensive consideration than any other proposition that has come before the Committee on Foreign Relations in several weeks, and certainly the committee and the chairman are not entitled to the charge that they have suppressed it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will accept the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution introduced on the 12th day of December last, dealing with the lives of American boys in Russia, received extensive consideration from the Foreign Relations Committee. I am very certain that the mothers and the fathers of the boys who have been killed since December 12, illegally and without regard to the Constitution of the United States, are equally grateful for the very careful consideration that the Foreign Relations Committee has accorded unto this resolution since December 12 last.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator will yield, I wish to ask the chairman of the committee whether it is the plan of the committee, if it does not decide to act favorably upon a resolution, to vote not to report it at all? I understood from the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the committee had voted not to report the resolution. If that is the policy of the committee, it seems to me that it is really bottling up the resolution by not permitting it to come on the floor of the Senate either with a favorable or an adverse report.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator's other resolution was brought up at the last meeting of the committee, and while a quorum was present one of the Senators representing the minority requested that out of deference to the Senator from California a vote be deferred until a larger attendance was present.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee if it is the custom of the Foreign Relations Committee when a resolution is voted down or disapproved by the committee to permit it to die in the committee, and would that have been the fate of this resolution if the committee had failed to approve it?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not able to say what the committee was going to do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the custom of the committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I beg that I may be permitted to proceed, because my time is limited.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I accept the explanation, of course, of the Senator from Nebraska. There remain of this session two short weeks. The resolution was presented to the Foreign Relations Committee December 12 of last year. Of course it has not been bottled up; I recognize that. It has reposed sleepily and sweetly, and very, very nicely in the bosom of the Committee on Foreign Relations, where doubtless it will remain until this session of Congress shall have been concluded, and will remain possibly—let us pray God it will not happen—until all the boys in Russia shall have been buried there. The speed and the haste that the Committee on Foreign Relations would have been compelled to display in bringing this resolution into the Senate within two months are a speed and a haste which I would not for a moment ask that that deliberate committee should employ. The speed and haste with which we continue to fight and to kill in Russia and continue to have our own killed there ought not for an instant to be imposed upon a committee in this body. The speed and haste which the Senator from Nebraska says do not constitute at all bottling up we will concede, for the purpose of the argument, will constitute active operation and deliberation by the distinguished Committee on Foreign Relations concerning this matter.

But beyond this, Mr. President, there is another proposition involved as well. The resolution calls for a statement of the policy by the United States Government concerning the livest matter, the most vital topic, that is existing in all the world to-day. During the period of time from December 12 until today there is not a man on the floor of the Senate, there is not a representative of the Government of the United States of America, there is not anybody in power or in position who has said to the American people or said to the American Congress what is the policy of this Government toward Russia or defined it in any degree or in any aspect.

Very recently the Chicago Tribune sent a representative into Russia to ascertain the exact situation of our troops in the Archangel district. This correspondent sets forth the facts so succinctly and so well that I place them before the Senate as a basis of facts upon which the ultimate conclusion should be drawn. I read hastily this article:

The Tribune presents herewith the first of a series of cables from Frazier Hunt, giving the facts regarding the failure of the allied expedition to north Russia.

By Frazier Hunt, Vardo, Norway, February 1—

This, Mr. President, is the latest word from Archangel. This, Mr. President, is the latest statement of fact by an eyewitness of what has transpired in the Archangel district—

After two months spent in investigating the conditions in north Russia, where American troops are serving under the allied directorship, I can state the following facts:

First. The north Russia allied expedition has developed into a pitiful failure. It has failed to inspire confidence and loyalty and give real assistance to Russia. It has become a cesspool of jealousies, hatreds, mistakes, and shattered illusions. The different allies distrust one another, and the Russians distrust the entire expedition.

Second. The American troops were put under an absolute imperialistic command—

Oh, that does not appeal to us in this day here, I know! It is a matter of no consequence upon this floor.

I listened recently to a speech carefully prepared and judiciously uttered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN]. I read the next day in the organ of the Democratic Party—the New York World—that by the delivery of that speech the Senator from New Jersey had stamped himself as a Bolsheviki and should be investigated by a committee of the United States Senate.

I listened to a debate on this floor a few days ago concerning the embargo placed upon certain goods of ours by England. I listened to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] when he presented a particular resolution, and I endeavored to inform myself by ascertaining the facts from the utterances of distinguished Senators on this floor. I read only a day or two afterwards the ill-concealed inference in one of the New York papers that that resolution was dictated by German propaganda, and the inference was irresistible, too, that the Senator from Massachusetts had uttered his particular protest solely because he was the active agent of a German propaganda in this country.

I saw as well when I introduced this resolution regarding the boys in Russia the calling of those who advocated that resolution Bolsheviki and all sorts of other epithets that are unnecessary now to state. The sort of intolerance now prevailing is that if a man upon the floor of the United States Senate utters an American sentiment by that very token he is called pro-German or Bolshevist or some other epithet that is sent to the country by the press, and perhaps the very epithets may be whispered upon the floor of this Chamber.

Oh, how far we have gone in this strange psychosis! We are moving to-day at a snail's pace in this body; but I want you to know the people of this country are emerging from that psychosis and by leaps and bounds have gone far, far beyond us. To be an American to-day with the people is again respectable, but in the minds of some distinguished gentlemen to be an American seems to afford an invitation for denunciation as Bolshevist, pro-German, or in some other outrageous fashion.

I will continue reading this statement of facts from Mr. Frazier Hunt:

Second. The American troops were put under an absolute imperialistic command, being handled in a way that was against every tradition of the Army and country. They were put to doing a king's business and to do whatever task was assigned to them by the British. American men and their ideals of right and fairness were entirely submerged through the un-American leadership.

LACK OF SPIRITUAL LEADERSHIP.

Third. The entire expedition suffered from a complete lack of spiritual leadership. Instead of being an ordinary soldier's job, this expedition required sympathetic understanding. It always has been more political than military. The original leaders thought themselves to be great soldiers and great diplomats, but they proved to be neither.

I will ask the Secretary if he will continue the reading of this article, proceeding with the fourth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Fourth. The expedition has lacked spiritual significance. Europe's war-tired men, sent here from the French battle fields, failed to appreciate the great revolution or sympathize with the unrest and the new birth that Russia is going through. Most of the allied soldiers, especially since the signing of the armistice, hated the job, despised the Russians, and have no concern with the future of the country. The expedition, lacking this spiritual significance in men's minds, has become a mere fighting job to collect Russia's debt to Europe.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask permission that the entire article may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks without further reading, because of the limitation of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Fifth. There is no enthusiasm even among the intelligent Russians in the north to assist the allies and fight the Bolsheviki. Everywhere there is a growing disgust against the expedition, especially against the British.

Sixth. The beautiful faith of the Russians for America is breaking under the manhandling by our forces under the foreign command. The American forces have been led by an American colonel when they should have had a major general. Within our own forces we lacked the right leadership, permitting the Americans to be placed under the limited control of foreigners.

AVOIDS THE CENSOR.

I have come out of Russia to write this. The censorship that has crawled back into its hole in most of the world still wears the iron heel of war days in the north. The American public has been fed pretty stories of the gentle glories of this "Help Russia" expedition, but the facts are that a mess has been stewed and has been kept for the cooks themselves.

America, whose ideals of honor are at stake and whose sons are being sacrificed, has the right to know these facts. In north Russia the expedition has become a dismal comic opera. Here in the north, in a district that never was violently Bolshevik, where the allies had many friends at the start, and where, since the first days there have been unlimited opportunities to advance confidence and gain respect here, with everything their own way, the allies have failed utterly.

DISTRUST OF PEOPLE GROWS.

To-day in Archangel, Murmansk, and the other cities of the district there is growing dissatisfaction against the way the expedition has interfered in local Russian affairs. Every phase of life within the district is controlled by the allies and dominated by them.

The Russians frankly resent this. They will tell you openly that they, and not the outsiders, should determine the exact form of government and pick the leaders. To-day if a Russian fails to follow the ideas and opinions of the allied leaders he is classed as a Bolsheviki with the possibilities of jail to keep him silent. Only such men as conform with the foreigners' ideas last in the local government.

The foreign military are actually and undeniably interfering in local affairs. They are dominating every department, forcing their own ideas and judgments against the wishes of the north Russian provisional government. Martial law has been established, placing the foreign military above the local authorities. All this reflected against the avowed motives of the allies.

"Are the allies coming in to help Russia or themselves?" the people ask. "Are they going to force their ideas of government upon us or merely help us put down the Moscow government so we can have our own fair, elective government? If that great allied force comes into Russia, would they insist on us accepting their ideas of policies, as they have done in Archangel?"

MIXED IN INTERNAL AFFAIRS.

This is the real test of the whole idea of intervention, and the people of north Russia have the right to ask it. As far as they are able to tell by experience, military intervention means interference with the internal affairs. Practically all of the Russians resent this. They reserve the right to let their political development take its own course. It is difficult to understand the question until the facts are grasped that the whole country is seething with unrest. In the land there are a hundred and one pet theories, ideas, and beliefs, all of the adherents striving to put forward their remedies. Then into this boiling mass is stuck a bayonet, instead of a spoon, and this new outside foreign cook, whose receipts are not wanted, whose ability is questioned, whose sincerity is doubted, shouts, "Try my brand of cooking. You need it, try it, or I'll stick you with a bayonet."

This is exactly what has happened in north Russia. One particular outside nation forced their ideas of life, liberty, happiness, government, justice, censorship, and everything on the Russians, and they have been imperialistic, old-fashioned, Old World ideas.

VIEW OF ONE RADICAL.

Recently one of the sincerest Russian revolutionists in Archangel, who has given years of his life to bring about an original revolution, said:

"Thousands of honest anti-Bolsheviki radicals throughout Russia are fearing the course that the intervention may take more than they fear the Bolsheviki. We prefer the present Moscow government to the retrun of terrible reaction. As far as we can judge, certain of the allies now are working toward breaking the heart of the whole spirit of advancement in Russia and want a heavy-handed dictatorship established, so that life and business can go on under the old imperialistic conditions.

"If the allies really want to help us, why don't they help us in a straight military way and with food, but let us decide our own political future within ourselves?"

FORCED TO MAN CARS.

The American troops are being used by a foreign high command for internal interference. For instance, on September 3, on the night before the American troops landed in Archangel in force, the provisional government was kidnaped by certain Russian militia people and spirited to an island in the White Sea. This bore, without question, the silent approval of certain elements of the allied high command, and in many circles is said to have been instigated entirely by them.

The American ambassador forced the return of this government, but the workmen of Archangel went on strike as a protest. It was a pure political strike, but the first job the American troops were assigned to was the undignified, unwarranted, and un-American job of manning the street cars, breaking the political strike.

At every minute of the time since then the Americans have been under the complete and absolute control of the British high command. The American officers have been submerged and overshadowed.

HOW BRITISH TOOK COMMAND.

In the early days of the intervention it had been expected that the Russians would flock to the allied colors by the thousands, and several hundred extra British officers, most or all of whom bore service and wound stripes, resulting from long and honorable service in France, were sent out with the idea of training and officering the unborn Russian Army. But the army failed to spring up, and the officers were left high and dry without work.

The 5,000 American troops came as a Godsend to them. The vast forest front, covering some 50,000 square miles, was divided up in a number of districts, and over each always was a British officer. Every order of any kind had to come through the British command. The rations were British, the equipment was British, and the expedition was British.

The Americans were doing their fighting in small groups with, at the most, their own platoon or company commanders over them. In certain instances the tiny groups of Americans actually were under the British sergeants. It simply didn't go. The hard feeling popped up and grew. The same conditions prevailed with all the other members of the expedition, and before long hatreds, jealousies, and distrusts were engendered which it was impossible to correct.

HOW THE AMERICANS FELT.

All the time the Americans felt they were doing a job for certain nations, helping to collect their debts and reestablish their commercial supremacy. Part of this trying condition was brought about through the lack of proper spiritual leadership in the high allied command and part through the lack of proper leadership within the American forces themselves. This put the whole expedition on a false basis and it was reflected through the leaders down to the lowliest private.

Many of the military advisers on the Russian question had been men who went through the revolution. They had been too close to the pain and anguish of the birth of new Russia to catch the significance. They had been too concerned in keeping Russia in the war to care for anything else. The very bitterness engendered by the Bolsheviki's act of signing peace has kept them from thinking clearly and accurately.

These men, with the former commercial men whose Russian business suffered from the war and revolution, have made the chief corps of the allied advisers. Their hatred against the Russian revolutions has been so violent that they have seen only blood in the Russian red-flag freedom. Add to these the professional soldiers, who have often been hard and uncompromising, and you have the types who have tried to lead an expedition which, first of all, demanded intelligent, sympathetic understanding instead of steel bayonets. Their policy has been blunt, inconsiderate, tactless, and often cruel. They have set up governments and then tried to knock them down when they didn't knuckle sufficient.

ARREST DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

There are Russians to-day in the district who are being hunted and hounded because they have gone against the high command. Recently an entire Zemstvo government in one outlying district within the allied control was arrested and brought to Archangel because they were too radical for the local allied taste. American soldiers did the actual job of assisting in this arrest.

Hand in hand with this lack of spiritual leadership goes the expedition's lack of spiritual significance to the officers and soldiers. In the first place, most of the British, French, Italian, and Serbian soldiers making up the expedition were war weary. They were sent to the north district, understanding it was to be an easy, safe work of guarding ports. Instead they found themselves fighting hundreds of miles away from the ports, down some railroad line or up some river.

Vague rumors came to them of a great British-Russian deal at stake. Other rumors told of tremendous debts which Russia owed to Europe that must be collected. The avowed reason for the original entrance at Murmansk was the threat of the White Finns, under German leadership, to turn the ice-free ports of Murmansk and Petchinga, on the Murman coast, into German submarine bases. This was outlived when the expedition started to Archangel under the slogan of guarding the great war supplies about to fall into the German hands. Reaching Archangel, the foreign soldiers found no supplies. This old, hard-ridden theory of guarding the supplies at Archangel lasted through hundreds of columns of propaganda, even long after the American troops had landed a month later.

HATE TURNS ON RUSSIANS.

From the start the expedition lacked the thrill of the drive that a great, honest, stated purpose would have given. The majority hated the job and transferred their hate to the Russians. They had no concern for them and did not try to understand the tremendous question the country was facing to discover the solution. They carried on in a half-hearted way, riding roughshod over the feelings of the natives and acting much more like conquerors than invited guests.

Then on November 11 the word was flashed that the armistice was signed. So these foreign soldiers, who had been fighting for four years and now were up here in frozen Russia, wanted to quit fighting and go home. They did not care for Russia, and they wanted to get out of the cold, unhappy climate and go back to their families. They no longer cared a whoop for the expedition. Their eyes were turned westward. But they had to stay on, so, being spiritually unled, they figured out their own theories on the intervention.

SUSPECT A COLLECTION AGENCY.

"Sure; we all want something out of this. That's understood," a British officer said to me not a week ago.

"America doesn't," I answered proudly.

"Cheerio, tell that to the Rushies," he answered.

These soldiers can not be blamed for considering that this expedition is Europe's great collection agency. They have not honestly been told differently. The blame goes back to the home Government for failing to make an early, clear, and honest statement of the Russian policy. The war-tired, weary, heartsick soldiers of the world needed a spiritual surge, and they weren't given it.

Many question if there can ever be any enthusiasm for a Russian expedition if a big one be decided upon. Certainly there can be no enthusiasm unless there be an understanding of the real question at stake.

RESULT OF PRESENT SYSTEM.

This same lack of sympathetic understanding has developed and fostered a growing suspicion and hate among many of the Russians. The breaking down of Russian trust, the interfering with local affairs, the crushing of the spirit of unrest that is the hope of the country, the backing of certain reactionary interests against the new spirit of independence through political advancement is adding to this distrust.

The allies, the Russians point out, are visitors whose performance is poor guarantee for what will happen if a great intervention program is decided on.

HOLD FAITH IN AMERICA.

Back of it all, for America, is the beautiful faith Russia's peasant millions have for America. The bearded moujiks far inland, who have never seen a railroad and don't know the world is round, tell you they do not know what Russia needs, but that America does, and that she will help. This is something the new world has in its national possession that is priceless. Here, thousands of miles away, are millions of simple, ignorant peasants who can not read or write who look to America to lead them out of darkness.

Such a faith swings the idea of intervention and interference high above the commonplace ideas of money, power, or national advancement. It is a sacred thing, demanding honesty and sincerity. We must help, and we must find the right way. We must look straight at the great Russian revolution and its present phase. We must not be frightened at the sound of the word bolshevism and hide our heads or hold stupid hatreds. We must keep faith in a world that is tired, heartsick, blind from exhaustion and hunger.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. There is one other very brief article that I wish to read, which is published in the Detroit papers of February 5, and is a letter from Sergt. James Berberian, who is serving at present in Archangel. His letter says:

The success of American armies in wars of the past has been attributed to the fact they always have had a complete knowledge and understanding of the principles for which they were fighting. This is not true of this expedition which has been sent to Russia. We are absolutely ignorant of any cause for being here, and we appeal to the folks at home to enlighten us.

If we are here to improve conditions of the Russians and to destroy bolshevism, which we must admit is a dangerous institution, does it not seem right the Russians should assist us? But they refuse to go to the front and fight with us.

AUXILIARIES MUTINY.

We were actually compelled to turn our machine guns on a body of them the other day—Russians who had enlisted in the British Army and refused to obey commands to move to the front. Does it seem right we should sacrifice our lives for men who refuse to assist us in establishing peace in their own country?

We are here under English command. Every move we make is controlled by England, and we are living on English rations, which consist mostly of canned stew and tea. I don't want you to feel that being in doubt is lessening my fighting spirit any. I am ready at all times to give my life for my flag and my country. But all we ask is that you assist in convincing us that this expedition is justified.

We heard when first these troops were taken into Russia the solemn assurance given by the United States Government that we entered Russia not to take any territory, not for territorial aggrandizement, not to interfere with any local government, but merely to aid. The very statements that were then made were false in fact and were given to lull not only the Russian people into a false security but to lull the American people as well.

We heard then upon the floor of this Chamber that our soldiers were there to guard supplies. The answer is the fact as related by Mr. Frazier Hunt in this article read to-day, and the answer is in the fact that any time we could have obtained those supplies and at any time have taken them out, but to advance into the interior a couple hundred miles, more than 200 miles in some instances, to destroy governments there and set up our own was, of course, not an interference with Russia or with the Russian government, as we said when first we entered that unhappy country, but it was a mere undertaking friendly to them and in their aid.

We have heard these and other excuses offered—none official, Mr. President; none from our Government at all—but we have heard excuses of varying degree of protecting the Russians over there who are friendly to us. The answer is in the facts, and the facts are opposed to every contention that has been made either on the floor of the Senate or by way of semiofficial channels.

We are in Russia because we were forced in there, in the first place, against the will of the President, I am very glad to say. We are in Russia for no good at all to ourselves or the Russian people. We are in there carrying out a purpose that is foreign, I am perfectly confident, to the purpose of the President of the United States, and, thank God, we have learned to-day from the British premier finally that the President of the United States probably will not proceed in this unusual, this vicious, and this criminal course in that land.

I trust that the news which has come to us is true; but why in this great democracy, why with this great Foreign Relations Committee, can we not learn for our own people, from those who govern us presumably not as masters but as parts of a great democracy—why can we not learn from them first hand exactly what the United States Government intend to do and just exactly what it has done in the past?

England was compelled through her prime minister to tell her people. The representative of foreign affairs there told his people exactly what was his purpose and what has been England's design. In France, Pichon showed France's purpose and France's design. We boast of our liberty; we boast of our freedom; we prate of our democracy and of making other nations of the earth safe for democracy as well; and we, Mr.

President, of all the nations on earth that are in Russia to-day, know nothing about what our Government is endeavoring to do or why our boys in that semi-Arctic clime are being buried beneath the snows.

Oh, Mr. President, the Senate, with all its glorious traditions of the past, with all its past independence, with all that which has made American life so beautiful in the past and which has given us our hope and inspiration for the future, it is this thing against which I inveigh and against which I cry out; and it is for this reason, that this Senate ought to have dignity enough to know or even to express an opinion that I present this resolution after the failure of the Foreign Relations Committee to report the resolution of December 12 of last year. Why should we not know? Do you understand, sir, or do you not care?

Back there in Michigan are 5,000 mothers and fathers, sweethearts and wives—15,000, indeed—who have been holding their meetings, preparing their organizations, begging and praying that they may know concerning their loved ones across there in arctic Russia, and we who represent them have neither the courage nor, indeed, the appropriate conception of our own position to enlighten those mothers and fathers and sweethearts and wives in the State of Michigan regarding their own. Why not? You may not agree with me in respect to the policy to be pursued. That is far from the question. You may believe that one policy or another ought to be adopted by this Government in reference to Russia, but for the love of heaven and upon the oaths we took as Senators of the United States upon what theory do you fear to face the truth and to learn the facts concerning your Government's activity in Russia? Is there no appeal in these men and women and these girls who sit there in Michigan's cities and towns who have all they have on earth across there in Russia?

Oh, Mr. President, is it possible that if I had annexed to the resolution a hundred thousand dollars' worth of copper wire or a million dollars' worth of steel rails we might have had tremendous interest and enthusiasm and immediate action on it, and we might have had an expression instant and indignant of the opinion of the Senate of the United States; but because we deal only with 5,000 human lives, with the blood and the bone of the inarticulate mass of citizens of our country, because we deal only with those boys whom we conscripted for war with Germany and then in violation of the Constitution sent into war with Russia, because finally it is only our humanity with which we deal that we can get neither expression of opinion from the Senate of the United States nor report upon the resolution from the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. President, these men who are over there to-day appeal to me. I am speaking of them, and of them alone. I am speaking as an American, an American who cares more for one American boy in the snows of Russia than for all of those you feed with such enthusiasm with a hundred million dollars, who are unknown to you.

I listened to the debate upon this floor when we were proposing to appropriate a hundred million dollars to feed an unknown mass in Europe, located no man knew where, to be distributed no man knew how, and I thought of the heat and the enthusiasm of Members upon the floor of this Chamber in behalf of that hundred million dollar appropriation, and then I thought of freezing Americans 220 miles from Archangel, standing in mud and snow and swamps, standing there deserted and forgotten by the Government of the United States. It is for these men that I appeal here.

Oh, talk not to me of bolshevism and of its evils and its horrors; do not deny here to these men, so far as you can express it, an opinion because you hate something over there. Forget your hate for a moment and see if there is not room in your heart for a little love for American men in American uniforms fighting, they know not why, upon a foreign soil and being buried in unnamed graves.

In conclusion, Mr. President, just one thing more. If I were to stand upon a soap box on a street corner, or were I to go to Poli's Theater and say what is said in what I now read, you would want to investigate me, and perhaps expel me from the Senate of the United States. Listen, please, to the words I read:

> I want to say a word about Russia, or not so much about Russia as about our attitude toward Russia. I hold it as a fundamental principle, and so do you, that every people has the right to determine its own form of government; and until this recent revolution in Russia, until the end of the Czar's reign, 80 per cent of the people of Russia never had a "look in" in determining who should be their governor or what their government should be. Now, I am for the 80 per cent. It is none of my business, and it is none of your business, how long they take in determining it. It is none of my business, and it is none of yours, how they go about the business. The country is theirs. The government is theirs. The liberty, if they can get it, and God speed them in getting it, is theirs.

Do you recognize these words? Ah, my Democratic brethren, have you ever heard them before? These are the words of Woodrow Wilson, spoken in relation to Mexico; and, in reading them, I have substituted Russia for Mexico. In that respect, and in that alone, have I made any alteration. Is that your creed to-day, my Democratic brethren, or do you repudiate it? If that is your creed, my Democratic brethren, what are you doing over in Russia now? If that is the creed that you follow, and if this pronouncement is yours and you believe in it, why will you not stand here with me, instead of obstructing and opposing, and pass a resolution containing the mere expression of opinion that, as soon as practicable, these boys should be withdrawn from Russia.

One word more, Mr. President, and I am done. I reiterate again and again that I am here appealing simply as an American—and, under the Providence of God, it is time for Americans to speak in this country—I am here appealing only for American boys, imperiled by our supineness and our cowardice in the past. I am appealing only for these mothers and these fathers and these sweethearts and these wives who, with anguished hearts, stretch out their hands to the Congress of the United States and who have thus far appealed in vain. For them I appeal to-day. It is as an American for Americans I speak, for an American policy, and for American khaki-clad boys who are sacrificing their lives in the snows of Russia.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a word in regard to the Foreign Relations Committee, for I think the condemnation of my friend from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has perhaps been a little sweeping.

I entirely agree with his resolution of inquiry. I thought it ought to have been adopted. It was sent to the Foreign Relations Committee, and in justice to the committee it must be stated that it was taken up immediately after the 12th of December, as I recall the meeting of the committee. The resolution was discussed, but a majority of the committee were against reporting it at that time. I was in favor of reporting it, and so were many other members of the committee. I believe that inquiry ought to have been made. I wish I could think that the passage of a Senate resolution of inquiry addressed to the State Department would have saved a single life, but the committee did not neglect the resolution. The reason the resolution has not appeared here is that there was a majority of the committee who were not in favor of bringing it here.

Mr. President, I wish to say a single word about our relations to the condition of affairs in Russia. When the war was going on with Germany, the situation before the great advance which began on July 18 was very dark. The Czecho-Slovaks were making their great march across Siberia. I thought then, and I still think, that we ought to have sent help to those men at once. We were then at war. I felt very strongly, however, that if we were going to intervene at all we should have intervened effectively; we should have sent sufficient troops for that purpose. We delayed for six months, and then finally sent a very small body of troops to Vladivostok.

In the Archangel-Murmansk expedition, when that was undertaken, the war was going on; the Germans were advancing northward and were threatening Finland. It was a military movement. There, again, I thought action was justified by the allies and by the United States to meet the German advance. In my mind, it had nothing to do with the Russian Government. But again, as, I am sorry to say, has been characteristic of both England and the United States in past wars, we only intervened a little. We had much better have stayed out than to have intervened in a weak way, as we did.

The war came to an end on the field of battle. The war is not over but the hostilities ended. The danger of the advance of Germany through Finland ceased, and from that time it has seemed to me that it was the business of the United States and the business of England, though England's duties do not concern me, but it was the duty of the United States to take those troops out. They were too many to be sacrificed wantonly and uselessly, and they were too few to be effective.

I have no intention of discussing the question of the Bolsheviki in Russia. Their government seems to me as foul a government as ever cursed a country. It is not only cruel; it is not only a government of the most autocratic kind, not representing the people, for the first thing they did was to discard the constitutional convention which had been elected by the people; not only does it rob, pillage, and murder, and use the product of its robbery to maintain a mercenary army, but it is, in addition, what is perhaps worst of all, a stupid and a weak government. The government of the French Revolution, whatever its cruelties may have been, was enormously effective; but the present government in Russia is cruel, tyrannical, ineffective, and weak. Its activities are shown chiefly in an endeavor to spread its doctrines in other countries, and those activities are not to be met by trying to meddle with that government in Russia.

I do not regard it as our business to set up a Russian government; let them have what they have got; but I do object very strongly to their invading the territory of people like the Esthonians, the Livonians, and the Lithuanians, who desire to be free and to establish a decent government; I object very much to their interference with those governments or with Poland, which is struggling to establish itself as a nation with free and ordered liberty. Those people should have our support.

But, Mr. President, none of this touches our being in Russia against the Bolsheviki with a small force—too small to effect anything—without any sign that there are any Russians who have the nerve and the courage and the power of cohesion sufficient to help us. As matters stand now, it seems to me, on the surface, a pure waste of American lives in those Arctic regions.

I was gratified this morning, of course, to get some information for the first time as to the policy of our Government in regard to Russia through the medium of the prime minister of Great Britain. The source is perhaps unusual as a method of giving information to the American Congress, but I have no doubt it is authentic. I am glad to see that some decision has been arrived at; that, as we are not disposed to make any of our dealings with Russia effective, we can at least take our men away and save their lives. I understand that the soldiers of Great Britain and the soldiers of France are quite as unwilling to go there as we are to have our American soldiers sacrificed in northern Russia, and I should be glad to see them one and all withdrawn. I think the statement of the prime minister of Great Britain, declaring that to be the policy of the President, ought to hearten the Senate sufficiently to express an opinion on the matter, although I am afraid any opinion we might express would be of little avail.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it is my purpose to ask that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, notwithstanding the serious indictment which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] has brought against the committee for inaction.

I was glad to hear the Senator from California finally commend the policy which the President of the United States has adopted in this international matter. I have felt from the first that the Senator's agitation of this question was premature and was in the nature of a tempest in a teapot.

We went into Russia, as the Senator from California well knows, as a military matter, as a military necessity. We went in there on July 1 last, as I recall, or possibly in June. When the armistice was signed and took effect on the 11th of November, it was not in the nature of things, it was not within the propriety of military policy, to withdraw at once all American forces. We could not even withdraw our forces from France, even if we possessed the ships to do so. The armistice was merely a suspension of hostilities for the purpose of making an endeavor to arrive at permanent terms of peace.

As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said, we went into Russia as a matter of warfare against Germany, because Germans were on Russian soil, because there was a great menace that in that country the hundreds of thousands of German soldiers and the other hundreds of thousands of German prisoners would get practical control of Russia in the face of a manifest weakness of any Russian government. When the armistice was signed it certainly would have been a reckless policy instantly to withdraw troops from Russia.

As a matter of fact, since that time there has been an insignificant amount of fighting. So far as our soldiers are concerned at Vladivostok, there has been practically no fighting for months; they are simply there marking time and waiting for the progress of the conference in Paris. So far as the body of troops is concerned which is at or near Archangel, there has been a little fighting, it is true, and some losses, it is true; but I am sure that if the Senator from California were a military man and confronted with the problem of what to do with the forces that went in there for military purposes he would realize that it would not be possible instantly to withdraw those soldiers, and that the proper time to withdraw them would be when an international agreement had been reached between the United States and the associated nations that went in there.

We did not go in alone; we went in as the result of an agreement between Great Britain, France, and, I presume, Italy. It would create a perfect anarchy and disorder for us to withdraw our troops without first securing an agreement with the other countries, even if in military policy it were proper to do so.

Mr. President, it is very evident that the policy of the President has been to hold out a friendly hand to the people of Russia. Even the Senator from California has been compelled to admit that the President of the United States has been the one man in powerful position, who at all times has endeavored to encourage the Russian people. It was the President of the United States whose policy it was, first of all of the great powers, to recognize the overthrow of autocracy and the establishment of a provisional government. It was the President of the United States who sent a friendly message to the Soviet congress which met in Russia in March, 1918, about a year ago. Let me read again this friendly message which the President sent:

> May I not take advantage of the meeting of the congress of the Soviets to express the sincere sympathy which the people of the United States feel for the Russian people at this moment, when the German power has been thrust in to interrupt and turn back the whole struggle for freedom and substitute the wishes of Germany for the purposes of the people of Russia.
> Although the Government of the United States is unhappily not now in a position to render the direct and effective aid it would wish to render, I beg to assure the people of Russia, through the congress, that it will avail itself of every opportunity to secure for Russia once more complete sovereignty and independence in her own affairs and full restoration to her great rôle in the life of Europe and the modern world.
> The whole heart of the people of the United States is with the people of Russia in the attempt to free themselves forever from autocratic government and become masters of their own life.

That was the utterance of the President of the United States to the Russian congress of Soviets in March, 1918.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what class or faction of the Russian people we are now engaged in fighting—those to whom the President sent this letter and to whom those assurances were sent?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Russian Soviet is the form of government that prevails all over Russia.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand the Soviet form of government very well; but I want to know if the people to whom the President addressed that loving note are the ones that American soldiers are now shooting and being shot by?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Many of them are in cooperation with the Americans, with the French, with the British, and with the Japanese. From Vladivostok to the Ural Mountains—5,000 miles, inhabited by millions of people, and through which runs the great railroad of Russia—comparative peace and quiet prevail under the government of the Russian Soviets to-day, and they are at peace with the few soldiers of the United States and associated nations that are there. Wherever the forces of the associated and allied nations are to-day in Russia there is comparative quiet and regular government of the Russian Soviets.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before I am interrupted again, I want to read the reply which was sent by the Lenine-Trotzky dictatorship in Petrograd to this friendly assurance, this sympathetic message from the President of the United States. I want to put it in close connection with the President's message. Here is the reply:

> The all-Russian Congress of Soviets expresses its appreciation to the American people, and first of all to the laboring and exploited classes in the United States for the message sent by the President of the United States to the Congress of the Soviets in this time when the Russian socialistic Soviet Republic is living through most difficult trials.
> The Russian Republic uses the occasion of the message from President Wilson to express to all peoples who are dying and suffering from the horrors of this imperialistic war its warm sympathy and firm conviction that the happy time is near when the laboring masses in all bourgeois countries will throw off the capitalist yoke and establish a socialistic state of society, which is the only one capable of assuring a permanent and just peace as well as the culture and well-being of all who toil.

Mr. President, that reply was practically an insult to the American Government and to the President of the United States, who represented the American people. It was practically an effort to breed in the United States trouble for the American Government, which was carrying on a war. It was German propaganda endeavoring to arouse the socialistic and anarchistic element of the United States to oppose the Government of the United States. It was practically an invasion of the United States and an attempt to arouse rebellion here; and I want to say that that document is enough to condemn the sort of government which the Senator from California appears to be the champion of here upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I will not permit the Senator from Nebraska to indulge in any such misrepresentation of what I have said as that in which he has just indulged. I am not the champion of this government that the Senator describes. The Senator from Nebraska, if he has followed my remarks, knows that full well. Such a statement I brand as utterly without foundation in fact, and the Senator has misapprehended and misunderstood every effort of mine here if he insists upon any such statement. But I say to the Senator, conceding the government there to be all that the Senator says, declare war on it if you want to. Why do you not? Why are we not manly enough to stand here in the presence of our people, and, if we hold such views as the Senator holds, why are we not manly enough and courageous enough to say, "We will declare war upon this government of the Soviets and upon Lenine and Trotzky," instead of murdering our boys over in Russia without a declaration of war?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a fair question, and I will answer it. We are not declaring war nor making war on the Lenine and Trotzky government because it is not our affair. In spite of that message, insulting as it was, the President of the United States has remained the great champion of noninterference in Russia, and he is holding that place to-day, and he is making that fight to-day in Paris. He has only recently brought Great Britain and France and Italy to a point where they have agreed with the United States to send delegates to meet this Bolsheviki government in conference at Princes Islands, and the Senator knows that. The Senator knows that the President of the United States is not proposing to make any war on this government.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I know the fact that we are making war; and no amount of specious argument can convince the American people that when you kill in fighting and you are killed in return, when armies go forth in battle array and indulge in shooting one another down, it is not warfare. What is it, if it is not warfare? And if you speak as you do concerning these people, and claim you have the right to shoot them down without any declaration of war, how do you justify meeting them to-day at all?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have stated that we went into Russia as a military necessity, because Germany at the height of the war was gradually reducing Russia through the Bolsheviki government of Lenine and Trotzky to the position of an assistant in the war. To say the least, Russia was a sort of political "no man's land." The Germans were there. We had the right to oppose them there, and for that purpose we went there. We were making war on Germany, and the Lenine-Trotzky government had become the tools of Germany. We had the right to go there. Now, we expect to get out. The Senator can see that it is the policy of the President of the United States as soon as possible to bring those soldiers out of Russia. The Senator can see that the President of the United States has brought Great Britain and France and Italy to the point where all are to have a conference with those Russians at Princes Islands; and I will predict now that one of the first conditions agreed upon at that conference will be the cessation of hostilities, and another result will be the retirement from Russia not of the United States alone but of all nations that went with us into Russia. When they come out, they will come out as they went in—together. When these nations come out, the terms of withdrawal will be that there will be no butchery of those Russians who have been cooperating with our soldiers. It would be indecent for the United States, Great Britain, France, and Japan to withdraw their troops suddenly or prematurely and leave those who have been cooperating with us there to have their throats cut.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, will the Senator state whether or not he considers that we are engaged there now in warfare against Germany?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is as much warfare against Germany as we engage in when we are occupying the bridgeheads of the Rhine. Technically it is warfare. There is no blood being shed on the Rhine, but there may be yet.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I will query him no further. That sort of logic I leave, and leave it, I hope, in the RECORD just exactly as it is expressed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any doubt in the world, Mr. President, that the gas shells which have been used by the Bolsheviki soldiers to shower upon our American soldiers were made in Germany; and the Senator believes so, too.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I have no belief upon any such subject, and I do not care a rap for the sort of argument in which the Senator is indulging; but his misrepresentation of a moment ago about this particular government over there, what he takes me to task for, is not because he thinks that I have any sympathy with the Bolsheviki government, but because I am making an American fight for American boys. It is no longer fashionable in some places to do that; but our people understand it, and with them now to be American is becoming fashionable again.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will not charge the Senator with being Bolsheviki, because the very fundamental doctrine of the Bolsheviki is the rule of the majority, and the Senator is determined to have a minority rule of the Senate. He criticizes a committee, when there is a majority against him, for not reporting his resolution. He criticizes the Senate now, when a majority on both sides, I will venture to say, are against him, for not passing this resolution. He is not Bolsheviki at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska further yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Well, let us have a vote upon this resolution, then. That is all I am asking.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We will have it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. No; you want to take it back to the Foreign Relations Committee, and we will never have a vote. Let us stand up here and vote upon the resolution. That is what I am asking. Will the Senator join me in that, and let the majority rule?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I expect to move to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Ah, but the Senator wishes the majority to rule. Let the majority of the United States Senate now rule, and let them vote upon this resolution, and I am content.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is not entitled, any more than any other Senator, to have his measures passed upon without reference to committees. It is the custom of the Senate to refer measures to committees, and I am going to ask that that be done in this case.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I understand the Senator from Nebraska correctly, he and the junior Senator from California believe that the President's policy is to withdraw our troops from Russia. That is what this resolution favors. Now, if I understand the situation correctly, the President has frequently stated that he was speaking for sentiment in the United States. Now, if he is in accord with the resolution, and if the United States Senate is in accord with it, why not express that now in terms that we are in favor, under the circumstances, of withdrawing our troops from Russia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, that same argument might be used for every measure that comes before the Senate. The Senator might argue that it should not be referred to a committee. All that I am contending for at the present time is for the reference of the resolution to the committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But, Mr. President, this matter has been before the committee a long time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; not at all.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Well, a similar matter has been. It is all one great question—the Russian situation. What are we going to do in the situation that confronts us? What is the duty of the Senate to-day?

If the Senator will permit me, I feel very strongly with regard to the facts that have been disclosed by the Senator from California so far as they affect Michigan; and yet I trust that I am big enough, or think I am, even to subordinate some of the interests of Michigan if such a course were in the interest of the great cause in which we are engaged; but I have been unable to obtain facts in reference to our continuing our troops in Russia. I know that what the Senator has said is true as to their going in; but that purpose has ended. The Senator himself admits that the President is in favor of withdrawing them. He has stood alone. Why not let the Senate raise up its hand and support the President in that great view that he has taken? Not to do so seems to me inexcusable neglect on our part; and I can not agree with the Senator that this action is premature on the part of the Senator from California or any other Senator, because we are working in the dark, and finally we have got to pass upon these treaties. If we have some clearly defined ideas, we should express them in the Congress and in the country now.

That is my attitude with reference to this matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I sympathize with the Senator from Michigan, because I realize that his State has furnished by far the largest quota of troops now in the Archangel region, and I realize that there is strong pressure from his constituents that those men shall be brought back; but there is also strong pressure for bringing back the hundreds of thousands of soldiers that we still have in France. The mere difficulties of getting ship space to bring them back, the mere difficulties of bringing them back from the Murman coast and from Archangel in the midst of winter, as the season is there now, are great enough to cause some pause.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But, Mr. President, that excuse has not been offered by anybody. The only excuse we have had has been that we must wait on the pleasure of the President in connection with the peace conference; that he is in command. We are reading in the press every day that our associate armies that went over there with our boys are being withdrawn, but our boys are there, and we are unable to obtain the slightest information as to what their condition is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator has not read that the troops that went in with the troops of the United States are being withdrawn without the concurrence of the United States.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, but the Senator thinks he has so read.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I shall be obliged to the Senator if he will state how, and when, and where.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why, it is almost a matter of daily occurrence that we read something in the papers about what France and England and Japan are doing with their troops. Maybe it is unofficial, but we have to depend upon the newspaper reports for all that we know; and this resolution has been introduced for the purpose of obtaining official information. That is all that we asked for in the beginning—to know what the facts are.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; the Senator is mistaken. The pending resolution is not that resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the pending resolution is what the Senator from Michigan wants. Let us support the President by passing it promptly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think, on the other hand, that the passage of the pending resolution would be a decided mistake. We are in there in concurrence with Japan, France, Great Britain, and I suppose also Italy. That concurrence is so binding that when Japan sent in an excessive number of troops, the attitude of the other countries was such that Japan has withdrawn that excess, so that the troops she has remaining there at this time are only those which she was called upon to send in by the original agreement.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Just one question.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If this resolution shall be agreed to as an expression of the opinion of the Senate of the United States with reference to our duty in withdrawing our troops from Russia, does not the Senator think, if there is not a good reason for bringing our boys back from Russia, the President will possibly, or very probably, give the Senate that reason, and in that way we will get officially information about conditions there? The information thus obtained will most assuredly do no harm and may result in our being able to give the American people, especially those whose loved ones are serving in the war in Russia, suffering the hardships of the winter, and meeting the dangers of battle—in my judgment, in violation of the Constitution of the United States and without the least semblance of authority of law—information which the Senate has a right to elicit from the President, which we hope will give some comfort and consolation to the mothers, fathers, wives, and brothers of the brave boys who are being sacrificed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The answer to that question is that this pending resolution calls for no answer from the President and in the very nature of things would receive no answer from the President. As the Senator has said, this resolution is merely an expression of opinion. It could do no possible good; it would not hurry by five minutes the return of any American boy from Archangel or from the Murman coast. It would simply be an expression of opinion of the Senate, which is not informed as to the military reasons for keeping the troops there. It would be an act of the Senate which would probably be subject to misconstruction on the other side of the ocean. It would seem to foreign statesmen to be an act of the Senate questioning the wisdom of the President. It would seem to be an act of the Senate apparently protesting against cooperation between the United States and the other nations with regard to the presence of troops in Russia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution shall go over without prejudice in order that we may have a majority determination of it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the resolution goes to the calendar.

THE REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator from Florida, who has charge of the unfinished business, if he will not agree to lay it aside temporarily in order that we may finish the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. FLETCHER. I was in hopes that the conference report would be concluded before this time. How much longer does the Senator think it will take?

Mr. SIMMONS. My impression and my assurance is that we shall probably be able to dispose of it in a little over an hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will then ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on the revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from a business man of my city to which I ask the consideration of the Senate. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., February 10, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Now that you have passed the largest tax bill the world has ever known, taxing business to the limit of all it can stand, as, for instance, the candy company in which I am interested out of its earnings of $1,000,000 must pay $700,000 in taxes, and a few of us in interest must lend them a good part of this to enable them to do so, but in this instance I am not complaining for these profits were largely war profits, and, as you know, I am committed in favor of the 80 per cent excess-profit tax; but what we do object to is the unnecessary continuance of these extravagances.

As late as last December an automobile company in which I am a shareholder had trucks taken from it by the Government which it had sold to needed domestic buyers, and now we are told the Government has 60,000 trucks to sell. Well, by all means sell them and get it over with, if these and other merchandise are not salable abroad or can not be sold back on some reasonable terms and price to their manufacturers or arrangements made with them to be sold for account of the Government.

As a business man, as well as Senator, am sure you will agree with me that this merchandise should be disposed of as quickly as possible and not carried, accumulating expense, as a continual menace to business. This, I understand, is what Gen. Goethals thinks should be done and is asking for an appropriation for $60,000,000 for that purpose, which I hope will not be granted.

The public is greatly appreciative of what you have already done in calling attention to the scandalous use of public funds, and trusts this important matter of resales may have your attention in the hope that those in charge may show some part of the ingenuity in saving that they have in spending.

Yours, very sincerely, E. T. BEDFORD.

I call that letter to the attention of the Senate in connection with some observations I contemplate making on this measure.

Mr. President, it is impossible to enact a measure taxing the people that is equitable in all of its provisions, and this bill does not break the rule. In fact, because of its purpose to raise $6,000,000,000 it will work greater hardship than any tax bill ever enacted before. It is to be regretted that a revenue bill can not be passed that will deal fairly with all concerned, but with divergent views existing between the two Houses and the Treasury Department as to the methods of taxation that should be followed a situation has been brought about resulting in some of the provisions of this bill being so drastic as to be really destructive. In both the House and the Senate there has been a disposition, a natural disposition, to tax the war contractor and the so-called "profiteer." That there has been some war "profiteering" goes without saying; but in an effort to catch and tax the real profiteer we are running down the business man who has made no vast profits as a result of war.

There are men who have made some money manufacturing war supplies that this bill will bankrupt. There are other business concerns that have not been manufacturing anything for the Government, but upon whom this bill will bear very heavily.

In discussing the last revenue measure I proposed the enactment of a uniform sales tax on merchandise, and I know that in the preparation of this measure the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] advocated the enactment of legislation of this character, which, if properly worked out, would have relieved the business community from the almost destructive burden which will be imposed by this measure.

And, then, with an income tax levied justly, we would have a simple system of taxation which would have worked out equitably and would not stifle industry, as the pending measure will in many lines.

I am much concerned about preserving the business of the Nation. We hear much to-day of reconstruction and employment for our soldiers returning from Europe and our workingmen who have been laid off from their war employments. But we do not stop to reason out that in stifling business by overtaxation we take away from the soldier and the workingman the opportunity of employment. Is "reconstruction" to be nothing more than a theory, or are we to follow a sensible plan that will stimulate industry and make labor, not jobs, at a premium? The whole country to-day is alarmed at the business outlook. The demands of war have practically destroyed our business fabric, and many lines of industry must start all over again. Some Members of this very body have insisted that the war should be paid for within the next few years. I differ with these gentlemen. If this war is to be a lasting advantage to the Nation, then those who have not been asked to shed their blood must be called upon to make some contribution to the cost. I am certain there will be no great hardship for those who come after us if we extend over a period of many years the raising of the money to pay for war costs.

The profits of war made a few men rich. As a result of war, however, business generally suffers, and after such a great war as we have just come out of there is bound to be a readjustment of affairs that will pinch in some quarters.

Our bonded indebtedness on December 31 totaled $20,811,000,000 and all of our war obligations have not yet been canceled. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this Nation, if it hopes to avoid unusual business depression, must do everything in its power to stimulate the wheels of industry. The Senate has already voted during this present session an appropriation of $200,000,000 as a contribution to the building of roads. We will be asked in a few days to appropriate $750,000,000 for battleships and cruisers for our Navy. The Food Administrator has asked for $1,200,000,000 to make up the difference between the world price for wheat and the Government's guaranty. The Shipping Board will, I am informed, ask us for several hundred million dollars to continue its program. From every department of the Government there comes demand for increased appropriations.

I understand that for this calendar year at least $750,000,000 more will be asked, to be taken from the Public Treasury, to operate the railroads. Billions of dollars are yet to be expended to liquidate our war obligations. The Secretary of the Treasury indicates that $10,000,000,000 more bonds must be issued, in addition to the money to be raised from this tax bill, to pay our war debts.

Where will all of these immense expenditures leave us? Is there no stopping point? It seems to me that the time has come for the Congress of the United States to devote itself to conducting the Nation's business in a businesslike way. No private concern could long exist with such inefficiency in its management.

As an example: The other day I received a letter from a gentleman who had visited Nitro, the great ordnance plant at Charleston, W. Va. He informed me that over a million dollars' worth of lumber was lying out in the mud and fast being burned up or stolen by the people of the neighborhood. While he was there 15,000 bales of cotton were exposed to the weather without any apparent immediate need for it, and that more cotton was coming in every day by the trainload.

We hear these things every day. There seems to be a lack of intelligent appreciation of the fact that all of these things must be paid for by the taxpayers of the Nation. Mr. President, we have got to get down again to first business principles. We must see to it that a system is followed by which the greatest economy can be had in the management of our affairs.

Is it not possible for the executive departments of the Government to determine just how much will be needed to run this Government for a period of years, including the interest on our bonds, and then estimate just how much it will take to liquidate these bonds, extending their payment over 30 or more years? If this is carefully done, the cost of government can be materially reduced; and the business men of the Nation will appreciate the fact that we are endeavoring to meet conditions as they should be met, and will resume their business activities.

I think there is much cause, Mr. President, for apprehension, and I can not quarrel with the men who have helped to make this country what it is, when they stand aghast at the need of real intelligent appreciation of the country's needs. Our crops last year were far in excess of what we were able to consume, and this year's crops bid fair to be greater. It is also true that the bowels of the earth hold untold riches in coal, oil, and ore, and that the undeveloped portions of this country make it possible that under all conditions we can take care of a population in America many times the number of people we have here to-day.

But we have been through a great war, in which, because of the lack of a comprehensive plan, we have spent vast sums without regard to its real value; and, now that the war is over, we must take account of stock and go on to days of careful expenditure. Let me warn the Senate that the people of the country are bearing their limit in the matter of taxes, and that this measure, no matter what may be said in its defense, will be destructive of many lines of legitimate endeavor.

In the years to come the great political campaigns will be made upon economy in the conduct of the Nation's business. The American people are tired of inefficiency and indifference to waste, and wherever this is found in public office those responsible for it will be retired to private life. The country has a right to demand an understanding of its business problems on the part of those charged with management of the Government and a careful expenditure of the people's money.

The party which does not understand this sort of management of the Nation's affairs will not long remain in charge of the country's business.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Gore	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Henderson	Martin, Va.	Smith, Mich.
Calder	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Smoot
Colt	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Spencer
Culberson	Kellogg	Overman	Sterling
Cummins	Kendrick	Page	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	Penrose	Thomas
Dillingham	King	Pittman	Thompson
Fernald	Kirby	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	Knox	Saulsbury	Walsh
France	La Follette	Shafroth	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gay	McCumber	Sherman
Gerry	McKellar	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-two Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that when this conference report passes, and I have no doubt but what it will pass, and the bill known as the revenue bill is signed by the President and becomes a law, there will be imposed upon the American people the heaviest burden of taxation and at the highest rate of taxation ever known in the history of our country, or of any country in the world, I would not rise to address the Senate. It also comes at a time, Mr. President, when the people have been called upon to subscribe most liberally to bond issues, not only for the purpose of paying the obligations and debts of our country but for advancing billions of dollars to other countries that with the United States have been engaged in the war.

If the bill, when it becomes a law, would raise sufficient money to pay the running expenses or indebtedness of our Government for the next two years, I would congratulate the American people and say to them, "It is the very best thing that could be done, irrespective of the injustices and discriminations the bill contains."

It is estimated that the bill will produce for the taxable year 1918, based on the business of that year, $6,000,000,000. Mr. President, I am positive that with the relief provisions as provided in the conference report that will be a part of the law it will not nor can it produce $6,000,000,000. If there is raised under the law $5,300,000,000, that is the limit that can be raised.

I say that, Mr. President, because I have to the best of my ability examined most carefully into the details of the legislation. It is true that we have to estimate as to what effect the relief provisions will have upon the bill, but with only a limited and small amount estimated for them, I am convinced beyond the question of a doubt that the amount I have named is all that the bill will raise.

This seems to me an appropriate time to analyze, in as brief a manner as possible, the financial condition of our country, to let the people know just what obligations we are under as a Nation; just how we are to meet them and to prepare them for the demands that may be made upon them not only for this year but for years to come.

While the war was on and enthusiasm and patriotism were unbounded in all parts of the country it was easy to appeal to the people to save and to economize, and by that saving and economizing to purchase the obligations of the Government as they were offered by our Treasury Department. The people of America are to be congratulated upon their splendid responses. Never in all the history of the world have a people shown such generosity and such liberality as have the American people in donating to all the causes connected with this war. It was not one call on behalf of the Red Cross to which everybody responded most willingly, but we had calls for relief from England, from France, from Italy, from Roumania, from Poland, and from nearly every country in Europe, except the central powers, who were directly involved in war against this country. Those calls for assistance were for the blind, for the maimed, for the starving, for the babies, and hundreds of other causes. Untold millions of dollars were collected in this country for those purposes. All honor to the American people—not to one class, but to every class from the richest to the poorest, from the most exalted to the humblest—for their wonderful response.

Now that the war is over and people are beginning to settle themselves in the line of endeavor which they intend to follow hereafter, and as their obligations, which were mainly created through their liberality, become due, in many cases pressing them, I am fearful, Mr. President, that it is going to be somewhat hard in the future not only for the business interests of the country but for the people generally to meet the demands that must be made upon them.

Every endeavor should be made by every Senator and by every Representative to check legislation which may be extravagant or which will have for its object the spending of the people's money for any purpose whatever that can be safely postponed. I warn the Senate now that unless that is done the people of the United States are going to demand an accounting of us. And, unless we can clear our skirts, I do not think that we shall be in public life for many years longer.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with what the Senator from Utah has said; and in view of certain statements which were made yesterday I have taken occasion to look up the record, and I want to call the Senator's attention to what that record shows, in so far as his own course in reference to expenditures is concerned.

I find that the Senator from Utah has introduced in the Senate at this session bills calling for appropriations of $1,003,645,690, or as much as the entire expenditures of the Government before this war. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that if we are to practice economy it seems to me that we should do so in this——

Mr. SMOOT. Well, I thank the Senator for injecting that statement into my remarks; but seeing that he has done so, I desire to call his attention to the fact that the bill naming a billion dollars for road building was simply the lending of the credit of the Government of the United States to the States of the Union. It was not an appropriation, nor would it have cost the Government one cent in the end. The Senator from Tennessee, however, did not want such a plan; he wanted the money to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States with which to build roads. All I desire is that these roads shall be built by the States and that the Government shall lend the States its credit, and that credit within 50 years will afford returns sufficient to meet every dollar of the cost of the roads built, less the interest to be paid on State bonds issued for that purpose. There was not a single dollar to be advanced unless the bonds of the Government were sold and when advances of a similar amount should be placed in the Treasury of the United States of the bonds of the States to which the credit was to be extended——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Now, if the Senator will wait he will later have all the time he wants to discuss the bills I have introduced.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to do so. I agree with the Senator from Utah that we ought to practice economy; but it seems to me, in the light of the Senator asking for an appropriation of over a billion dollars, it would be well for him to consider——

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Utah has not asked for an appropriation of a billion dollars. He has asked that the Government should lend its credit to the States in order to enable them to build good roads.

Mr. McKELLAR. But they were to be obligations of the Government of the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. I decline to yield further. I am not going to be drawn into this controversy. I have something to say about the conference report.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to put the figures into the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator may put them into the RECORD, if he desires to do so, but not in my speech.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not want to annoy the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator wants to interrupt me upon any question that I am discussing, I am perfectly willing to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood that the Senator was discussing extravagance.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there will be maturing obligations of the Government between this and March the 15th of over $800,000,000. For that reason the pending revenue bill should become a law at the earliest date possible, in order that the returns may be made by March 15, and under the provisions of the law the first payment, or one-quarter of the amount to be collected, is to be paid when those returns are filed.

I notice that there are also outstanding certificates of indebtedness, which have generally been sold throughout the United States to banks for the purpose of paying the daily expenses of the Government, amounting to nearly a billion dollars. Those certificates of indebtedness will be taken up as soon as sufficient money is raised by taxation or by the sale of bonds.

It is estimated that the obligations of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, will be $18,000,000,000. Mr. President, I say now they will be more than $18,000,000,000. In order to meet those obligations with the sale of bonds already made, and calculating that we shall raise $6,000,000,000 from the pending revenue bill, we must of necessity, to meet them, have another liberty or victory loan, as it may be called, amounting to $6,000,000,000.

In this connection, Mr. President, I desire to say that the total expenditures, exclusive of the public debt, but including loans and investments, from April 6, 1917—the day that war was declared upon the Imperial Government of Germany—to January 31, 1919, but 13 days ago, amounts to $26,509,703,828.39. The total receipts from taxes from April 6, 1917, to January 31, 1918, amount to $6,040,355,523.17.

The bond issues, including the first, second, third, and fourth liberty loans, amount to $16,966,938,000, and the $6,000,000,000 that no doubt will be offered by our Government this coming April and which no doubt will be taken by the people and the banks of the country, will make the bond issue to June 30 of this year, in round numbers, $23,000,000,000.

I take it for granted that no one will question the fact that the obligations which the Government of the United States must meet for the year beginning July 1, 1919, and ending June 30, 1920, or the coming fiscal year, will be $10,000,000,000. How are we providing to meet those obligations? I digress here long enough to say that $10,000,000,000 will not cover the appropriations that will be made and the demands that will have to be met by our Government for that year. But what provision are we making to meet the same?

This bill, Mr. President, when it becomes a law, proposes to raise by taxation $4,000,000,000 for the fiscal year 1919–20. It will not raise that amount; it would not even raise that amount if business for the business year 1919 should be as good as it was for the year 1918. If profits should be as great in 1919 as they were in the year 1918, the bill will not raise $4,000,000,000; but is there a man in all the United States who would even suggest that the profits for the year 1919 will equal those of 1918? Mr. President, I know of whole lines of business which made exceptionally large profits in the year 1918 which will not make sufficient to pay ordinary dividends during 1919; and when this bill becomes a law, under the exemptions that are given and under the relief provisions incorporated, those whole lines of business in this country will not be compelled to pay one cent of taxes for 1919. Then, tell me that we are going to raise $4,000,000,000 from this bill. It is impossible.

How shall the necessary amount be raised? There is only one other way, and that is by selling bonds. I might add there is another way, namely, by amending the law, but I doubt whether that can be done in time. So I want the American people to know that when this impending proposed bond issue is disposed of, amounting to $6,000,000,000, it will only take care of the obligations under which the Government rests up to and including June 30, 1919, or the present fiscal year; and if the obligations of the Government for the coming fiscal year amount to $10,000,000,000, we might just as well know now—and better now, perhaps—that there must be sold for that year at least $6,000,000,- 000 worth of bonds or else we must convert the obligations of foreign countries to us into money, and with that money pay the running expenses of our Government.

Mr. President, I have prepared a bill for that purpose. I think action along that line should be taken, and I am going at this time to read the proposed bill—it is not long—so that the Senate may see just what I have in mind in the way of legislation. I say to Senators that we must begin at once to secure revenue from any and all sources that are within our power; and as we hold some $8,300,000,000 of foreign obligations, drawing the same rate of interest as our liberty bonds are drawing, if there is any way of converting them into liquid assets for our Government, that is one of the first pieces of legislation that ought to be passed by Congress. I think this proposed bill, if it should become a law, would accomplish that result. The proposed bill reads as follows:

Within 20 days after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall negotiate and arrange with the Governments of Great Britain and France, Kingdom of Italy, Kingdom of Belgium, Kingdom of Roumania, and other governments whose obligations are held by the Government of the United States, through their duly accredited representatives to the United States, all of whom are indebted to the United States in large sums of money by reason of loans made to them from time to time by the United States, that such loans be converted into marketable and salable securities, either bonds or debentures, with coupons attached, negotiable in form, payable in dollars and in lawful money of the United States, either to bearer or the registered holder of same, having a maturity of not less than 5 years nor more than 25 years, and bearing a rate of interest of not more than 6 per cent per annum or not less than 5 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, payable in dollars in lawful money of the United States, which bonds or debentures shall be divided into denominations of $1,000, $500, $100, and $50, lawful money of the United States.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to indorse on each and every such bond, debenture, or obligation, payable as aforesaid, a guaranty on behalf of the United States Government, guaranteeing to bearer or the registered holder of said bond, debenture, or obligation the payment of the principal of said bond, debenture, or obligation, together with the interest accrued thereon from time to time until maturity. Said obligation may contain a redemption privilege at par and accrued interest from and after a date agreed upon between the Secretary of the Treasury and the government or governments issuing such obligations through their accredited representatives; that the said bonds and debentures may be redeemed in the following manner:

When the Secretary of the Treasury shall receive from the foreign government or governments issuing such bonds, debentures, or obligations the principal and interest due, on or before the date fixed in the said bond, debenture, or obligation for its redemption, he shall advertise the fact that the said bonds, debentures, or obligations will be paid, together with the accrued interest, on a date mentioned in two newspapers published in the principal cities of the United States having a population of over 250,000, and on and after the date mentioned in such notice the interest on said bond, debenture, or obligation shall cease. The coupons only up to the date of the redemption period shall be attached to said bonds or debentures.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to offer the said bonds or debentures for sale at a price of not less than par and accrued interest from the date of issue.

The bonds and debentures shall be printed and engraved in the United States of America, in the English language, at the expense of the foreign government or governments issuing the same, and shall be signed by the ambassador or an accredited representative of such foreign government to the United States having such power.

That no act of a foregin government shall relieve the United States from its guaranty.

Then, Mr. President, I provide a sum of money for carrying the provisions of the measure into effect.

I think that if such a measure or some legislation similar to it were enacted the obligations which the Government now holds in the form of notes—for that is all we have—could be sold in the open market, not only in this country, but in all the countries where there is money to invest in securities of this character. I take it for granted, of course, that now would not be a very good time to dispose of those obligations; but I think that many of our institutions would buy them, particularly so if our banking laws were changed so that they could be taken as security by the Federal Reserve Board and Federal reserve notes issued thereon, just the same as our own Government notes are treated. In this way, Mr. President—providing, however, that the obligations were all sold, and that from the pending bill we raised $3,000,000,000 instead of $4,000,000,000—it would be possible for the Government of the United States to pay their obligations for the coming fiscal year without issuing any further bonds of our Government. We must remember, however, that with the bonds that are to be sold in April of this year, together with the liberty bonds that have been already issued and sold, the total amount will be, as I said before, $23,000,000,000; and in case we do not dispose of these foreign obligations in the form I have designated, or some other form, there will be added to that $23,000,000,000 for the coming fiscal year at least $7,000,000,000 more.

I notice that there was in the Treasury of the United States on February 11, 1919—that is only two days ago—a credit of $1,325,862,440.73. When the President of the United States signs the urgent deficiency bill, the report on which was adopted here this morning, repealing certain appropriations that were made for the years 1917–18 and 1918–19, amounting to over $15,000,000,000, there will not be one single, solitary cent more in the Treasury of the United States than there is to-day.

Mr. KING. There will be less, because we will have spent some of the money that is in there now.

Mr. SMOOT. During the day; yes. But from the mail I receive from all over the United States I gather that the understanding has gone forth, and it is absorbed by all classes of people, that when we repeal the $15,000,000,000 of appropriations made that $15,000,000,000 goes immediately into the Treasury of the United States, and therefore there is no necessity of passing this bill. Why tax the people when $15,000,000,000 are immediately turned back into the Treasury of the United States? Mr. President, there is not a cent turned back.

I have received pleading letters from all parts of the United States to defeat the conference report on this bill and allow the taxes to be imposed under existing law. It was stated by one of the Senators the other day that these appeals came from the big interests of the country. Ah, Mr. President, I wish that that were true. We could dispose of it very quickly then. But I want to say to you that this bill is burdensome beyond measure upon the small institutions of this country. They are the ones that are pleading for its nonenactment. They are the ones that will suffer most. Yet I think it is best to have the country know the true financial situation of its Treasury, and then I believe that the people of the United States will with a great deal more readiness pay the taxes imposed.

I recognize the high cost of living to-day, and I have wondered how soon the scale of advance will cease and the downward tendency will come. Mr. President, it is not going to come until the circulation of money begins to decrease in the United States. Senators, do you know what it is to-day? Do you know why these inflated prices have mounted as high as they have? Take up a statement of the Treasury Department almost any day and see for yourself. I hold in my hand one dated February 1, 1919; and what do I find? Let us go back to 1880—we can all remember that far back—and what do we find our circulation per capita was? $16.92. What do we find to be the circulation per capita on the 1st day of January, 1919? $55.76—almost four times as much.

Where does this increased circulation per capita come from? How has it happened? Why, let me call your attention to this one fact alone—that at least $27.50 of that increase of the circulation on January 1 of this year comes from the fact that Federal Reserve notes to the amount of $2,630,662,112 have been issued. It is true that we held against those notes on that same date $910,731,705 in gold.

In answering my letters in relation to the pending revenue bill I have stated my attitude upon it. I am not going to repeat it to-day, because I stated my opinion of it, and the changes that I would have made in it, when the bill was under consideration in the Senate. I thought when the bill passed the Senate that the relief provisions were very broad and sweeping, as was referred to by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. As it is reported now, they have been strengthened rather than weakened.

I now refer to the provision which imposes a tax of 80 per cent upon the net income of every corporation which derived in such year a net income of more than $10,000 from any Government contract or contracts between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, both dates inclusive. That provision is entirely new. It was not acted upon by the House nor by the Senate, and when I first read it I could hardly believe my eyes. Why, Mr. President, this provision is not going to affect thousands of businesses in this country that ought to have paid, between the dates named, the highest possible rate of taxation. They have no contracts with the Government of the United States, but they have furnished the goods to a contractor, some of them, at prices that were unjustifiable, and their profits have been exceedingly high. Can you tell me why they should not be taxed, simply because they have no contract with the Government? I can not understand why that limitation was made.

The provisions as to amortization and net losses and obsolescence are about the same as they were when the bill passed the Senate. I notice that in a few cases they have been changed to make the bill, I think, plainer in terms, so that there could be no misconstruction on the part of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in favor of the taxpayer. The Senator from North Carolina covered those questions quite thoroughly in his discussion, and therefore I shall not go into the matter further.

I thought that the Senate provision imposing taxes on insurance companies, as it finally passed the Senate, should have remained in the bill. Under the provisions of the Senate amendment to the House bill there could be no escape from taxation. It was so perfect a plan that it did not make any difference whether it was a large company or a small company, they all paid in the same proportion. But the way it is reported there will be discrepancies between companies doing the same class of business, and in many cases where the same amount of business is done with the same profits, one paying nearly double what the other pays in taxes. That should have been avoided, and could have been, but we are told that the House conferees would not yield, and that Senate amendment was lost.

In the case of estate taxes I really thought that the plan adopted by the Senate could receive no objection from the House, unless perchance it was as to the rates imposed. The House provision penalizes the man who has a large family. The Senate provision provided that the tax should be imposed upon the amount received by each beneficiary. Suppose a man dies leaving his estate to five children, and his estate is valued at $500,000, or $100,000 to each of the heirs. Under the House provision the whole amount is taxed at the highest possible rate, yet it is to be divided among the five children. Why should those five children be taxed upon a combined estate, when each of them has only one-fifth of the estate? All that they ought to be taxed is upon the amount that they receive from the estate. In other words, the provision as it stands is penalizing the man who has a family. It is penalizing the children. It never ought to be. Some time or other it will be changed, notwithstanding it failed in conference.

There is one provision that has been put in the bill in conference that I think is a just one, and that is this: Partnerships doing business were not taxed the same as corporations doing the same business; and I have in mind now one partnership the members of which, if this relief provision had not been amended by the conference, would have been compelled to pay nearly $1,000,000 more in taxes than if they had been a corporation and had done the same business, sold to the same customers, and the profits were the same.

Mr. KENYON. How is that taken care of?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator asks me how that is taken care of. I will say that the conferees inserted a provision in the bill allowing partnerships to incorporate within a certain limited time; and if they do, they are taxed the same as corporations are taxed doing a similar business.

Mr. President, I, of course, never was enamored of the consolidated returns. In some cases there is no doubt but that they ought to have been allowed to make, and an injustice would be done unless they were allowed to make, a consolidated return. But reflecting over the whole United States, and taking into consideration all of the business, I am afraid that there will be a greater injustice done by allowing these consolidated returns than there would be if they had been prohibited. The House provided a specific prohibition against them, but the House yielded to the Senate, and the provision reported in the conference report is a modification of even what the provision was when it passed the Senate.

I am not going to discuss the zone system, Mr. President. I had no faith from the beginning that it was going to remain in the bill. I saw it go in the bill, and at the same time I felt that it was going out before the conference report would be returned to the Senate. In fact, before ever the conferees met, before ever there was a date set for the meeting, I saw in the public press what purported, at least, to be a statement of one of the conferees that if it remained in the bill there would be no revenue legislation; or, in other words, every Senate amendment in the bill could be agreed to but that amendment must not. I suppose the conferee had a right to make that statement. I frankly admit that I am not in the least surprised that it is out of the bill.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. MOSES. That being the case, may I ask the Senator what has become of the sacred principle of majority rule, to which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] so eloquently referred this morning?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in conference reports the majority do rule in what they yield to and what they do not. The Senate agreed to the amendment. A majority included it in the bill. Then a majority of the conferees allowed it to go out.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him one moment on that point?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. Of course, the Senator from New Hampshire will realize that each side only has one vote in a conference, and it is not a question of a majority of 10 conferees; it is a question of an agreement on the point at issue.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will also admit, however, that if there are three conferees on the part of the Senate and three conferees on the part of the House, and two of the conferees of the Senate and two of the conferees of the House sign the report, the conference report can be made.

Mr. PENROSE. Oh, of course. That is a majority of each side; but it has to be either a complete agreement or a complete disagreement upon the point in controversy. It is not a vote of the majority of all present.

Mr. MOSES. I hope the Senate conferees are not making a confession here that they were terrorized by one of the House conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not think they were terrorized, Mr. President. I think, however, that one of the conferees on the part of the House had made up his mind that the zone amendment should not remain in this bill, just as he stated to the public press, and it was sent broadcast.

Mr. MOSES. That furnishes an illuminating example of how to get legislation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. While I agree with what the Senator from Utah says about one of the conferees, I think it fair to say that that conferee, in his expression of opinion in opposition to this particular amendment of the Senate, was supported by two of the other conferees, making a majority of the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not doubt the statement made.

Mr. PENROSE. And further than that, if the Senator will permit a further interruption, as the Senate amendment was a change of existing law, when a deadlock was reached it was clearly the duty of the Senate to recede under all the rules governing a conference.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would have been the rule, provided it had been demonstrated that a failure to recede would result in the defeat of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say, however, if the Senator wanted to pull that old rule on me, that I am perfectly aware that that is one of the understandings between conferees; but if that was the case I can pick up this bill, and I can go through it almost from the first page to the last and find that it was not put into force.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that this particular amendment affecting second-class rates was an amendment which was more exhaustively debated in the Senate than any other amendment the Senate added to the bill? It was an amendment that produced a close division of opinion, and it was decided by a record vote, as I remember, not only by a division but by a call of the yeas and nays. It seems to me that the Senate might have had an opportunity to pass upon it again to determine whether the conferees should recede or not, inasmuch as this was an amendment which affected a very great number of interests, a very large number of people, and an amendment which provoked a sharper division than any other amendment which the bill contains. We are told that it went out because of a newspaper publication a few days before the meeting of the conferees, and that one conferee insisted that there should be no legislation at all if that particular amendment were retained.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that when the existing revenue law was being discussed by the Senate and when that bill was before the body the same identical amendment was offered to it, and the Senate overwhelmingly adopted the amendment. It went to conference, and it went out in just exactly the same way.

Mr. MOSES. Then it is apparent that the last expiring kick of some statesman is as effective as his most vigorous efforts when he is in full possession of his strength.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know that I fully appreciate the observation of the Senator from New Hampshire. So far as the conferees on the part of the Senate are concerned, there was absolutely no division between us as to this particular amendment. There was practically no division upon the part of the House conferees in opposition to the amendment. The two Houses locked horns on this proposition from the very beginning. The conferees on the part of the Senate exhausted every possible means of securing favorable action upon it.

I agree with the Senator from Utah in his statement that this was among the last provisions in the bill acted upon. The matter came up repeatedly during our deliberations, and we always found the same disagreement with respect to it. It was retained as one of three or four other amendments which were in ultimate dispute between the conferees; and upon those three or four amendments, upon which we had made but very little progress toward an agreement, we deliberated for a very long time. I think we consumed toward the close a day and a half in controverting those three or four amendments. Finally, we reached a conclusion as to all four of them at the same time.

So everything that it was possible to do on the part of the Senate conferees to save this amendment was done. I do not think there was a more ardent advocate of this proposition in the Senate in reference to this matter than I was myself, and I think I can say that with reference to every one of the other Senate conferees.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator for the statement he has just made. I never doubted but what he had done so. But, Mr. President, I knew that every one of our conferees wanted this bill to pass, and I believe I knew that the whole bill would be sent to the bone pile rather than to have the amendment incorporated into the law.

I would like to see the whole question of second-class mail matter taken up by the Post Office Committee, and I admit that that is the proper committee to handle it, and thrash out the whole question, and do it before the 1st day of July, 1919, if possible; and if not possible, at the earliest possible date thereafter.

Mr. President, I am not opposed to the imposition of additional taxes upon second-class mail matter, but I am opposed to the quoting of a report that was made some years ago showing the cost of handling it, and I say now that it was based upon a false calculation.

Mr. MOSES. Is the legislation attempted to be sustained by the Senate conferees also based upon that false calculation? Is the whole structure based upon a foundation that has no truth in it?

Mr. SMOOT. The report is based upon a foundation in which there is no justice. There is not a Senator who does not know that you can handle a ton of second-class mail matter for less than you can handle a ton of first-class mail matter, not only in the cost of transportation over the railroad lines, but in the distribution of it. If we are to raise the rates, let them be raised, but for heaven's sake do not chop this country up into zones. No other civilized country does it. I feel mortified as a citizen of the United States when I am told that from my own State a magazine can be sent to the farthest end of India for less money than it can be sent from my State to an adjoining State. You can not defend that.

As I said, if there is to be an increase, let the rate be increased, and let the policy of all other civilized countries and that our own country has followed up until July 1, 1918, be pursued, that the information carried through the public press shall be carried to all parts of the country and to all citizens thereof at the same rate.

Mr. President, I do not feel like taking the time of the Senate any longer. All I am going to do is to plead with the Senate to study the financial condition the United States is in, to study the obligations that our country must meet, and, if possible, learn how they are to be met and oppose any legislation proposed that has a tendency to place burdens upon the people by way of taxation, vote against it, and let us get back to normal conditions as quickly as possible.

Mr. SHERMAN. May I inquire of the Senator about the deliberation of the conference committee on a matter that I think affects very materially the revenue?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. There will be no war profits after a while. Just when they will cease no one can definitely state. The excess profits depend upon private enterprise, upon the returns that can be had upon invested capital, and the industry and the ability of the managers of the business.

Did the conference committee take into account the fact that the Government appears to be retarding private enterprise so as to reduce the excess profits? I have had a number of requests, some complaints, I can say to the Senator, from very large industrial centers in the Middle West, where they can not get freight rates that will enable them to live, where their business can not be conducted at anything but a loss, where they can not conduct some of their business at all, where crushed stone, building brick, and road material is to be used, because the freight rates are at a figure where they can not without losing money engage in the business, and sometimes they are unable to get any freight at all.

Then, again, on the seacoast, in certain port cities, the manufacturers find where they have an export business or are importing certain lines of what to them is raw material they can not bring from Spain or Cuba that material needed in their manufactories because they can not get freight rates. The freight rates were under contracts when the war began. Private steamship companies were commandeered, and the contracts were enforced. The contracts were made with an idea of transacting business at a fair margin of profit. Of course commandeering the ships ended the contracts. The ships are now in the hands of the Shipping Board of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, taken from private owners. These contracts are suspended. Now, in the coast cities the big manufacturers, some of one kind and some of another, can not get freight rates except at war figures. Great Britain has reduced her freight rates by one entire horizontal reduction of 66⅔ per cent.

Men come to me who are managers of large enterprises and say that unless the ocean freights are reduced they can not get their raw materials to make pay rolls or to make excess profit. So at both inland and at port cities we find the same difficulty.

Has the Senator or the conference committee considered—of course we can only approximate—that unless the Government shall do some of the things that will resurrect private enterprise some of the revenues are bound to turn up less than we think?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that the conferees could not take into consideration the freight rates that would be imposed on the shippers of the country by the Railroad Administration. The Senator was out of the Chamber when I referred to what the profits, in my opinion, would be of the calendar year 1919, the present year, upon which the taxes would be imposed. The report upon the bill intimated at least, if it did not virtually state, that the bill would raise $6,000,000,000 on the business of 1918, then the amendments that were offered to the bill providing for the imposition of taxes the following year—1919—would raise two-thirds of that amount, or $4,000,000,000. If the bill should raise for 1918 $6,000,000,000, and, by the way, it will not raise it, but if it should, no man will say that it would raise $4,000,000,000 under the business that will be done for the year 1919.

I do not want to go over that question again, but unless business should be wonderfully improved from what it has been since last November after the signing of the armistice, unless it begins immediately to improve rapidly, we will not collect under this bill if it is the law much to exceed $3,000,000,000.

The Senator from Illinois points to the railroad rates as affecting some industries in his State. I received a telegram only yesterday calling attention to the fact that the rate upon low-grade ore from a certain mine in Utah to the smelter before the Government took the railroads over was $1.75 a ton and now it is $4 a ton. It was a low-grade proposition, and they find themselves now, with copper at 18 cents instead of 26 cents, in a position where they must close down entirely or have a change in the freight rate. They do not get enough out of it to pay the freight. That is only one instance. I can cite to the Senator hundreds of such cases.

There will have to be a rearrangement of the rates charged at present for freight, or else untold numbers of businesses will suffer. It was all very well, and nobody objected to them paying the higher rate while they were procuring for the products a high price. Not long ago they were paying 11 cents a pound for lead. What is it to-day? Five and one-fourth cents a pound, yet the freight rates are the same as when the price was 11 cents.

I do not know what is going to be the result in the end, but I do know that the business of the country can not go on as it has been going. I do know that the high cost of living in this country must change. I also know that the American industries can not pay the rates of freight nor pay the salaries they are paying to-day, with the taxes that are imposed upon them and will be imposed upon them, and compete for the markets of the world. I know there must be a reconstruction.

I hope that the loyalty and the patriotism of the American people as a whole will recognize the fact that capital and labor must be brought closer together, that one will take the other into their confidence and figure out just what can be done, and that all, if possible, yield a little, and let us get business again running under normal conditions and have a happy people and a prosperous country.

So, Mr. President, I think the statesman of to-day has before him questions of the most serious nature to solve. I think if the statesmen to-day bring this country through the perils into which it is passing they must think more of country than they do of party, and if ever wisdom was needed by mortal men it is needed at the present time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have not followed the details of this measure, but there are certain features of the bill that seek to collect a large amount of revenue. That along the line mentioned by the Senator from Utah I have been very much interested in, because of the effect it will have on the Treasury, as it is directly connected with the bill.

Another and a much more important effect will be on the business enterprises of the country, not only what is ordinarily included in the term "business" but the agricultural and mining enterprises that are now finding it very difficult in many places to run at a profit.

What concerns me is the condition in which I find many business enterprises. I will take one that is not from my own immediate country. A very large manufacturer of fertilizer at an Atlantic coast port had been shipping from Europe a quantity of raw material. It developed that the supply could be obtained in one of the islands in the Caribbean Basin. That supply was developed by private enterprise until it furnished all the plant needed. They had a contract with a steamship company for the transportation of the material. Until the steamships were commandeered it could be done at a fair profit. It would justify the conduct of the business and would make some excess profits as a source of revenue. It belongs to that class of corporations in which all beyond a certain profit that is stipulated in the bill or in the old law would be considered excess profits, and it would contribute a very large sum of the money to the public receipts. With the commandeering of the ships the contract ended. The Government assumed operation of the boats, and it was no longer possible for the company to obtain its ocean carriage.

The Shipping Board still has all that tonnage. It and the Emergency Fleet Corporation acting together have authority to return the ships to the private owners. That is a matter of discretion. They could do so now, possibly, although technically the war is not ended and will not be until the peace treaty is ratified in this Chamber.

There is no way of obtaining anything like adequate ocean freight rates under present conditions. Those rates are maintained by the Shipping Board at the war figures, not the figures that were provided for under their contract, on which the company intended to do business in the future, but war figures of that high type that belong to all war figures. There is no readjustment possible unless by and with the consent of the Shipping Board.

So this and other enterprises situated in a like way find themselves disabled from transacting business. How many, if a census were taken, that are engaged in export or import business there would be I am unable to say. I know that coming to my table there are very large numbers of them that already have made their embarrassments known. So we are greatly concerned in finding whether the Shipping Board will be justified in returning the steamships to their private owners. If that were done, then freight rates become matters of private contract.

I purposely selected from a number of high-priced rentals and merchandise the letter which I had inserted in the RECORD this morning. The Housing Corporation, which is a Government agency, is returning to the private owners in the city of Washington property in order that the landlord may rent it out at war rents.

The extreme celerity with which property can be returned to landlords and the very great delay in returning steamships to their private owners, while one is of much greater interest than the other, indicates that the Government departments need coordination. The property is returned by the Government to landlords so rents can be raised. Merchant ships would be returned by the Government to the owners so rates could be lowered. They do not pull together; they do not think alike; they do not act alike. If there is a reason for returning property in Washington to the landlord and the owner to rent, then there is a reason why, in a much larger way, the shipping ought to be returned to private steamship companies in order that adequate rates may be made. In the last instance rates would be lowered, and the Government does not act. In the first instance the rent is raised, and the Government acts promptly. That is particularly interesting, Mr. President, when Great Britain has cut all her rates by 66⅔ per cent on ocean freights. If the company or companies along the Atlantic coast are to compete in the sale of their products with the countries of Europe, and especially Great Britain, they must have a freight rate on the ocean equal to that given by the English ships or by the English Government; otherwise it spells extinction in a very short time.

I wish to continue at some length on this subject, Mr. President; but in order to accommodate the chairman of the Committee on Finance [Mr. SIMMONS], if it is agreeable, I will yield the floor and continue my remarks under some other head.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Finance, for personal reasons, is very anxious to have final action upon this measure to-night if possible; and I should be very glad if the Senator from Illinois would now suspend his remarks until a later occasion, in order that we may dispose of this bill before adjournment to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall be very glad to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I think we ought to have a quorum present before disposing of a matter of this importance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Ky.	Sherman
Baird	Johnson, S. Dak.	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, Ga.

Colt	Kendrick	Nugent	Smoot
Curtis	Kenyon	Page	Spencer
Fernald	King	Penrose	Sutherland
Fletcher	Kirby	Pittman	Swanson
France	La Follette	Pollock	Thomas
Frelinghuysen	Lenroot	Pomerene	Thompson
Gay	Lewis	Ransdell	Townsend
Gerry	Lodge	Robinson	Trammell
Gronna	McCumber	Saulsbury	Warren
Hardwick	McKellar	Shafroth	Weeks
Henderson	McNary	Sheppard

Mr. LEWIS. Let me at this time announce the absence of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], all three being engaged on committee work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is still confined to his house by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, for fear that there will not be a record vote on the adoption of this report, I desire to state that I could not support the bill when it came from the committee; I voted against it in the Senate, and I shall be obliged to vote against the adoption of this report.

I recognize the importance of having a large sum of money with which to meet the expenses of the Government. I realize that those expenses are not going to be very materially lessened during the next year. I voted for some measures of the committee as emergency measures after we had practically completed the bill, containing many provisions which I did not like. Then, the new proposition of injecting the same system of taxation into 1920 was presented to the committee and passed by a strictly party vote. I think it is a most serious question. I think that all we have a right to do is to legislate for the present necessity; that is bad enough, and we know little enough about it. We have learned some things since we reported the bill and passed it through the Senate which would have influenced us in framing a new measure at this time. We shall learn a great many things before the expiration of the present fiscal year and in time to act more intelligently upon next year's revenue bill.

I know it is useless for me to occupy the time of the Senate in opposition to this report, but I feel that this is my only opportunity to express my views concerning and my opposition to the measure. I hope that there will be a roll call upon the adoption of the report, but, if there should not be, I desire it understood that I shall vote against the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send to the desk and ask to have read a resolution with reference to the printing of the revenue bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution submitted by the Senator from North Carolina will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 453; S. Doc. No. 385), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, as agreed to in conference and passed by the Congress of the United States be printed as a Senate document, and that as many additional copies as can be obtained for $500 be printed for the use of the Senate document room.

STATEMENT OF BILLS INTRODUCED BY SENATOR SMOOT.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in my colloquy with the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] this afternoon I referred to certain figures, which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of the remarks I made at that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] yields to me for a moment, and I ask the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I wish to refer to him and comment on his remarks made a few moments past.

Mr. President, the morning hour closed at 2 o'clock, while the debate was on concerning the disposition of the resolution of the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] touching our troops in Russia. During that debate the eminent Senator from Massachusetts, if I heard him correctly, made reference to matters that should have been responded to then and there, but which could not be for lack of time.

The Senator from Massachusetts, I fear without intending to do so, intimated to the country at large that the policy of the United States respecting the course in Russia had to be learned by American Senators from the premier of Britain, Mr. Lloyd George; and the able Senator said that, so far as he was concerned, he, for the first time, learned of the policy of his own country—this, our country—from these pronouncements of the English premier.

Mr. President, I fear that that statement, not being understood by the public as being an observation made rather parenthetically in a debate such as we had this morning, will be assumed to mean a charge on the part of the able Senator from Massachusetts that this country has to look to England to ascertain the foreign policy of the United States, particularly as to the present difficulties. If once those who have respect for the able Senator from Massachusetts and who attach importance to all utterances from him should really believe that we had ever gotten into such a position that we could not guide ourselves, and took our guidance from England or any other foreign land, there would arise in the United States from a most respectable quarter of our citizenship a revolt and feeling of resentment. Such a declaration, if accepted on its face, would rob the President of the United States of the confidence of his countrymen, which, above all times in the world, he needs now. It would infuse into the minds of thousands of very worthy people of this country the idea that the United States has surrendered its policy to England and allowed England to direct the course and to suggest the policy, and then, when suggested, and only when suggested by England, is it adopted by the United States.

Mr. President, I am sure the able Senator from Massachusetts will say to the country that in a matter where the allied council had authority to act, as, for instance, touching the sending of troops into Russia while we were at war, and for which, as the Senator from Massachusetts said, there was justification and legitimate reason, however much subsequent events might have changed his opinion as to what should be done now, he will admit, for instance, that when the allied council had taken a step in unity it was natural that any one of that council should thereafter speak as to what the united council did. That in the case of France, Britain, and the United States Lloyd George should assume to say what was the policy moving the council simply as spokesman of a trinity of powers equal one to the other, the United States, Britain, and France. If we know that Mr. Lloyd George has assumed to speak the policy as to Russia of the allied council, including these three countries, let us recall that President Wilson has been permitted to speak the policy of these three respecting the league of nations, and therefore on the basis of the charge of the Senator from Massachusetts might be charged in the Parliament of Britain with having directed the policy of England, which, certainly, I trust the President of the United States would never intrude himself to do or assume that this country every empowered him to do.

Sir, for himself, I freely say that if I thought Lloyd George, as an officer of the British Government, the premier of its legislative chamber, and the director of British governmental policy, had assumed to speak the policy of the United States ex cathedra of his own volition and held out to our country that he had been licensed to do so, here in my place I would dispute his authority; I would deny his power; I would repudiate his assertion. But I will not assume that he has ever done such, or that he could be so lacking in diplomacy or wanting in manners as to attempt such.

Therefore, Mr. President, as I know the eminent Senator from Massachusetts did not mean to have his country gain that impression, and feeling that they would gather it from his remarks, I think the correction is due to have it understood to what extent Mr. Lloyd George spoke. He spoke as one of the council, speaking of the policy of the council, and, while it comprehended the United States, it was not an assumption on his part to speak the sovereign policy of this country.

Again, sir, the President of the United States spoke the policy of this country in so far as he could, as read by the eminent Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] this morning; and that policy not having been changed by our country, the allied council was the only source anywhere to speak of any war policy now existing. It was the only source through which that policy could come.

I respectfully make these suggestions at this time that we might not have a misunderstanding on the part of any of our countrymen drawn from the remarks of the eminent Senator, who is too good a scholar in the affairs of his country not to know the facts, and too much of a patriot to mislead his Nation concerning them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I doubt if anybody misunderstood what I said. I did not say that we had to turn to Mr. Lloyd George. I said, as a matter of fact, we had learned from him what the policy of the United States was. His language as given in the paper was this:

"If troops were to be sent to Russia, who should send them? America," he said, "would send neither men, money, nor material."

He was not uttering the opinion of the allied council; he was telling us what the policy of America was, and I have no doubt he knew it—not that he was dictating it; I made no such suggestion—but that he had information which we did not have, and I was very glad to get information from any source.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I think it will be apparent that Mr. Lloyd George did, as I sought to point out, make denial of the charge that seems to have been made from some source that America singly was attempting to intrude itself into these affairs by sending men, troops, and money for such purpose of assault, such as the eminent Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] this morning drew from some matters he read. It is apparent that what Mr. Lloyd George did was to deny that America as America had done such thing, clearly conveying, I think, to all of us the knowledge that what was done, for whatever reason it was done, was, of course, the act of the allied council.

Mr. LODGE. He did not say what America had done and did not deny any charge. He said:

America would send neither men, money, nor material.

I suppose he got his information from the President when he was in Paris.

Mr. LEWIS. Of course, whatever supposition both the Senator and myself indulge is a matter for which we have to take responsibility to ourselves, but I think we now clearly understand the record.

I thank the Senator from Florida for yielding.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, perhaps I may be permitted to do the unusual thing of referring briefly to the bill before the Senate. Before the reading of the bill is begun it may be appropriate to call the attention of the Senate very briefly to the nature of the bill; and in doing so, in order to save time, I will ask Senators to consider the report which is filed in connection with the bill, and which is quite full. It embraces the report of the House committee also on the same subject.

It will be seen that this is the annual river and harbor appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, and its enactment at this session is necessary in order to maintain existing improvements, to continue work upon improvements heretofore authorized and not completed, and to adopt new projects or modifications which are essential to meet the demands of transportation and commerce. The bill takes care, therefore, of the maintenance of projects already completed, so that the work will not go to waste and we will not lose the benefit of what has been done in respect to those projects which have been completed. Then it takes care of continued improvements upon projects which have already been adopted, which are under way, and which it is deemed necessary and advisable or needful, in any event, should be continued. There are some new projects included in this bill, all told about 75, I believe. There have been reported to Congress 200 projects which have been approved by the Chief of Engineers upon the recommendation and findings of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the district engineers, and the division engineers throughout the country. From that list of over 200, or thereabouts, the House committee selected some 70 projects. The Commerce Committee of the Senate has added, as I recall, about five projects to those selected by the House committee, and they were selected upon the basis as mentioned in the House report, as follows:

In the selection of new projects the committee have been particularly studious and critical. No new project is included which had not been reported by the Chief of Engineers. Each report was examined and supplemented usually by later information from the Chief of Engineers. Full and free discussion was encouraged during the committee deliberations. It is believed that a full investigation by the Members of the House will induce agreement with the conclusions of the committee.

It will be recalled that we have not had for the last two years a river and harbor bill that covered more than the maintenance and continued improvement of existing projects and such few additional projects as were considered necessary for the prosecution of the war. The two bills immediately preceding the pending measure were enacted during the stress of war. For obvious reasons, as the report shows, it was deemed necessary in those bills to curtail and reduce to the limit appropriations for maintenance and further improvement and to confine the new projects to such as were associated with the progress of the war. This policy was applied to both of the preceding bills. So that now we have extended the improvements to some extent so as to include new projects which, although not absolutely necessary for the prosecution of the war, are meritorious projects recommended by the engineers and needed for the proper development of our transportation facilities.

The Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1918, comprised in three volumes, which I have here and which is accessible to every Senator, gives information as to all the items of this bill, in addition to others which have been heretofore adopted and are under improvement, together with a statement as to the financial situation respecting each item, the amount heretofore expended, the amount now available and still on hand, and the amount needed to prosecute the work for the next fiscal year.

This bill is intended to provide means for carrying on these public works for the year beginning next July and ending June 30, 1920. The amounts in the bill may be summarized under these heads, as follows:

For existing projects, for maintenance, the House bill carries $3,183,000. The amendments reported by the Senate committee change that to $3,707,300.

For further improvement and maintenance—that is, for prosecuting the work and for maintenance where the project has not yet been completed but is under improvement—the amount carried by the House bill was $6,840,200. The amount carried by this bill as reported from the Commerce Committee is $5,809,400.

On one project, that of the Delaware River, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Delaware, Philadelphia to the sea, we reduced the amount carried in the House bill $1,500,000. That was done for the reason that the amount already on hand, heretofore appropriated and now available, together with the amount which we provide in this bill of a million dollars, will be all the engineers can possibly use for the next year; so that we felt justified in reducing that item, not by way of diminishing the work or lessening the improvement or changing the project in any way at all, but because, as I have said, the amount already available and on hand for that project, together with the amount which we provide in the bill, will be all that the engineers can economically use. So that there is reduction in the item of improvement and maintenance made by that change in the bill.

For further improvement the House bill carries $8,028,300, while the amended bill carries $12,288,300.

As to the new projects I will say that these items are increased upon the recommendation of the engineers, because since the report came in in December, 1918, they have seen the need of additional funds with respect to certain projects, and have recommended an increase in the amounts they submitted in their report to the House.

The new projects are, generally speaking, modifications of existing or old projects. Some are entirely new, but most of them are of that character.

For maintenance, the House bill carried $187,000, and the bill as reported carries $187,000.

For improvements under the head of new projects, those I have last mentioned, the House bill carries $8,725,844, and the bill as we report it carries under that head $10,460,364.

For examinations, surveys, and contingencies, the House bill carried $150,000. The bill as we report it carries $250,000, upon the recommendation of the engineers that they will probably require more than this $150,000 to make the surveys provided by the bill. They are not sure that they will need the additional $100,000; but in order to be safe they have recommended it, and the committee has accepted it upon their recommendation. Of course, if they do not need the entire $250,000 for carrying out this part of the measure, making surveys and investigations and examinations, then it will not be used, and it is made available for the next year; but we thought it safe to do as they advised in that respect, because they better understand the nature and extent of the work which they will have to do, and it would be unfortunate if they found themselves, toward the latter end of their work, in a position where they did not have enough funds to prosecute the efforts to make these surveys and examinations as required in the bill.

So that the total carried by the bill as it passed the House was $27,114,344, and the bill as the committee reports it here now, with these amendments, carries $32,702,364. This, it will be granted, is a very moderate appropriation for this great work; and I trust that there will be no delay in passing it as soon as possible, in order that the bill may be completed and these appropriations may be provided for the work during the next fiscal year.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. I notice by the report that some $10,000,000 of this appropriation is for new projects. Did the committee consider the proposition of the present cost of making those improvements as compared with the estimates at the time they were made?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that those are projects which have never been under way at all. They have never been adopted by Congress heretofore.

Mr. KELLOGG. There were estimates, I suppose, as to the cost of those projects?

Mr. FLETCHER. The estimates for them were made some years ago, and some of them several years ago. We have considered that under present conditions there would be an increase in the cost, perhaps, over those estimates, and the bill takes care of that.

Mr. KELLOGG. There must be an enormous increase over those estimates, if they were made several years ago.

Mr. FLETCHER. In some instances, according to the advices and recommendations of the engineers, that is not the case; they have not advised that it was necessary to increase the amounts beyond their former estimates. In other instances, they do advise that it will be necessary to increase their former estimates.

Mr. KELLOGG. Was any discretion given to the Secretary of War as to going ahead with a project if the increased cost was 100 per cent or more?

Mr. FLETCHER. The committee has considered that matter, and where that sort of a situation arose we have not attempted to adopt the enterprise; and I will state that the decreases recommended by the committee amounted to $2,000,000. The increases are shown by a comparison of the figures which I have mentioned; and a good portion of the increases recommended by the committee will be found under the two items of the Ohio River, construction of locks and dams, $3,000,000, and the Allegheny River, Pa., construction of locks and dams, $1,000,000, making a total increase as to those items of something like $4,000,000, which accounts very largely for the increase of the Senate provisions over the House bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator please tell us what the new projects are that were put in the bill by the Senate committee? As I understand, there were five.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there were five. I have not taken the trouble to examine the bill in that respect.

Mr. KENYON. How are they shown? Are they shown in the bill by the italics?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. All the amendments put in here by the Senate committee are shown in italics.

Mr. KENYON. And how much does that amount to? Can the Senator say?

Mr. FLETCHER. As I glance over the bill before me, the new items added in the Senate bill are as follows:

First, the Passes at the month of the Mississippi River, some $550,000, which was recommended very strongly by the chief of engineers in the hearings before our committee. That item was not presented to the House because developments have occurred there at the mouth of the Mississippi which make this improvement necessary, and the engineer recommended it very strongly and insisted on it, and so we put it in the bill. Of course there is no need to say that the Mississippi River is a very important commerce bearer, and it ought to be taken care of. There has been some shifting of the channel there, and there will be some danger of erosion and destruction of former work unless this item can be taken care of.

Then the next new item, as I have it before me, is the Houston Ship Channel, Tex. That item is new, put in by the committee upon the recommendation of the engineers. These reports came in after the bill was under consideration by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. We will deal with those in detail as we reach them, if it is desired; but I will state as to the Houston Channel that local interests are putting up just one-half of the entire cost of the improvement, which seems to be a very liberal contribution on the part of local interests. If the local community is willing to spend half as much as the entire improvement will cost, it would seem to be a pretty good indorsement of the merit of the project.

The other items added are the Ohio River, construction of locks and dams——

Mr. KENYON. Is that continuing work on the Ohio River?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is continuing work. I will say to the Senator that the total amount of the Ohio River project which has been adopted by Congress will be found to be as follows:

The total expenditures to June 30, 1918, amounted to $46,235,306. The amount estimated to complete the project is $23,265,488. The outstanding liabilities and contract obligations are $3,587,320.

Mr. KENYON. Was that to be carried along at the rate of $5,000,000 a year, or was any amount specified? My understanding of that in the past was that it was $5,000,000 a year. This amount seems to be $3,000,000. I am not urging that it be increased, of course.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the chairman of the committee will permit me, I will state that in the act of 1910 this project from Pittsburgh to Cairo was formally adopted, and it was understood that it would go on at the rate of about $5,000,000 a year until completed, and since then it has been carrying $5,000,000 a year. The only reason why we did not give it $5,000,000 this time was because there was a very large sum of money on hand; the engineers had not been able to expend the money, on account of the war, which had taken so many of their skilled men. They have quite a large sum on hand, and that is why we did not give them the full amount this time.

Mr. KENYON. That is the reason why it is now $3,000,000 instead of $5,000,000?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; that is the reason. They wanted to go on particularly with three or four locks, and we gave them that amount. They urged it strenuously upon us. In fact, although at first they thought they could get along without anything, they came in finally with a supplemental estimate asking for $5,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if the Ocklawaha River item was put in by the Senate or by the House?

Mr. FLETCHER. It was put in by the Senate.

In the case of the Allegheny River there is a new item of $1,000,000.

For Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minn. and Wis., there is an increase by the Senate committee of $9,000.

For Erie Harbor, Dunkirk, and Buffalo Harbors, there is an increase of $125,000.

The increases are shown on page 4 of the report. Just which ones of those are new projects, of course, can be readily ascertained where the item provides for the improvement in accordance with House Document So-and-so.

The item for Brunswick Harbor we increased so as to complete it, according to the recommendations of the engineers.

The Ocklawaha River item was inserted in the bill by the Senate committee amendment.

In the case of Sarasota Bay, Fla., there is an item of $92,000 to complete the project.

Hackensack River, N. J., is a new project calling for $88,000.

Point Judith Harbor of Refuge, R. I., $17,500, is a new project.

Pawtucket River, R. I., at a cost of $29,720, is a new project.

Beginning with Tenants Harbor, Me., which will be the first amendment we will reach, the committee increased the amount appropriated by the House so as to complete the project. It is a small item; and the committee, as they felt with regard to several other items in the bill, felt that it was not advisable to send a dredge there to partially do that work when the whole work could be completed within a very reasonable limit. The original estimate for that improvement was $12,500; but under present conditions the engineers thought it might require as much as $18,750 in order to complete it, and so we provided for that, and increased the House provision by the difference between $12,500 and $18,750. So with some of the other items as we go through the bill. In some instances the House bill would provide for the completion of certain projects on the basis of the estimates originally made, some of them three or four years ago. We changed the words "for completion" to the words "for improvement" where we kept the figures heretofore reported; and when we put in the words "for completion" we changed the figures to correspond with the estimate of to-day. That is the explanation of the change in the item of Tenants Harbor and some of the others.

Mr. KENYON. Can the Senator enlighten us a little as to the item on page 7, the Delaware & Chesapeake Canal? Is that a new item in the House?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is a new provision, but we made no change in that item in the Commerce Committee. It was adopted by the House. As the Senator will recall, the former bill carried a provision for an investigation and study of that canal, and its probable cost, and whether it would be the part of wisdom for the Government to acquire it.

Mr. KENYON. I remember that.

Mr. FLETCHER. The reports made to the House committee upon the subject, which are available—and I shall be glad to go into that matter in detail when desired—are in favor of the Government's acquiring that canal at the figure of $3,000,000, and the House therefore provided for it in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if that report is found in House Document No. 196?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is the number.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee has inadvertently made an erroneous statement. He states that this bill carries an appropriation of $3,000,000 for obtaining that canal. Of course, I only have to call his attention to the fact that the figures are $2,514,289.70, and practically $500,000 is for maintenance or for new work.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. I meant to say that the total appropriation was $3,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. Is that exactly correct? The $2,514,289 is to be paid for the existing canal; but the appropriation of $3,000,000 is to cover that item, and also to bring about a depth of 12 feet. What I should like to know is, where is the report of the War Department to be found? Is it included in House Document No. 196, or was a separate report made to Congress?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I may say that I am very familiar with this project, as the Senator knows——

Mr. KENYON. I know the Senator is.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But I can not tell by the number. I have not just at hand here all the reports that have been made upon this particular project, but I will have them to-morrow morning. I have them all bound up, and I can refer to any document. There have been so many reports made favorable to this project that I am not able to distinguish them by number. From the wording of this clause in the bill I should say that that was undoubtedly the report of the engineer which favored the acquisition of that canal and its deepening to 12 feet.

Mr. KENYON. I will say to the Senator that the report I was interested in was the report of the War Department favoring the acquisition by the Government of this canal. Is there not such a report in existence?

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is; and I can refer the Senator to that, if he wants it, right now.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to have the Senator do so.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the report to which the Senator refers is Senate Document 14, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session. The letter transmitting the report, signed by the Secretary of War, is dated March 11, 1915. That was made pursuant to a resolution introduced in the Senate and adopted by the Senate October 8, 1914.

Mr. KENYON. That will be found in Senate Document No. 14, will it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can not tell the Senator. I can furnish him with a copy of the report, if he desires it.

Mr. KENYON. I should be very much obliged if the Senator would do so.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a number of copies, and I shall be very glad to furnish one to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator, now that he is on the floor, whether this canal as it now exists is in use?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is; and about a million tons of commerce pass through it annually and pay tolls.

Mr. LODGE. What is its depth?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Boats of 9 feet draft, 23 feet beam, and 220 feet in length can pass through it. There is a double line of steamers, for example, through this canal, day and night steamers, in the summer time, and night steamers in the wintertime, between Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Mr. LODGE. So that it is in use?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Oh, absolutely; and about a million tons of freight a year pass through it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask to have the bill read, in accordance with the agreement.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Florida if he will be willing, as we reach different amendments that we may want to consider, to have them go over until to-morrow morning?

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall be very glad to have that done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill for committee amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, line 4, after the words "third session," to strike out "$12,500" and insert "$18,750," so as to make the clause read:

Tenants Harbor, Me.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 12, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $18,750.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I understood the Senator to say that he would simply have the bill read at this time, and let all these amendments go over without taking action upon them.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; the understanding was that any amendments that it might be desired to have go over would be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT. In order to save time, I think the Senator had better allow the amendments to stand, and just have the Secretary read the bill, so that we can simply refer back to the amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. The formal reading of the bill has been dispensed with, and we are reading it now for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I ask that this amendment go over, and I should like to ask that all the amendments may go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then there is no use in reading the bill now. The formal reading was dispensed with.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the formal reading has been dispensed with, but the third reading has not been. What I thought we would do was to read the bill through, and when we reached amendments just ask to have them go over, and then all we would have to do would be to refer to the amendments.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is there any objection to this first amendment, for instance? The House item calls for $12,500, and we find that in order to complete the improvement it is necessary to have $18,750. The whole purpose is to make one job of it. Instead of going there and doing a part of the work, at a cost of $12,500, we want to complete the job for $18,750.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly; I know the object of the amendment. The amendment was made just the same as all the other amendments that the committee has put in. If it were a House provision, then we could discuss it; but if it is amended now we can not offer an amendment to it without reconsidering the action on it. I do not see that the Senator is going to gain any time by it. I would not ask that the bill be read again. I thought the Senator wanted to get the bill read to-night, let these amendments go over, and then simply take up the first amendment to-morrow morning and discuss it. It seems to me we would save time by doing that.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was hoping that we could dispose of certain of the amendments to which there would be no objection whatever as we went along and go through the bill to-night; but if the desire is——

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that what I want to do is to save time. There is no need of commencing discussing this one little amendment here. What I have to say I will say about them all. I do not expect to get any of the amendments changed; but in what I have to say upon the bill I should like to discuss the whole measure, and I thought to-night we could get through reading the bill very quickly, so that all we would have to do then would be to take up the first amendment to-morrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well; let us have the bill read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then if an amendment is objected to, or if it is desired to have it go over, let a Senator say so.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The SECRETARY. The committee proposes, on page 2, line 10, to strike out the word "Completing" and to insert "For maintenance, $2,000; completing," so as to read:

Gloucester, Beverly, Salem, Lynn, Plymouth, and Provincetown Harbors, Mystic, Malden, Weymouth Fore, and Weymouth Back Rivers, and Dorchester Bay and Neponset River, Mass.: For maintenance, $2,000; completing improvement of Weymouth Fore River, $183,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that amendment on lines 10 and 11. I do not exactly understand it. Some 12 harbors and rivers in my State are mentioned, and then come the words "For maintenance, $2,000." Is that supposed to be the entire sum necessary for all maintenance in all those harbors and rivers?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is all that the engineers reported as necessary to maintain them.

Mr. LODGE. That $2,000 covers them all?

Mr. FLETCHER. It covers them all; but some of them will not need any at all. By naming them all together the engineers will have the power to use this amount wherever it may be needed most, and the engineers reported to us that that was all that would be required to maintain all those improvements. Some of them will not need any, but there are probably one or two that will need the whole $2,000.

Mr. LODGE. As it was worded by the House, they named all those places first; and then there is one item reading "Completing improvement of Weymouth Fore River, $183,000." That is a very large and important improvement connected with those great yards there.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is quite an important project.

Mr. LODGE. But the House gave us nothing for those first harbors.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; quite true. They were simply lying there, but there was nothing given for them. The committee, upon consulting the engineers, were advised that some money might be required there for maintenance, and would be required for some of these projects, but that some of them would not need any, and a few might need a little; so that the entire amount was covered by the $2,000 for maintenance.

Mr. LODGE. They simply took a small sum so that they might have something if they happened to need any maintenance?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think there was a considerable sum already to the credit of those items.

Mr. LODGE. That may well be.

Mr. RANSDELL. I know that there was a considerable sum to the credit of most of these items. I do not remember positively as to that one, but there was quite a good sum to the credit of most of the items.

Mr. LODGE. It was almost impossible to get labor at that time, and I dare say that there was a sum there.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think the Senator will find that there is quite a good sum to the credit of these consolidated items.

Mr. LODGE. And I suppose that money can be used as a continuing appropriation?

Mr. RANSDELL. It certainly can. Under the provisions of the general law it remains to the credit of these items, when once appropriated, until by act of Congress it is returned to the Treasury.

Mr. LODGE. Until it is covered back to the Treasury?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. I only wanted to understand that. I have no doubt it is quite enough. The important improvement is the Weymouth Fore River, which I see is provided for by the House.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the principal item. The Senator will find, as suggested by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], that under Gloucester Harbor, Mass., for instance, there is $3,900 now available.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, my attention was diverted for a moment. Was the amendment calling for $183,000 acted upon?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the amendments, under the agreement, have gone over.

Mr. LODGE. All right.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from Florida if the amendment of the committee regarding the Hackensack River, on page 5, line 17, has been agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. That goes over. I do not see why we can not act on amendments that are not objected to.

Mr. KENYON. Let that amendment go over.

Mr. SMOOT. Why not agree now that we will begin to-morrow morning and take up the amendments, and then the bill need not be read through? We can consider the bill as read now, and all amendments to be passed over, and then to-morrow morning we can take up the bill immediately and begin with the first amendment and let whatever discussion is to be had on it take place then. There is no need of taking the time here to-night to read the bill or the amendments. I understand that an executive session is desired.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think we can conclude the reading of the bill in a very few minutes.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask that all the other amendments go over.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let the Secretary finish the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was continued, and was interrupted by.

Mr. LODGE. There appears to be some misunderstanding. Of course, this reading of the bill does not cut off amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. No; it does not cut off amendment and it does not agree to any amendments of the committee.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

STATEMENT OF BILLS INTRODUCED BY SENATOR SMOOT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am informed that the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] asked unanimous consent to insert some figures of some kind at a place where he indicated in my remarks. I understood the Senator to ask that the figures be placed in the RECORD. I have no objection to that. I do not know anything about the figures, and I do object to having them put in my remarks without knowing what they are. They can be placed in the RECORD in the regular order. The Senator's interruptions will appear in my remarks, but I do not know anything about the figures he desires to have put in the RECORD. I ask the Senator now to request that the figures be put in the RECORD, and not in my remarks.

Mr. McKELLAR. During the colloquy between the Senator from Utah and myself I had before me at the time a statement of the various bills that have been introduced by the Senator from Utah calling for appropriations. These bills aggregate $1,300,000,000, and then some more. In addition to that there is a bill proposing to appropriate 1,000,000 acres of land in Utah for those purposes.

The Senator from Utah had taken the Democratic majority very severely to task for extravagance in appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong in that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; he did.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the Senator is wrong.

Mr. McKELLAR. He called attention in his speech to this extravagance and called upon everybody to join in having greater economy. I called the attention of the Senator to the fact that he had asked for appropriations during the present session of Congress in an amount practically as large as all the appropriations for all the purposes of the Government before the war. At that time I offered to read them and the Senator said that they could go into the RECORD, and I understood that they could go in the RECORD right there. There seems to be a difference of opinion about it. If the Senator does not want his own acts to go into the RECORD in his speech, that is a matter for him; I am not going to insist on it; but I want the facts to be understood.

I am not criticizing the Senator for introducing these bills. The Senator is a very vigilant Senator; he is a very active Senator; and I have no objection to his introducing the bills. I am sure he did it in the line of his duty. As I said, I do not criticize him, but the only thing that I did criticize was that the Senator himself ought not to be critical of others in the Chamber when he himself had asked for what I believed to be larger appropriations for his State and for matters in which he was interested than any other Senator in the Chamber. My recollection is that there are about a dozen considerable appropriations for public buildings in his State and for various other purposes, for all of which, it seems to me, the Senator should be commended; but while he is to be commended for looking after the interests of his State, he ought not to criticize other people under the same circumstances, who have not offended quite so much, as it seems to me, in the matter of asking appropriations of the National Government.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator desire to have the statement inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. McKELLAR. I asked that. If he objects, and if he does not want the public to have the facts about it in his own speech, of course I am not going to insist that it go in at any particular place, but I ask unanimous consent that those figures may come in now as a part of my remarks. I have not them before me; I have sent for them; they are in the Reporter's office. I had no idea that there would be any trouble about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator SMOOT introduced the following bills, for the purpose and in the sums set opposite the number:

S. 84. Military academy, Utah	$2,000,000
S. 85. Government munition factory, Utah	1,250,000
S. 96. Granting to Utah 1,000,000 acres of land for public roads (not included).
S. 974. Public building at Price, Utah	50,000
S. 975. Public building at Park City, Utah	10,000
S. 976. Public building at Nephi, Utah	50,000
S. 977. Public building at Cedar City, Utah	50,000
S. 1613. Publishing names of Revolutionary soldiers	10,000
S. 2702. Bill to reimburse Susan Sanders	18,000
S. 5073. Road bill providing for the issuance of bonds to the amount of	1,000,000,000
S. 5447. Public building at Spanish Fork, Utah	35,000
S. 5449. Public building at Eureka, Utah	35,000
S. 5450. Vernal, Utah	50,000
S. 5480. Park City, Utah	75,000
S. 8096. Indians	12,690
Total	1,003,645,690

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that I never called attention to a single bill introduced by a single Democratic Senator. I called the attention of the Senate to the amount of actual appropriations made, not to bills introduced, and I appealed to all Senators and I appealed to Congress that from now on we should begin to save and to stop every appropriation it is possible to stop.

The Senator from Tennessee refers to the billion dollars for road building as an appropriation asked for. The Senator is unfair in such a reference. It does not do him justice.

As far as the appropriations for public buildings in my State are concerned, we have five public buildings in the whole State, and there were four or five where the amount appropriated was held up for some four or five years because of the fact that the appropriation was not large enough under the conditions to construct the building as planned by the Treasury Department. These were increases asked by the department.

I care nothing as to what bills may be entered into the RECORD that I have introduced. That is public property already. But the idea of asking to have inserted, without reading, into a Senator's speech some figures or a statement is something that has not happened before in the Senate that I am aware of. I have no objection at all to the Senator putting anything in the RECORD in his own speech. I never do object to that. I am perfectly willing to stand upon my record as to economy or any other public question that has been before the Senate since I have been a Member of this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator says that I am unfair. I think that is a little far-fetched in this matter, because I certainly tried to be entirely fair. I am not objecting to the Senator putting his remarks in my speech. The Senator declined to let me put this matter in at the time, and I asked then for consent to let them go in. If he did not want them given out to the Senate or spoken of in the Senate while I was on my feet and waiting to read them, he could decline to do that, but he stated that they might go in the RECORD. Of course I assumed that they could go in the RECORD then and there at that place, but if the Senator objects to it, very well; I will not ask that that be done.

Further than that, I am not criticizing the Senator about public buildings in Utah. If he introduced bills for that purpose, I have no doubt they needed them there; but what I did want to call attention to was that he was undertaking to show that the majority have been very extravagant, and if we had listened to all of the proposals of the Senator from Utah I think we would probably have been just a little over a billion dollars more extravagant than we have been.

The Senator mentioned the fact that I voted for the road bill, which I did; but that was for $200,000,000, and the road bill proposed by the Senator from Utah provided for an appropriation, or, rather, a guaranty, which is exactly the same, of just $1,000,000,000.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want the Senator from Tennessee to understand distinctly that I was not speaking in his time; and I have not injected anything into his speech. The Chair recognized me and I spoke in my own time, just the same as I am doing now.

The Senator knows that there is quite a difference between a guaranty of a bond and an appropriation. I introduced the bill referred to as a substitute for the $200,000,000 proposed to be appropriated, and the Government was not to advance the money except as upon the sale of bonds to be repaid by the States, which is quite a different proposition than an appropriation.

Mr. President, the Senator's interruption was not in answer to anything which I said. The Senator's interruption was in answer to what the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] said on the floor the day before.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; if the Senator will yield, it was purely in answer—and the record of his speech will show that it was purely in answer—to the charge that the majority had been extravagant.

Mr. SMOOT. I say to the Senator right now he can not find the word "majority" in the speech.

Mr. McKELLAR. You can not find the word "majority," but you can find the fact that you were charging those who were in power—and the majority in power—with extravagance; and that is what my interruption was aimed at.

Mr. SMOOT. Again I say that the Senator can not find in the speech that I mentioned the "administration" or "the party in power." Those words were not in the speech. I appealed, as I said, to all Senators, and not only to the Senators and to the Congress, but I appealed to the people of the country, to save, the only way by which we can meet the coming obligations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, February 14, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 13, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Thou, to whom our minds and hearts are known, cleanse us from selfishness, which is the root of all evil; that we may be wise, broad, generous, noble in all our intercourse with our fellow men; that the trend of our life may be toward the ideals in Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to address the House for not exceeding two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

PRINTING OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON REVENUE BILL.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon I asked a unanimous-consent order that 14,000 copies of the conference report on the revenue bill be printed in pamphlet form. The Speaker asked me if the conference report had been agreed to by the Senate. I said yes. I went over to the Senate just before I asked for that order to see whether the Senate had passed the revenue bill. The Senate had adjourned, but I met a distinguished Senator and asked him whether they had passed the conference report on the revenue bill, and he said yes, and that the Senate had then adjourned. I find that the Senate has not yet passed the revenue bill, but probably will do so to-day. Perhaps I should ask unanimous consent now to rescind that order until the Senate agrees to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to rescind the order referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15140. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I wish to have read by the Clerk a telegram that I have received.

The Clerk read as follows:

ABERDEEN, WASH., February 12.

Hon. ALBERT JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We urge upon you and all our Senators and Representatives the great necessity of congressional action, looking to the early deportation of all persons who surrendered first papers in order to avoid the draft. To such men the United States has no duty of protection. They unjustly hold positions and jobs to which soldiers, sailors, and other good Americans are entitled. Their continued presence in this country must have a very bad moral, social, and industrial influence on our people. Please deliver copy to other Senators and Representatives.

J. M. Bowes, L. L. Maley, A. Emerson Cross, Roy C. Sargent, C. E. Bartlett, M. D.; W. H. Tuckar, J. W. Young, Commissioner Second District; C. E. Ale, I. P. Callison, G. A. Solberg, John Tenwick, A. F. Douglas, R. H. Falconer, T. B. Darragh, W. G. Hopkins, John P. Morgan, J. J. Ryan, William Irvine, S. J. Stieglitz, E. F. Barker, T. J. Thomas, J. A. Johnson, Ed. R. West, Watson West, J. G. Kaufman, Charles Elmer, D. M. Bowes, R. Conrad, Emil Pfund, Tom H. Blyth, C. P. Blyth, Carl Beckehauer, John B. Orton, James A. Hood, Ed Dolan, S. K. Bowes, A. W. Barkley, W. J. Patterson, Frank Porter, J. B. Bridges, W. A. Rupp, J. W. Clark, John J. Carney, W. O. McCaw, E. A. Morck, John C. Lewis, P. A. Bertrand, A. M. Bendetson, J. S. Waugh, A. M. Middleton, E. C. Miller, C. M. Weatherwax, Neal Cooney, Chas. McDermott, L. G. Humbarger, J. J. Kaufman, W. J. Egerer, Dr. O. R. Austin, B. B. Averill, Dr. C. E. Chamberlain, Harry Phipps, T. B. Breuner, Dr. E. B. Riley, Tom Douglas, John Wilson, C. T. Scurry, L. P. Dudly, Wm. Donovan, T. J. Elson, F. G. Jones, Otis D. Hall.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that one person in every ten in the United States is not a citizen of the United States; in view of the fact that to avoid military service a great many of these aliens forfeited their declarations of intention to become citizens; and in view of the fact that neither the courts nor the people can in good faith accept such persons in the future as citizens, I sincerely hope that Congress will enact legislation looking to their deportation. If the countries from which these undesirables came refuse to receive them back, then we can refuse henceforth admission to all persons from those countries.

I hope the Rules Committee of the House will quickly authorize consideration of the immigration suspension bill recently reported from the committee of which I have the honor to be a member. I hope that a clause covering in these first-paper draft evaders can be added. I hope that the deportation of undesirable aliens will proceed rapidly. I hope the United States will make progress with the house cleaning that the war has demonstrated we need. We should be rid of all non-Americans among us who either can not or will not become citizens. We should be through with their languages. We should be through with the philosophies they bring, the revolutions they preach.

An ounce of Ben Franklin's maxims is worth a ton of Karl Marx's theories. Mr. Speaker, I am not a brother to the Japanese and the Hindu, nor am I a brother to the anarchist and the nihilist, nor can all of the internationalism that can be preached from all the high places of the world make me one.

Mr. Speaker, the United States is a Government of the people and by the people, but it must be a Government directed by its own people, and not a Government directed in any part whatsoever by those who come among us not to help sustain our Government but to wreck and tear it down. Nor can we keep among us, to be citizens at some future time, those who declined the call to shoulder arms alongside our own true citizens, both native and adopted.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be concluded within one hour, with the statement that those gentlemen who have asked for time and who have not yet been given time may have time extended to them liberally under the five-minute rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate be concluded in one hour, and that in the meantime those who have asked time in which to make speeches can extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, unless it is understood that the extension of remarks shall apply to the bill, and shall simply be an extension of the Members' actual remarks, I shall object.

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, I will not object if the last part of the request is not included in regard to extension of remarks. Others have spoken, quite a number of Members, and they have spoken on everything from socialism down, and if those who have not been privileged to speak and who have asked for time are permitted to print on anything they want to talk about, then I shall object to any extension at all.

Mr. KAHN. I tried to get the gentleman from Missouri yesterday.

Mr. DYER. I am not complaining. I was not able to be here after 6 o'clock.

Mr. KAHN. I said I would yield him time if he would come on the floor.

Mr. DYER. I was not able to be here after 6.

Mr. KAHN. It was before 6 that I sent for the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. It does not make any difference about that. The question is whether the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] is going to get unanimous consent.

Mr. DYER. If he will modify his request, I will not object.

Mr. DENT. In what way?

Mr. DYER. To confine it to closing general debate in an hour.

Mr. DENT. Then, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate be closed in one hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate be closed in one hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Judge SAUNDERS of Virginia, who was presiding over this committee, does not seem to be here. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] will please take the chair until Judge SAUNDERS gets here.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill, with Mr. BANKHEAD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the annual Army appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt at this time to speak of the wonderful victories won by the American soldiers in this war. Others have done that admirably on this floor during this debate. Suffice it to say that one of the brightest pages of American history has been written by the men of the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the National Army, cooperating together as the Army of the United States in the struggle now happily ended, I hope.

Americans will always be proud of the wonderful work accomplished by these soldiers, many of whom had been trained only six months before they entered the battle lines. I can remember, as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, when general officers would appear before us and tell us without cracking a smile that you can not make a soldier inside of three years, and that if you could take a man and train him for five years it would be very much better than if you took him for only three. But in this war the United States showed the world that under a conscription law we brought such material to the ranks and to our colors that in six months the soldier could go up against the shock troops of the German Emperor and lick them to a finish. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question in this connection—just for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. But the gentleman admits that while the boys can be trained and do the work it is necessary to have a certain number of men to keep up with the scientific side of it, such as the chemical and air service, liquid fire, gas, and so on?

Mr. KAHN. We must have commissioned officers, who must make military work a life study, and for our noncommissioned officers we must always have a fair number of trained enlisted men.

Mr. LAZARO. Yes; to keep up with the progress of military science.

Mr. KAHN. We must have a Regular Army force for the Philippine Islands, for Hawaii, for the Panama Canal Zone, for the Mexican border, for Alaska, and for those places where we have international agreements.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman think it makes men any better to draft them than it does if they volunteer?

Mr. KAHN. No; I do not think it makes men any better; but you can raise armies under the draft and you can not raise them by volunteering.

Mr. GORDON. Well, we raised a million by volunteer enlistments.

Mr. KAHN. That is a matter that we fought out long ago. This war was finished by the people of the United States inside of a year after our soldiers got on the field of battle. We would not have had more than a million men on the field of battle if we had depended on volunteers.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Has the gentleman found that it makes men any worse to draft them?

Mr. KAHN. That question answers itself. We had as good an Army and probably a better Army than we have ever had before at any time in our country's history.

Mr. LAZARO. Just one more question.

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield any more.

Mr. LAZARO. Relative to the draft.

Mr. KAHN. I can not yield just now. I want to make my statement then I will yield. The American soldier needs no apologies. Indeed he has covered himself with glory, and we are all proud of him. The men in France have accomplished work that seemed impossible at the time they started in. The English and the French had had three years' start, and yet in the fighting that went on during the last months of the war the Americans had the difficult positions in the line. And at that I by no means want to be understood as disparaging the work of our cobelligerents. That fight through the Argonne Forest alone has probably never been equaled by any troops of any country in the world. At Chateau-Thierry and at Cantigny the American soldier showed such valor and made such a terrific fight that it established a standard that all the men in our uniform in France felt that they would have to live up to, and they did live up to the standard that was set upon those early fields right to the end.

It is the wish of everybody in this country that the men shall be returned as speedily as possible. The question of shipping is a very important one in that regard. Even when we had the assistance of England and France in the matter of tonnage, we were able to take over at the very utmost 300,000 men a month. That was when our transportation facilities across the ocean were at their highest. England will have to transport the Canadians, the Australians, and the New Zealanders back to their homes. And there is no gainsaying the fact that she is putting back some of her ships into the usual channels of commerce. We can not have the same amount of English shipping for bringing our men back to this country that we had when we were taking them to the other side. And yet it is the hope of the Military Committee, and I believe of the War Department, that by the end of the next fiscal year practically all of our troops now in France will have been returned to this country.

Mr. MANN. By the end of the next fiscal year or by the end of this fiscal year?

Mr. KAHN. By the end of the next fiscal year. This bill provides the appropriations for the next fiscal year, and I feel confident that no effort will be spared to bring back the men from the European fronts by July 1, 1920. This bill appropriates for that force. It provides for their pay. This appropriation contemplates an average during the next fiscal year of 500,000 men. We have been told that we will have over a million men on the other side on the 1st of July of this year, and that gradually that number will be reduced, so that there will be an average of 500,000 men to pay during the year. Now, the bill provides for voluntary enlistments of 500,000 men, part of them for the Regular Army, part of them under the act of May 18, 1917; and I imagine that the War Department had in mind the very condition that arose in the Spanish-American War, when the men who had volunteered in the State organizations and were sent to the Philippines began to clamor to be returned to this country. After that war had been concluded there was an insurrection in the Philippines, as you all remember, and the maintenance of a temporary army there became a necessary matter. So Congress enacted a law allowing the formation of regiments of United States Volunteers. Many of the men who were then in the Philippines volunteered under that law, and decided to see the thing through before they returned to this country. I imagine that this law will have the effect of bringing to the colors voluntarily a great many men who will be content to remain on the other side to see this thing through. That, I take it, is the sole purpose of the temporary character of the legislation; namely, to bring back all those who want to come back to this country as speedily as possible, men who were drafted to go over there, men who were in the Regular Army and were sent over there, and those who volunteered to go over there; but the end that is sought by the provision in this bill is to let every man who wants to continue over there until definitive terms of peace are signed to remain there of his own volition.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. But the effect of this bill is not to do that. This bill, as I understand it, provides for a volunteer Army of 500,000 during the next fiscal year. Is that correct?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Yet on the gentleman's own statement the conscripted army will probably not be returned to the United States until the end of the next fiscal year, so that there will be in France or in Europe American soldiers who were conscripted during that fiscal year. There is no provision in this bill requiring the return of the conscripted soldiers nor requiring the making up of the army of occupation from volunteers. That is left entirely to the War Department.

Mr. KAHN. The act of June 15, 1917, has a provision that the soldiers must be returned from the European front four months after peace has been declared.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I want to answer the gentleman's question. That is in another law, a deficiency appropriation bill, as I recall. Under that provision the army of occupation will have to be brought back four months after definitive terms of peace have been declared.

It may be some time before these terms shall have been agreed upon, but I can not conceive that it is going to take a full year and a half, or practically a year and a half, before that eventuates. My idea is, and it is only a guess, that definitive terms of peace will be agreed upon within the next three months. That is what I believe. I think after that the boys will be brought home in large numbers, because that will be at a time when it is easiest to transport men across the ocean. I feel confident that this present Army will be out of existence practically within seven or eight months after the next fiscal year begins; that is, in the early part of 1920.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I do not wish to bother the gentleman, but I want to develop one point. Does the War Department say that an army of 500,000 men for an army of occupation is sufficient for the fiscal year?

Mr. KAHN. The War Department does not know how many men they will have in France in the beginning, but probably a million and a half, and thereafter——

Mr. McCULLOCH. What I want to know is, Does the War Department say that an army of 500,000 men is sufficient for the next fiscal year?

Mr. KAHN. I think so; they state that an average of 500,000 men is sufficient.

Mr. McCULLOCH. If an average of 500,000 men is sufficient, what is to prevent the War Department from developing the voluntary army and bringing the conscripted soldiers back to their homes?

Mr. KAHN. Because there is no law at present on the statute books authorizing them to get volunteers. We are trying to pass this law for that purpose.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The point I want to develop is why not provide for the discharge of the conscripted army, if an Army of 500,000 volunteers is sufficient? There is no provision in the bill that does that. You are leaving it to the War Department, and I would like to have the gentleman tell the House why there is not a provision for demobilization of the conscripted army in this bill if 500,000 volunteers are sufficient?

Mr. KAHN. Because that has been enacted into law in another bill, and there is no use in enacting it twice.

Mr. McCULLOCH. It may be a year and a half before the treaty of peace is signed. The Senate may take six months on it, and you are going to keep an army over there until the treaty of peace is signed. The reason I am asking the gentleman these questions is that I expect to offer an amendment dealing with that subject.

Mr. KAHN. I am giving the gentleman the best information I have, and I for one feel that the War Department will respond to the sentiment of the people of this country that the boys should be brought back as speedily as possible and will carry out the law.

Mr. McCULLOCH. The gentleman's own statement is that it is going to take until July, 1920, to do it.

Mr. KAHN. It may take that time, but it may be possible to do it within that time. Of course, the amount of shipping will have a great deal to do with it.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I propose to offer an amendment requiring it to be done within two months, or that they be discharged within two months. I do it on the gentleman's statement that an Army of 500,000 men will be sufficient.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, nobody can prevent the gentleman from offering his amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is it not a fact that, as far as the Military Committee is concerned, and to no one else, has the War Department made a statement as to the number of men that will be required to be kept in Europe until the peace treaty is signed; that we have no information on that?

Mr. KAHN. I stated on the floor yesterday that the President of the United States is in Europe negotiating with the plenipotentiaries of the various countries of the world for a peace treaty. Our country leaves to the Executive the making of peace agreements. The Senate, of course, has to ratify, but does any gentleman on this floor undertake to say now to what policy the President of the United States is going to try to commit his country in this present state of affairs? I am not in his confidence, and I do not think any man in this House is in his confidence. We have to hope for the best, and we hope and hope again that he will see to it that our boys are brought home as speedily as possible.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I want to suggest to the gentleman from California that while we are waiting and trying to find out what the administration wants in regard to bringing the boys home, they are dying like pigs from criminal carelessness of the War Department at Brest.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman realize that neither the President nor anyone else can tell us what the peace council is going to do; that that is a matter for the nations to agree upon?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is absolutely correct in that. Of course, we know in this matter the President is alone responsible until the treaty has been agreed upon. Then the Senate steps in and has to do its share of the work.

The purpose of this legislation, then, I say, is to give us a force of 500,000 men to do the work which will be necessary for our soldiers to do in the next fiscal year. The Committee on Military Affairs limited the force outside of the Regular Army to a one-year enlistment term. In the meantime we hope that we will be able to formulate an Army reorganization bill fixing a military policy for this country that we trust will stand for many years. There is no denying the fact that we were in no state of preparedness when this war began.

It has cost us billions of dollars and thousands—yes, tens of thousands—of lives. I sometimes feel that if we had been prepared we would never have been drawn into this war. It is cheaper to prepare in days of peace than to wait until an enemy defies your rights and practically makes war upon you. That is how we got into the war. I have stated that many a time on this floor. I did not vote for the war resolution primarily because we wanted to make the world safe for democracy or for humanity. That was an incidental consideration. I voted for the war because I wanted to protect American rights, and I am ready at any time, if need be, to fight for American rights. [Applause.] We can not maintain our position as a great nation unless we are prepared to do that. My opinion is that we can get along with a comparatively small Army if we will adopt the principle of universal training in our reorganization program. It is the most inexpensive system. Under a universal-training law we could train our young men when they arrive at the age of 18 years for a period of six months, from April to October. We showed in this war that a training of that length of time gives us a force that is effective, dependable, and valiant.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In just a moment, if my friend will permit me. Such a force would give us, in my humble opinion, a much more vigorous, a much more virile, race of young men. Reference was made in this debate yesterday, by one of the gentlemen, to the condition of the health of the young men of this country when they went to the cantonments. To my mind that is a serious matter, a very serious matter.

The statistics of the War Department show that out of a thousand young men who went to the training camps, young men who came from the homes and the firesides of this country, 271 out of 1,000 had venereal diseases. It was an appalling condition of affairs, and if that condition had continued for another 25 years it is probable that we would have become a nation of moral degenerates; physical incompetents, and cowards. This training will teach our young men to take care of themselves physically, if it does nothing else, and in that alone it will be worth every dollar that will be expended in the training. It will teach the young men of this country respect for law and order and constituted authority, and in that respect the training will make for a much better citizenship. It will teach the young men self-reliance, initiative, and how to cooperate in teamwork. It will do more than anything else to break down sectionalism in this country, and that is what we need mighty badly right in these United States. The men of the South do not begin to know the men of the North, and the men of the North do not begin to know the men of the South. They do not understand each others' difficulties, because they do not know them. By bringing the men from all sections together in the training camps they will come to know each other better than they ever have known each other in the history of the country. It will make for true democratization, because the rich man's son will be in the barracks with the poor man's son. They will begin to respect each others' views as they never can under present-day conditions. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to think, although the gentleman is much better posted with reference to military affairs than I am, that the time for the propaganda of universal military training is passing. I think that the experience that the people have had recently is such that we do not want any more militarism in this Nation of ours.

Mr. KAHN. I deny that universal training will work for militarism.

Mr. RUCKER. Let me say——

Mr. KAHN. Oh, I can not yield for a speech. I thought the gentleman wanted to ask a question.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman does not yield, I shall take my time after a while and pay my respects to his views.

Mr. KAHN. That is all right. The gentleman certainly has a right to do that; but I respectfully inform the gentleman that I have only a limited time——

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I shall not press the gentleman. The matter will not stand argument, of course.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to read two lines that bear on the subject the gentleman was being asked about, about bringing the soldiers home, from Secretary Baker?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit me to develop this matter a little further, I will be glad to yield to him. I want to say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER]—and I would like to yield to everyone—that there are a few matters that I desire to bring to the attention of the House at this time, and I only have a limited amount of time in which to do so. I deny that universal training will make for militarism. The gentleman probably believes that it will, and therein we differ.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, the gentleman said that he believed it would.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman said that he believed it would make for militarism. I do not believe it will. I believe it will give us a much more efficient citizenship. I believe, if anything, it will crush in this country the desire for militarism. I feel that the young men, when they get that training, will never feel that they want to go to war; but it will give them a training which will make for sturdier manhood in this country at all events, and it will be worth every dollar it will cost. And then, finally, there is no nation in the world that will ever want to try conclusions with us if we adopt such a policy. The trouble is and has been that we never have been prepared at any stage in our history for our wars. In this very war we were fortunate in that the French and English were able to hold the lines for us after we got into the war until we were able to get ready. That was our salvation. The enemy could not attack us, but countries do not generally wait until a nation prepares to defend itself; they make the attack when they think the time is opportune and the country to be attacked is least prepared. The safest way to prevent attack is to be able to repel it when it is made, in my honest opinion. I do not believe that this is the end of war, much as I should like to see it so. This war has made the entire world sick of war. But after every other great world war the people were heartily sick of war and hoped that there might never be another. We are simply passing through the same experiences that the other nations of the world have passed through at the end of every other great war. We hear a great deal of a league of nations these days. That is not a new proposition.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a little while, if the gentleman will contain himself.

When we read history, we find that leagues of the cities of Greece that called themselves republics were formed so as to be able to defend themselves. And yet they were constantly attacked and made war. Coming down through the ages we find this idea of nations consolidating or confederating to prevent war a matter of common discussion. In 1623 the first serious proposition of which we have a record of modern nations combining to defend themselves was submitted by one Emeric Crucé. His plan was very complete and it challenged the attention of the world at that time. Only two years later Grotius, the great writer on international law, issued a treatise on the same subject, and later on, in 1634—and, mark you, practically during all of that time the world had been at war—the Grand Design of Henry IV, as it was called, was promulgated. It was hoped that nations could be brought together in a great league to avoid war. Nothing came of these propositions, and yet man did not stop. He wanted to avoid war, and he still hoped on and toiled on for universal peace. In 1713 the Abbe St. Pierre, who had been one of the peace commissioners at Utrecht in Holland, wrote a treatise which was taken up seriously by all the countries and was finally practically adopted by the Holy Alliance in 1815. That proposition had one idea that appealed to the monarchs of Europe, and that probably is why they considered it seriously. It undertook to keep them on their thrones and proposed to protect them against revolutionists. The reigning family of every State in Europe was to be kept on the throne of that State by his neighbors in case there should be a revolution.

They tried to carry out such a league. It miserably failed. Now, I do not know what the ideas of the plenipotentiaries at the present time may be on that subject. We read conflicting reports in the newspapers. Now you see it, now you do not; it is one thing one day and another thing another day.

There has been no concrete project put forth, so far as I can recall, by the President. I feel that most of the people of this country hope that war can be avoided by these negotiations, but I have an abiding faith that the people of this country will not agree to any treaty of that kind that will deprive this country of one jot or tittle or iota of its own sovereignty. [Applause.] I imagine that the people of this country will not agree to allow their sons to go to Turkey, for instance, to police that country and make the people of that nation behave themselves. [Applause.] As I take it, the American people want their sons to come back from Europe as speedily as possible [applause], and I take it for granted that the people of this country will not want to send another army into Europe if they can possibly avoid it.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman think that the provision in the peace treaty which is being strongly urged over there prohibiting compulsory military service in the nations would infringe upon the sovereignty of this or any other nation?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I frankly confess the proposition of compulsory military service is one that I do not know much about, so far as it is being treated over there. I know that England, which is reputed to have made the suggestion, had to come to compulsory military service in order to get men to fight this war. England's life was at stake, and she knew that she could only save her life by compelling men to serve in her army.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to interrupt the gentleman at an improper place, but the Secretary of War, with respect to bringing the Army back, used these words:

> Our Army is still 2,000,000 men abroad. We are bringing them home as rapidly as we can. The War Department is giving more attention to getting men home than to any other subject. Every available means of transportation is being acquired and used to its capacity.

Mr. MANN. That is a newspaper article——

Mr. POU. It is the statement the Secretary of War made before the Rules Committee. That statement is entirely gratuitous.

Mr. KAHN. He made a similar statement or a statement to that effect before the Committee on Military Affairs. Of course, the matter of tonnage is a very serious one, and upon the solution of that problem will depend in the final analysis our ability to bring the men back.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is a very patriotic Member of this House and is one of the best posted Members we have. Now, the gentleman was for war against Germany and was for the draft, therefore this war is our war as well as theirs. Now, what I would like to have the gentleman tell us is this. The armistice has been signed, but the peace treaty has not been signed. Now, what should we do over there until the peace treaty is signed?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I can only give my opinion, and my opinion——

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman stated the boys ought to come back as speedily as possible, and I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. What should we do over there, what is our duty over there until the peace treaty is signed?

Mr. KAHN. Frankly, I want to say to my friend from Louisiana that the newspaper dispatches which we see day after day do not seem to give much information. As I said at the outset, one day they tell us one thing and another day another thing. Now, I imagine that it should be the duty of this country at least to wait until the treaty of peace is signed before we finally determine our course, because during the period of the armistice we never can tell what is going to happen. We see in the papers now that Germany seems, through her commanders, to have expressed herself to the effect that she never will submit to a humiliating peace. Now, I do not know what that means. If it means they intend to resume fighting, I imagine it will be a small matter to lick them thoroughly and march our boys into Berlin. [Applause.]

But nobody can tell whether they will try it or not until they are put right to the test or the issue is raised. And, therefore, just as a policeman is necessary to guard the peace in our cities, we have got to have a police force in the shape of soldiers, who will be ready to take care of eventualities until the treaty of peace, at least, is signed.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman would not think much of a policeman who would arrest a man and say to him on the way to the jail, "You go and report to the jailer, and I will go home."

Mr. KAHN. That is not the question.

Mr. LAZARO. I was trying to get the gentleman's idea of what our duty is over there.

Mr. HARDY. Is not the gentleman trying to carry the idea that it is not best to hang up the hose until the fire is out, as was said by a gentleman the other day?

Mr. KAHN. I think so. I think, with as large a force as we have on the other side, there is not much danger. With the Germans deprived of their flying machines and their submarines, I doubt whether they are a serious menace. I take it for granted that Germany will not be much of a menace if she tries to violate the armistice. And yet it would be folly to remove all your force until definitive terms of peace are decided upon.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I understood the gentleman from California to state awhile ago that according to his idea of military training he would have the young men of the country go to camp and train for six months when they became 18 years of age.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly.

Mr. DENISON. Do I understand that is the gentleman's idea of military training, just for the six months?

Mr. KAHN. That is all. I should not have him called again until his country should call him to come to its defense. I do not think it would be necessary to call him again, because I believe that in the six months' training he would receive he would be so prepared that only a few weeks' training would be required to get him into the field in case of an attack upon us. In the meantime our Regular Army, such as we may have, could hold the line until those few weeks of training could be given to the boys who had passed through the military training school.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman, however, does favor a provision that would put these men after they are trained into the reserve.

Mr. KAHN. I would prefer that.

Mr. GORDON. Like the German system. That is all there is of it.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman talks about the German system all the time. Now, I am not wedded to the German system. The gentleman knows——

Mr. GORDON. You have always advocated it. I do not know whether you favor it or not.

Mr. KAHN. I have advocated universal training for a period of six months, whereas the German system takes him for two full years. [Applause.]

Mr. RUCKER. Would the gentleman require every able-bodied young man over 18 years of age to take that training? Will the gentleman express himself on that?

Mr. KAHN. There would have to be some exceptions made, of course. The details of the system would have to be worked out, but I am trying to lay down the broad lines in this discussion, and hope sometime, if I am able to take it up, to discuss it even to the minutest detail.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman at this time is not prepared to give us an idea of what per cent of the 18-year-old men would be taken?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Committee on Military Affairs has any knowledge of the manner in which the English or French Army is being demobilized, in comparison to our Army over there?

Mr. KAHN. I have only this information: Gen. March, in one of his statements to the newspaper men, said that we were demobilizing about twice as fast as England. That is the only information I have on the subject.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. The same statement was made in one of the hearings at the War Department one morning when the gentleman was not present, as I recall.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] that the German military system has always required a two-year absolute service with the colors, and no man in this country has at any time advocated a system of that kind. The French system of compulsory training, as it was in force at the beginning of this war, required the French soldier to be three years with the colors, because Germany had so far outstripped France in population that the French people found it was necessary to hold their boys for three years in order to equalize their army with the German Army, where they were held for two years. But in this country the people who advocate military training do not intend to hold boys any length of time in our Regular Army. They intend to train them just for six months, and then turn them back into the body of the citizenship of the Republic.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman from California, Mr. Chairman, is making a most interesting speech, as he always does, and it would be still more interesting if he were allowed to proceed. We would like to see the gentleman conclude his remarks without further interruption.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter entirely with the gentleman from California.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Will the gentleman yield just at that point?

Mr. KAHN. I yield.

Mr. ALEXANDER. The gentleman, if I understand his position, is in favor of universal military training not to exceed a period of six months.

Mr. KAHN. Absolutely.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Now, is it your view that after that is done the boy shall be returned to civil life without any obligation of military service resting upon him?

Mr. KAHN. My own preference would be that they should be put into the reserves; but not a necessary part of the program at all, because I feel that if we ever get into war again we could bring them all back into the Army by a selective-draft law. So that is not necessarily a part of the program. But the training, in my judgment, would be invaluable to the young men of this country.

I was speaking of the league of nations, I think, when I was interrupted, and I believe I was saying, as I recall, that the American people, in my judgment, will never agree to a plan that will keep our soldiers if we have to act as a mandatory—or "mandatary," I believe, is the correct word—for any country on earth.

The American people will not consent to allow their youths to go to such a country in order to maintain the peace there or in order to maintain order in such a country or in order to protect the rights of all the other powers signatory to such a league. I said awhile ago that the people of this country want their boys to come home as speedily as possible, and if the proposed league of nations shall contain any terms that are contrary to those two propositions I imagine it will have very hard sledding in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, there are a few propositions in this bill that are matters of administration. The committee has seen fit to write into the proposed legislation a provision to remove all service chevrons. We have all seen a great many men walking our streets with silver chevrons and with gold chevrons. We hear a great deal of talk in this country about "democracy." All the soldiers of the Republic, whether they were fortunate enough to go to France or whether they performed their duty in this country, should be treated alike. [Applause.]

I am told that in some of the demobilizing camps the young men who come back from the other side will not salute an officer who has the silver chevrons. And yet those officers were compelled to stay in this country. There were thousands of officers who were clamoring for an opportunity to go to the other side. Their petitions, their requests, were turned down by the War Department. The department said, "You can perform the best work for this country right in this country," and it refused to send them across.

Mr. LAZARO. Based on the selective draft.

Mr. KAHN. Well, a soldier always has to go where duty calls him. That is the fact and has been the fact as long as there have been organized armies. A soldier is expected to perform the duty that he is ordered to perform.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted to continue for 10 minutes out of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask that the first paragraph be read, and then let the gentleman be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state, in reference to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], that by uniform convention here the time has been fixed. It can not be extended by unanimous consent in the committee. The Chair will state further that, if the committee chooses to do it, the present occupant of the chair has never seen any way it can be stopped except by objection. What is the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. KAHN. If the committee will indulge me for 10 minutes, I will ask unanimous consent to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. It would be in contravention of the practice of the committee, but the Chair will put the request.

Mr. KAHN. I will withdraw that and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I suggest that the gentleman wait until the Clerk reads the first paragraph.

Mr. DYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. To demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the bill is the regular order. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1920.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman want to proceed for 10 minutes?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Ask for that.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. It may be information that the Members of the House have not had, but it is a fact that in this war only 40 per cent of the Regular Army officers who graduated from West Point were allowed to go to the other side. Sixty per cent were kept in this country. The latter are the men who organized and conducted the training camps at the different cantonments. They are the men who carried on the training at the National Guard camps. They performed an invaluable service to their country. Without the training given by those officers, the training they were able to give, I doubt if we would have been able to raise the armies that were necessary to win this war, and we certainly could not have done it in the remarkably short time that it took.

Of course, those officers all have to wear silver chevrons at this time. The great mass of the people of this country do not realize the condition, and they probably feel, every time they see a man with silver chevrons, that he was a "slacker" who tried to find a safety station for himself in this country. That, in my judgment, should not be permitted. [Applause.]

I imagine that every soldier and every officer—and there were practically 4,000,000 of them, all told—was willing to do his full duty to his country; that he was in very fact a soldier, and was ready to go wherever duty called.

Mr. LUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. In a moment.

Mr. LUNN. On this very subject.

Mr. KAHN. In a moment. Some were more fortunate than the rest. Some were detailed and transported to the other side. There is no question about their valor, their bravery, or the splendid manner in which they performed their duty. But I feel confident that if it were put up to those men themselves as to whether they want to be distinguished in that way from all their fellows, who would have been glad to go over to the other side but were compelled to continue here by the War Department, they would unhesitatingly say, "No, take all the chevrons off except the wound chevron."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield first to the gentleman from New York, from my committee [Mr. LUNN].

Mr. LUNN. I wanted to ask my colleague on the committee whether he would favor a change of the bill that would provide for the removal of the silver chevrons but would still allow those in the foreign service to wear the gold chevrons?

Mr. KAHN. I think that would be discriminating, for it would show that the men who did not have them on were not on the other side, and it would lead, in my humble opinion, to the same misunderstanding.

Mr. LUNN. May I ask my colleague a further question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. LUNN. Every one of us, when we meet a man, will naturally want to know whether he was on the other side. That is the first question we will ask him.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman is privileged to ask that question, and the soldier is privileged to reply.

Mr. LUNN. But under the present regulation we would have to ask those men from the other side, those who have been in France, to take off that gold chevron.

Mr. KAHN. The Congress of the United States, by making a uniform law that would apply to all soldiers of the Republic, would probably meet the approval of the soldiers themselves and the approval of the country.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state whether he believes this should be carried to the extent of even refusing special decorations or medals of honor to men who have distinguished themselves?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no, no. I believe that men who have signally distinguished themselves and who have been granted medals of honor by their country should be allowed to wear them, just as the men who fought in other wars now wear the congressional medal of honor and the other decorations which this country has heretofore been giving. I would not interfere with a single decoration.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Referring to the question which the gentleman from California has discussed so well—as to the disbandment of our Army and the size of the Army that we will maintain—I see in the RECORD of yesterday that under date of February 11, only three days ago, the number of enlisted men in the United States was 767,000 in the Army, in addition to the men in Europe. Now, the Chief of Staff, as I understand it, has given out the statement to the public press for information that this Army in this country is now down to its irreducible minimum. How are we going to reduce this Army, in line with what the gentleman has stated to us here, if it is the opinion of the War Department that at present we must maintain over 700,000 men in this country?

Mr. KAHN. As I understand the situation it is practically this: It takes a great deal longer to demobilize than it ever took before. It seems that when men are sent to the demobilization camps now they undergo a thorough physical examination to see whether a man has any disease that can be determined. I imagine that is done so that in the future men will not be importuned to come to the Government and to Congress for the passage of pension bills, with affidavits supporting the claim that they were taken with disease while they were in the service of this country. I am told that this medical examination of large units of soldiers takes three or four weeks time. Of course these men who are in the camps in this country have all, or nearly all, been ordered demoblized, and the demobilization is going forward just as quickly as the examinations can be made.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I should like to ask the gentleman, in his long experience, if he believes it requires 700,000 men to perform the demobilization for the small number of men, 100,000 a month, who are going out of our Army?

Mr. KAHN. That is a matter of military administration that I know nothing about.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Has the gentleman information that these men are being kept in idleness, being kept here apparently to maintain somebody in positions, rather than have the Army demobilized?

Mr. KAHN. I have heard such statements, but I want to say frankly to my colleage on the committee that I have been so very busy with different matters conected with my congressional duties that I personally have not been able to investigate this.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. For the information of the gentleman from Nebraska and the House, Gen. McIntyre this morning denies that newspaper statement absolutely. The demobilization is going forward.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] called at my office this morning, and while he was at my office I called up Gen. McIntyre's office, and they said that that was absolutely news to them, and that the demobilization is going on just as rapidly as they possibly can carry it on.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman from California permit me to give a little light to the gentleman from Nebraska? Will he yield a quarter of a second?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, half a second.

Mr. KING. I can give the gentleman from Nebraska some evidence as to what is being done with the soldiers in these camps. Here is a letter from a man at Camp MacArthur, Tex., which I just received this morning, which says:

> We're still marking time and doing nothing to amount to anything. From present indications it will be late spring before I get away, even if I don't get sent to another camp. There is a lot of protest about keeping the men here. They took away their rifles about six weeks ago, and since that the men have been doing regular labor work. They have been wrecking a lot of the buildings, filling ditches and trenches, and at present are building a road for the county.

That is what they are doing with these men in these camps—farmers whose services are needed at home.

Mr. RUCKER. They are putting them on public works.

Mr. KAHN. I only yielded to the gentleman from Illinois for half a minute.

Mr. KING. I thank the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to ask the indulgence of the House because of the rather brusque reply that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] made to me, in which he designated the inquiry that I put to him as asinine. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman did not make an inquiry. He made a statement that I was advocating the German system, and what I said is what I consider that statement.

Mr. GORDON. I am going to prove that statement. That is the reason I have taken the floor. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, the distinguishing feature of the German system is that it puts men in reserve, subject absolutely to the control of the central authority, to be called out by that authority. Now, that and not the period of training, which is purely a matter of policy and opinion, is the feature that distinguishes a military system. The gentleman's political party in the last campaign in its national platform declared in favor of a military system under absolute Federal control. Of course, at that time everybody supposed that the militia was not under the absolute control of Federal authority, either President or Congress, or both, but a good many people have changed their minds upon that subject. But that has nothing to do with the question of whether or not the gentleman from California is now and always has been in favor of the vital principle of the German system of military training. I undertake to say this without meaning any disrespect to the gentleman from California, and I do not know why the gentleman should be ashamed of the German military system——

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will permit, the German system requires that a man shall be trained in the army for at least two years. The system advocated here is simply that a man shall be trained six months and then go back to the body of the citizenship.

Mr. GORDON. In the reserve, however.

Mr. KAHN. I said, in answering a question that was put to me by one of my colleagues, that personally I believed it would be best to put them into the reserve. But that that was a matter of detail that could be settled when the proposition is up for consideration.

Mr. GORDON. Exactly; that is correct. I do not want to be placed in the position of misrepresenting the attitude of the gentleman. That was also the attitude of the Republican Party in its last platform, except that it refused to indorse compulsory military service. I do not know why there should be so much mystery about this. The training of a man and putting him in the reserve, to be called out on the touch of a button, is the German system. If you want a military system that will respond quickly to one central head, you can't find a better one than the German system, and it has been proved to be so in this war.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. What does the gentleman say of the Swiss system?

Mr. GORDON. I have stated that it is the United States militia system supplemented by compulsory service under Federal authority.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Are they not required under the Swiss system to come out on the touch of a button?

Mr. GORDON. No, sir; let the gentleman go and read the Swiss system. Anybody interested in knowing what the Swiss system is will find in a Senate document, introduced by Ex-Senator Blair Lee, of Maryland, that information. They will find that the Swiss system was copied verbatim from our State militia system. The Swiss system only trains them for six weeks per year.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Swiss system is not compulsory?

Mr. GORDON. I say that it is.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Is not that the very essence, the basic principle, of the Swiss system, and does not that differentiate it from our so-called militia system?

Mr. GORDON. It is not a law which allows a man to touch a button and call out a million population and throw them on their neighbors.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I beg to differ with the gentleman; it does allow it.

Mr. GORDON. It does not, but I have not time to debate that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It did do it during this war twice.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, the Swiss Army never departed over their own borders since the European war commenced.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. No; but they mobilized the army twice.

Mr. GORDON. Of course they mobilized, but they never went out of Switzerland. There is precisely the distinction.

Now, if gentlemen will let me make a few remarks. This is the point I desired to make, and it really is a vital question in this country. If the people of the United States want a complete military system, a thorough military system, one that will do the business, then, of course, they will adopt the German system. I do not want to be understood as in any way discrediting the system, because I do think that this war has demonstrated that it is the most efficient, as well as the most dangerous, military system that has ever been devised by the brain or purpose of man. At the outbreak of the European war the standing army of the German Imperial Government was only 700,000 men, but I noticed that they called forth and threw onto France about 2,000,000 men. That is what was done. That is what makes the system dangerous. You train the whole population to arms, so that some fellow in the General Staff goes and touches a button and calls them out and sends them out of the country to attack some nation. That is the thing that the American people sought to prevent when they adopted the Federal Constitution. They thought they had made that thing impossible.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Would not that be impossible under our Constitution from the fact that Congress has to authorize it before the button can be pushed?

Mr. GORDON. That is a matter of opinion. The framers of the Constitution thought that they had placed it beyond the power of Congress to do anything of that kind, but we found out when we got into war that Congress was merely a rubber stamp and that the Constitution does not afford much protection to the people. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I have made my meaning plain in reference to the matter. I want to disclaim any intention of impugning the motives of the gentleman from California in the opinion which he has always entertained and advocated so long as I have been a Member of the House.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to withdraw the remark that I made a while ago.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman can do as he likes about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In case of an invasion of the United States, or a threatened invasion, or a threatened attack on the United States, would not it be a good thing to have our system so prepared that we could touch a button and bring out 2,000,000 men instanter, already trained?

Mr. GORDON. I never have thought so and do not think so now. If the gentleman thinks that, he is entitled to his opinion. The trouble is that if you have 2,000,000 men trained and ready to be called out at the touch of a button the danger is that they will be used for some purpose outside of the United States. That is a thing that the framers of the Constitution sought to guard against.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. Of course, we were not prepared at all when the war was declared. Does the gentleman mean to convey the impression that the Members of Congress acted as rubber stamps when they declared war against Germany?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no; we had not then reached the rubber-stamp point. That did not come for several months after we got into the war. It was several months, I will say to the gentleman in reply to his question, and during that time this Congress repeatedly in both branches voted down this press and speech-muzzling provision of the espionage law, and by roll call it was beaten by 44 majority in the House, and it was also voted down in the Senate, and now if a man criticizes it they threaten to put him in the penitentiary. Congress afterwards surrendered, did it not?

Mr. LAZARO. I do not agree with that.

Mr. GORDON. Of course it did, and the gentleman knows it.

Mr. LAZARO. Congress did not propose to let men at home shoot the boys on the firing line in the back.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; of course that is the excuse that was given. You can call it whatever you please, but it was a rank violation of our Constitution, and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] said yesterday, it ought to be repealed; it is a disgrace to this country to have it remain on the statute books even for the period of this war.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the gentleman rightly? Is he in favor of the present Swiss system?

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman has not heard me say anything on that subject, except to refer to it in a general way.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understood the gentleman was defending it, and I understood that he was in favor of it.

Mr. GORDON. I will say this to the gentleman, that if I had to make a choice as between the German system and the Swiss system I should take the Swiss system, because it is more nearly consistent with the theory of our Government, its institutions, and the Constitution. I do not know but that I would agree to vote for the Swiss system if we could adopt their constitutional provision which prohibits any standing army "under Federal control." This bellowing around here about universal training under absolute Federal control means, if it means anything, the German system and nothing else. I am opposed to that, and would accept the Swiss system as the alternative. I do not believe, and I think this war has demonstrated, that you do not have to train men two or three years in order to have them fight. The American troops in Europe did as good fighting as any troops that were there. We can fairly say that. They delivered the decisive blow that won this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. The truth about it is that you do not need any such time as has been talked about. According to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] only 40 per cent of the officers of the Regular Army were sent to France, and I understand that only 40 per cent of the men of the Regular Army were sent to France, which would not indicate that they were very hard up for men who were well trained. Just why they put in a lot of men who had not been trained more than a few months and left hundreds of thousands of men here in the Regular Army who had been in the service from almost the beginning of the war I have never seen explained. Perhaps it is not the time to ask for that explanation, but I certainly would like to have it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think the gentleman wants to make a mistake.

Mr. GORDON. I do not.

Mr. KAHN. The first few divisions that went over were all made up of Regular Army men. The Rainbow Division was made up of National Guard men. Then there was the New England Division, made up of National Guard men. Of course, the units of the Regular Army divisions were rounded out or filled up by men who were only recently inducted into the Army; but I think if the gentleman will look up the statistics he will find that the Regular Army organizations were the ones to go over to the other side first.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is partly right about that. As a matter of fact my understanding is that they used these draft divisions solely as replacement troops. The five leading divisions which did the greatest fighting in this war, which suffered the most casualties, were the three National Guard divisions and the two Regular Army divisions, and those divisions, as fast as they suffered casualties, were replaced largely from the National Army divisions that were over there.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman can have in mind the Seventy-ninth Division, which was a draft division, and which was trained over here at Camp Meade. That was wholly made up of draft men from Pennsylvania and Maryland and suffered more than 2,000 casualties in the course of the war.

Mr. GORDON. My understanding is that the large number of casualties among the Pennsylvania troops was among the National Guard troops. But I will ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. CRAGO] about that.

Mr. CRAGO. The First Division of the Regular Army suffered the greatest losses, and the Twenty-eighth Division, National Guard, was second.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that after the first three divisions of the Regular Army had been sent to France, or about that time, the Regular Army was enormously expanded in skeleton form and filled up by recruits and later by drafted men, so that within a very short time at least 70 per cent of the personnel in the Regular Army was absolutely raw and untrained, and had had much less training than the National Guard troops, and for that reason the National Guard troops were sent over first.

Mr. GORDON. I will say to the gentleman, not to prolong the controversy, that my recollection is wholly different from his. My recollection is they began by voluntary enlistments at the breaking out of the war and continued until they stopped in December, 1917, because they were out of supplies. They closed the enlistments in the Regular Army in December, 1917, and they had at that time something like four or five hundred thousand men, and only a small part of those, less than one-half, were sent across.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has referred to the proposed league of nations and has undertaken to demonstrate that it will not work because it was tried back in the seventeenth century, or proposed at that time. Just on that subject I will say to the gentleman, as he himself hinted, those leagues which were proposed in those days were designed solely and entirely for the purpose of perpetuating the monarchies then existing. Of course, there were no republics in the world at that time, and the thrones of some of those monarchs were getting a little bit shaky, and these propositions were solely and entirely for the purpose of maintaining them upon their thrones.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I will.

Mr. KAHN. I think the gentleman misunderstood what I said about it. I said the project had been tried many hundreds of years; that I hoped they would be able to work out something that would prevent war, but if this country was to be obligated to a proposition to send our boys into foreign lands to maintain the peace, if the league proposed that we should surrender our sovereignty, then the American people would have none of it. That is as far as I went.

Mr. GORDON. I agree with the gentleman, but I understood him to observe and got the impression from his remarks that he had not very much confidence in it. Now, I do say if this Congress of Nations in Paris would adopt the suggestion of the English delegates and adopt a treaty prohibiting compulsory military service on the part of all nations who are parties to it, that it would be a very long step in the direction of maintaining permanent peace.

Mr. KAHN. How about navies?

Mr. GORDON. Well, I think they ought to limit those, too, as far as that is concerned, but navies are not as dangerous as armies. The trouble about it is that this war was caused entirely by the fact that the nations in Europe, on the Continent of Europe, for years maintained their systems represented by the German system of compulsory military service. If they had not had that system of compulsion that they have maintained even since the organization of the German Empire under the central authority this war would never have occurred, and I do not believe there is an intelligent individual in this House or elsewhere who does not believe that is absolutely true. When you train your whole population to arms and put them under control of one man who can touch a button and call them out and throw them against any nation, I say to you you have a dangerous situation if it is put under the supreme authority of the man who is at the head of that army, who is the king, the monarch, or the kaiser, or anyone else with that power. Now, he is always advised by his general staff, of course, that remains in the background and is not in any way responsible, and whenever they get ready to attack somebody they can always find an excuse and pretext to do it, and one of the strongest incentives to do that is to train your entire population to arms and make them subject to the orders of your central authority.

Under the German and other European systems, it is true, it does not put men in the Army until they are 20 years old; my colleague proposes to put them in at 18. Of course that would permit the drafting into the military service of minors and to impose upon them the whole military burden, and, of course, I do not think that any self-respecting nation ought to do that in war or in peace. Of course we have a million boys in this country of 18 and a million at 19 and a million at 20 years of age.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I do.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman mean to infer that we are not a self-respecting Nation?

Mr. FIELDS. Places all the responsibility upon the boys.

Mr. GORDON. Congress passed a law, finally, permitting the military authorities to draft by classes or ages into service all ages between 18 and 45 and, of course, that does confer upon the War Department the authority to impose the whole military obligation upon minors. Rome, when she was on her last legs, resorted to drafting aliens into her military service, but she never got so low, until she disappeared from the face of the earth, never got to the point where it was seriously proposed to impose the whole military service of the Nation upon minors. I hope this Nation will never do a thing of that kind. The truth is military service is exceedingly strenuous and my own notion is it ought not to be imposed upon anybody until they are 20 years of age. I believe there is the danger of a breakdown——

Mr. EMERSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORDON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman has now had 20 minutes and another gentleman 10 minutes since we commenced to read the bill. There are a lot of items in the bill that gentlemen want to consider. This has no relation to the bill. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] whether he proposes to give the House full opportunity to discuss the items of the bill after we get through with the buncombe talk about these general things?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that I hope we can get down to the discussion of the bill. I do not understand that there are any questions of compulsory military training in this bill at all. But I have found that when you first start to read a bill it is best to let the general talk go on for a while.

Mr. MANN. I do not care how much talk there is if it is not shut off later. I have seen committees allow a great deal of talk about general matters in order to prevent talking on a bill.

Mr. DENT. There is no such intention as that so far as this bill is concerned.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, has the request been put?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. I will say to the members of the committee that when I was interrupted it was my intention to discuss one or two matters which I had not reached when my last extension of time expired, and I will endeavor to bring my remarks to a close at the earliest possible moment.

We were recently regaled by some very interesting newspaper comment inaugurated by an extended speech made in another body of the Congress of the United States upon the subject of the articles of war under which punitive justice in our Army has been administered, and I commend to the consideration of the House all of the information upon that subject which is contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I believe the New York World's write-up has been inserted in the RECORD under extension of remarks at the instance of Senator LODGE, and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate made an extended speech on that subject. And the purport and effect of the contention, which, I am prepared to admit, was that instead of trying our men in the Army according to even military law the Articles of War are primarily designed, apparently, to carry out the arbitrary will of the military commanders, instead of trying our soldiers according to regular rules. That is unquestionably true, and I will say for the information of the committee that in 1916, when it was proposed to revise these Articles of War and they were pending in the House and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, I was a member of the subcommittee which was investigating and endeavoring to pull some of the fangs that are now being complained of out of those Articles of War. And you may recall that Gen. Crowder became impatient over the fact—impatient because our committee did not agree with his notions about what the Articles of War ought to contain—and he induced the President of the United States to use his influence to take that bill away from our committee. It was fastened onto the Army appropriation bill over in the United States Senate and passed through Congress as a rider. That is actually what occurred.

I simply want to remind the Members of the House of that incident and refer to the barbarities that have been perpetrated under those Articles of War, as again illustrating that it is unwise to legislate upon general subjects by riders to appropriation bills. Some 273,000 soldiers have been tried under these Articles of War and some 16,000 of them are now confined in Federal penitentiaries as the result of trials by general courts-martial.

Mr. SIEGEL. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that 370,000 cases have been tried and 22,000 men are now confined, and the Secretary of War is getting up a list of those names, the offenses, and the sentences.

Mr. GORDON. Yes. I am very much gratified indeed to know that the American Bar Association is interesting itself in this matter. It thus far appears to have the sympathy and cooperation of the Secretary of War. I hope this investigation will be carried through to a finish and that the Articles of War will be revised and amended in accordance with modern humane principles. [Applause.]

Much has been said upon the subject of conscientious objectors, Mr. Chairman, and I was just wondering whether it would not be worth while to insert in the RECORD something in regard to that. I will ask leave to extend my remarks for the purpose of inserting this and other documents in the RECORD, the general order under which conscientious objectors have been recognized under the laws of the United States—General Order No. 28.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the document indicated.

Mr. MANN. Do the other documents relate to the same subject?

Mr. GORDON. There is just one relating to conscientious objectors.

Mr. MANN. That and other articles. I do not know what they are.

Mr. GORDON. It relates to this subject—the subject of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman mean the others are orders from the War Department? Of course, there is no objection to the——

Mr. GORDON. Not orders from the War Department.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman is going to insert a lot of propaganda such as we receive in our mail, I shall certainly object. I would like to know what it is the gentleman intends to insert. I have no objection to the insertion of such as he has specified. Therefore I would like the gentleman to be specific in his request.

Mr. GORDON. I will reassure the gentleman by saying that I intend to insert nothing in addition to this order No. 28 that is not written by myself.

Mr. TILSON. Is that an order of the War Department?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. What is the nature of the matter the gentleman is going to insert? Does the order justify those conscientious objectors?

Mr. GORDON. I will insert the order in the RECORD to enable Members of Congress to determine whether or not it justifies what has been done. I do not intend to comment on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the document referred to:

[G. O. 28.]

[GENERAL ORDER No. 28.]

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 23, 1918.

The following Executive order is published to the Army for the information and guidance of all concerned:

EXECUTIVE ORDER.

1. By virtue of authority contained in section 4 of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," whereby it is provided—

"And nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organizations; but no person so exempted shall be exempted from service in any capacity that the President shall declare to be noncombatant."

I hereby declare that the following military service is noncombatant service:

(a) Service in the Medical Corps wherever performed. This includes service in the sanitary detachments attached to combatant units at the front; service in the divisional sanitary trains composed of ambulance companies and field hospital companies, on the line of communications, at the base in France, and with the troops and at hospitals in the United States; also the service of supply and repair in the Medical Department.

(b) Any service in the Quartermaster Corps in the United States may be treated as noncombatant. Also, in rear of zone of operations, service in the following: Stevedore companies, labor companies, remount depots, veterinary hospitals, supply depots, bakery companies, the subsistence service, the bathing service, the laundry service, the salvage service, the clothing-renovation service, the shoe repair service, the transportation repair service, and motor-truck companies.

(c) Any Engineer service in the United States may be treated as noncombatant service. Also, in rear of zone of operations, service as follows: Railroad building, operation, and repair; road building and repair; construction of rear-line fortifications, auxiliary defenses, etc.; construction of docks, wharves, storehouses, and of such cantonments as may be built by the Corps of Engineers; topographical work; camouflage; map reproduction; supply-depot service; repair service; hydraulic service; and forestry service.

2. Persons ordered to report for military service under the above act who have (a) been certified by their local boards to be members of a religious sect or organization as defined in section 4 of said act; or (b) who object to participating in war because of conscientious scruples but have failed to receive certificates as members of a religious sect or organization from their local board will be assigned to noncombatant military service as defined in paragraph 1 to the extent that such persons are able to accept service as aforesaid without violation of the religious or other conscientious scruples by them in good faith entertained. Upon the promulgation of this order it shall be the duty of each division, camp, or post commander, through a tactful and considerate officer, to present to all such persons the provisions hereof with adequate explanation of the character of noncombatant service herein defined, and upon such explanations to secure acceptances of assignment to the several kinds of noncombatant service above enumerated; and whenever any person is assigned to noncombatant service by reason of his religious or other conscientious scruples he shall be given a certificate stating the assignment and reason therefor, and such certificate shall thereafter be respected as preventing the transfer of such persons from such noncombatant to combatant service by any division, camp, post, or other commander under whom said person may thereafter be called to serve, but such certificate shall not prevent the assignment of such person to some other form of noncombatant service with his own consent. So far as may be found feasible by each division, camp, or post commander, future assignments of such persons to noncombatant military service will be restricted to the several detachments and units of the Medical Department in the absence of a request for assignment to some other branch of noncombatant service as defined in paragraph 1 hereof.

3. On the 1st day of April, and thereafter monthly, each division, camp, or post commander shall report to The Adjutant General of the Army, for the information of the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War, the names of all persons under their respective commands who profess religious or other conscientious scruples as above described and who have been unwilling to accept, by reason of such scruples, assignment to noncombatant military service as above defined, and as to each such person so reported a brief, comprehensive statement as to the nature of the objection to the acceptance of such noncombatant military service entertained. The Secretary of War will from time to time classify the persons so reported and give further directions as to the disposition of them. Pending such directions from the Secretary of War, all such persons not accepting assignment to noncombatant service shall be segregated as far as practicable and placed under the command of a specially qualified officer of tact and judgment, who will be instructed to impose no punitive hardship of any kind upon them, but not to allow their objections to be made the basis of any favor or consideration beyond exemption from actual military service which is not extended to any other soldier in the service of the United States.

4. With a view to maintaining discipline it is pointed out that the discretion of courts-martial, so far as any shall be ordered to deal with the cases of persons who fail or refuse to comply with lawful orders by reason of alleged religious or other conscientious scruples, should be exercised, if feasible, so as to secure uniformity of penalties in the imposition of sentences under Articles of War 64 and 65 for the willful disobedience of a lawful order or command. It will be recognized that sentences imposed by such courts-martial, when not otherwise described by law, shall prescribe confinement in the United States Disciplinary Barracks or elsewhere, as the Secretary of War or the reviewing authority may direct, but not in a penitentiary; but this shall not apply to the cases of men who desert either before reporting for duty to the military authorities or subsequently thereto.

5. The Secretary of War will review the sentences and findings of courts-martial heretofore held of persons who come within any of the classes herein described, and bring to the attention of the President for remedy, if any be needed, sentences and judgments found at variance with the provisions hereof.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 20 March, 1918.

[383.2, A. G. O.]

By order of the Secretary of War:

PEYTON C. MARCH,
Major General, Acting Chief of Staff.

Official:

H. P. MCCAIN,
The Adjutant General.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I propose to speak the truth, just as I see it. I will tell you something. This committee has brought out a bill here which I will discuss in a moment. I can not agree to this thing. I am for an Army of 175,000 men.

I want to tell you, gentlemen, that I do not take any stock in all this severe and unjust criticism of the War Department and of the Army officials. Gentlemen on this floor have stated that these officers of the Army here, these bureaus, would not treat them with proper respect. I am sorry that any man has been treated disrespectfully. For my part, they have always shown the utmost courtesy to me, and I believe that they intend to do that to all Members of Congress.

Again, I do not take any stock in this wholesale criticism of the Army across the sea. Gen. Pershing, according to what the Secretary of War told our committee, had carte blanche in Europe, even to the ordering of shoes; and when you gentlemen criticize in vicious fashion all that is going on there and all that has gone on there, by so doing you have laid the blame on Gen. Pershing. I believe he has conducted this Army in Europe in the proper manner. [Applause.]

Further, gentlemen, I have looked over the signs of the zodiac and I have observed that the season is now propitious for altering this bill. I think the number in the proposed Army should be cut down from 500,000 to 175,000 men, with a proper number of officers to officer that Army. [Applause.]

We have raised an Army of nearly 4,000,000 men. We sent over 2,000,000 across the sea. These men that were called from the rank and file of the great body of the people went across the sea after having received only two or three months' training, and they fought as soldiers never fought before, and this, too, among people whose language they did not understand. Yet, after our soldiers have won this great war, after we have emptied the Treasury, after we have placed $30,000,000,000 of debt upon the American taxpayers, it is now proposed to float what they call a victory bond issue about April 9 of $7,000,000,000, and one for $5,000,000,000 will have to come a few months later, and one for $4,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 will be bound to come in 1920. And yet this Congress sits around, after having won this great war, talking about an Army of half a million men! You might just as well have a billion as half a million. It makes no difference in the final analysis.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, this bill provides, as I understand it, a feature to the effect that you can even go out and conscript these men, because it comes under the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] may indorse that kind of business; but all this talk about compulsory training and compulsory service in this country in time of peace is rot, and the majority of the people will drive any party out of Congress that enacts such a thing as that in this country. [Applause.] We have won this war, and are called on now to raise the greatest Army that the United States has ever had in peace times.

Another alteration that should be made in this bill is to repeal what was done under the act to coordinate and harmonize the departments and other establishments of the Government. I will tell you what they did. They built up a General Staff, and the President delegated, as he ought to have done as the Commander in Chief and as President of this Republic, the authority to a body of expert military men; but they built up a General Staff that is a duplicate and replica of this hated and contemptible German system, and that staff has divested the Secretary of War of any real constituted authority which he formerly possessed. They absolutely took the virility out of the office of The Adjutant General and took the marbles away from The Adjutant General, until he is now in reality nothing but a chief clerk down there. [Laughter.]

Other bureaus have been treated in the same way. This bill proposes to take away part of that authority, but it fails to do it in whole. The General Staff is riding yet, because we have got the word "organizations" in here. My information is that you ought to cut the guts out of it and hang them up in the sun to dry. [Laughter.] We can not afford to let the General Staff have all that authority.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield. I want to say further that this bill has not only placed upon the American taxpayer, as the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] wanted the House to believe, a burden of over $1,000,000,000, because he claimed that that would pay all of our Army in France and it would maintain this Army in our country here at a strength of 500,000, but it has placed on the American taxpayer a burden nearly twice as big, because every man who has any sense knows that this Army costs $1,600 per man, and we would be called upon to pay a deficiency of nearly $1,000,000,000 more.

There is no use to fool ourselves. The American Congress has spent all of this money and is going ahead now when the taxpayers of this country are groaning and limping under the load that has been placed on them. I want to say that Congress is not to blame for all of it. The administration of this Republic is to blame for a great deal of it, some men from every department. Here is the Secretary of the Interior coming down and proposing to go out over this country and buy up a lot of old cut-over pine land, worth about six bits an acre, and pay the owners of that land valuable prices, and have the American Congress be fool enough to go out and dig up the stumps, and put up fine houses and waterworks and electric lights in them out of the American taxpayers' money. They are full of such schemes as that to take the money away from the taxpayers of this country. Are we, as true, honest representatives of the masses of the people of this country, going to stand and submit to it? Some men propose to donate to our soldiers a year's salary. Every kind of waste! We passed a law, and I voted for it, to fix up the wheat farmers, to pay $2.26 a bushel for their wheat. You are called upon now to put up $1,250,000,000 to make that good. You are called on to pay $750,000,000 more, after the railroad control has spent the $500,000,000 that you gave them. You are asked to pay out $750,000,000 more to go out and raise the salaries of everybody in this country to demoralize labor. You are called upon for every kind of a scheme to go out and grab money, with the Treasury already empty. And now you have only one place where we can call a halt. They are not going to halt any of these other things that I am talking about. You can call a halt on the Military Establishment in this country. I want my country protected. This bill has a provision in it which does that. If we will take the vitals out of that 500,000-men proposition, and cut it down to 175,000 enlisted volunteer men, with the proper officers, you have in this bill a provision for the National Guard, with about $32,000,000 worth of equipment, that we already have, and the balance in cash, making $50,000,000 to build up a strong National Guard in every State of this Nation. My friends, there is the hope of this Republic. With the National Guard, the States will have a proper force to quell riots and disturbances in any section of the State. Then there will be these 175,000 volunteers in the United States Army. By the way, according to my conception of this volunteer enlistment plan we can not get any more than that, but under those two provisions you will have a sufficient Army to guard properly the coast and the insular possessions and to be sent to quell riots and strikes in this Republic. What more should we want? Is the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] afraid that some one is going to come over and take us overnight? Why should we need 500,000 men after we have just won the great war, and the President over yonder around the peace table proposing a league that will prevent war? Why should 500,000 men, with 29,000 or 30,000 officers with shoulder straps be living off the people?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I can not yield. What is the object of this? Do you believe that the American Government is in danger? Do you believe that 500,000 soldiers and 30,000 officers could save us? With the experience that we have had, do not you know that an army could be raised in a very short while if we should be suddenly attacked from any quarter? Do not you know that it has been demonstrated that all this talk is nonsense, that a great many of the officers said you had to have a great standing army in order to be prepared to fight a war successfully? All of that idea has passed away like the mists before the sun. Yet we have it urgently insisted that this Government should fasten upon itself now this great ball and chain to drag along and hold us down. In the name of heaven, let us get those soldiers that are now in the Army back home in civil pursuits. [Applause.] Let us have these men back on the farms and in the workshops. Across the seas there are still two millions of men. We may need some there, but the greater part of that great number of two millions of men should be transported back across the Atlantic Ocean and put out into the fields. Old Bossy and old Muley are calling for them. The bobwhites out in the cornfield are calling for the boys back on the farm, and here we are proposing to keep two millions of men standing almost in idleness, drawing salaries, and wasting money, and to have 500,000 more in this country. What are the people going to think about it? I will tell you what they are going to think. They are going to talk in 1920. They are going to talk at the ballot box. They are going to talk where it counts. The ballot is a mighty voice, and some of you in distress may tremble when you hear it in 1920.

With all of the talk and all the attempt to stir up trouble in this country and all the attacks that have been made against our Government, we may need some men to protect our country against bolshevism.

Some of them the other day hollered up in New York "to hell with the United States." We need some force to handle such bunches as that; but, my friends, do we need 500,000? Is there a man on this floor who believes that you can go out and get by volunteers 510,000 men for a standing Army? Of course, we can get the officers. There will be no trouble about that. That is why I think this army is wanted, to give a big crowd of officers a job for the taxpayers to maintain. Is Congress, representing 100,000,000 people from all stratas of society, going to proceed on the ground that this great Military Establishment after the war, after peace is virtually in sight, after the league of nations has been agreed to according to this morning's paper, and is virtually a success—is Congress going to say that we need 500,000 men? Are they going to call on the American taxpayers to sustain this heavy burden, to sustain this enormous force, while our country is in peace? We need the rehabilitation of industry and agriculture in this country. You need to bring these men back from the Army to do that. You can not raise corn, wheat, cotton, sheep, cows, and hogs without bringing these men back from the Army. You can not do it by the Agricultural Department sending out bulletins. You have got to do it by brawn and muscle, and it is going to be no 44 hours a week either. The farmers of this country do not believe that this Government should fasten upon the taxpayers of the Nation a great standing Army, and the large taxpayers have reached the point where they do not believe it. There is not a taxpayer within the Government to-day that is not feeling the pinch, and who is not calling a halt on the wild extravagance and waste of money. I want to say that I have voted against every raise of salary that has been proposed in this Congress. I have voted against expenditures which I did not think essential. I voted for the naval appropriation bill because I thought it was needed to protect the country under all the circumstances and because the President of the United States urged it as essential to his success at the peace congress. But no man has come forward to bring any evidence here that we need a great standing Army in a time of peace. No man has brought forth anything to prove that you can raise that army by voluntary enlistment. The ideals for which our Republic stands and the sentiments of the plain people will not tolerate this big army in times of peace. [Applause.]

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LARSEN. We have read one paragraph of the bill and I would like to know how long it is possible for Members to go on discussing matters that have nothing to do with that paragraph in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Just as long as the members of the committee give unanimous consent that they may proceed.

Mr. LARSEN. I want to say that I shall have to object to any further discussion outside of the matters contained in the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Georgia. General debate on this bill was closed with the statement by the chairman that Members desiring further discussion might get time under the five-minute rule. I do not want to take any time myself, but I know of several gentlemen who do desire time and want to speak.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to say that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] has given notice that he will object unless debate is confined to the paragraph under consideration.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman from Georgia insists that debate be on the paragraph, I will take my seat as soon as the point of order is sustained. After I have consumed five minutes I am going to ask for more time, and if objection is made I will take my seat, but until we reach that bridge I will proceed in order, or, perhaps, out of order.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken the floor simply to say a word in behalf of the Regular Army. All of us are interested, of course, in the National Army; all of us are interested in the National Guard, especially in those units which come from our States and our communities. But nobody feels particularly called upon to say anything for the Regular Army, and proceeding, perhaps, on the same theory that Kipling proceeded when he was bragging on Fuzzy Wuzzy, because, as he said, "he 'asn't any papers of his own," I want to call attention to some facts touching the Regular Army as a fighting machine.

There were 30 combat divisions which engaged in fighting in France and sustained battle losses. Seven were from the Regular Army, 11 from the National Guard, and 12 from the National Army. The total killed in battle was 27,762 in the 30 combat divisions. The 7 Regular Army divisions out of the 30 lost 8,281 killed, or 30 per cent of the total. The total losses—that is to say, the killed, died of wounds, missing, and captured, not counting the other casualties—the total battle casualties of the 30 divisions was 56,592. The 7 Regular Army divisions out of the 30 lost 17,768, or 31 per cent of the total battle casualties.

Now, if we take the average battle losses which I have just enumerated—the killed, died of wounds, missing, and captured—the combat divisions engaged in the battles lost, on the average, 1,886 to the division. That average with the Regular Army divisions was 2,538.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Was that owing to the inferior leadership?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I do not think so. I am willing the gentleman from Arkansas should take that opinion.

Mr. CARAWAY. I expressed no opinion. I asked the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I presumed the gentleman entertained the opinion or he would not have asked the question to find out if I disagreed with him.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think it is fair, though.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman thinks that is a fair inference. Then the Rainbow Division and the Wisconsin Division—the Thirty-second—and the Twenty-eighth Divisions, which have won immortal glory in this war, are properly subject to the criticism that they were badly led. I do not believe that. There were 23 divisions which sustained battle losses, as I have defined that term, exceeding 1,000 to the division. The average losses in such divisions was 2,354. The average loss in such Regular Army divisions was 3,464. The highest loss—killed in battle—of any regiment in the Army was in the Ninth Infantry, 547. The next was the Twenty-eighth Infantry, 517. The next, the Eighteenth Infantry, 512, and the next, the Twenty-third Infantry, 504, all Regulars.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, so that when it comes to the bloody business of the battle field the Regular Army has measured up not only to the expectations of its friends, but to the best traditions of the American Army. [Applause.] The total losses of the First Division—Regulars—highest of any in the Army, were 5,248. The Forty-second—the Rainbow Division—the division in which all of us take especial and thoroughly justifiable pride, because it was composed of National Guard units from 27 States, and every section of our country was represented, lost 2,950. The Thirty-second Division, made up, as I recall, from Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Michigan and possibly Iowa, the division in which I think everyone in the country who has real American blood in his veins takes great pride, lost 3,213; the Twenty-sixth Division, 2,868.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman from Mississippi seemed to rather resent a moment ago that I asked about the leadership.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I did not resent it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it his inference, then, from citing the figures, that the Regular Army was superior to the National Guard and the National Army in courage, skill, and willingness to go into battle?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is not.

Mr. CARAWAY. Then what is the gentleman proving by his figures, other than possibly the opportunity to engage in battle?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, it is very likely that I am wasting the time of the House, but I will state to my friend that I am thoroughly enjoying the pastime. [Laughter.] I put it in here because all of us naturally and properly sing the praises of the National Guard and the National Army divisions and point to their sacrifices on the battle field. I took the floor simply to show that in this bleeding business the Regular Army was doing its full share and shedding its full proportion of very precious American blood; that is all. As to the reasons for it, they are perfectly apparent. They were sent over there first. In October, 1917, for instance, the first division went into the trenches. The National Guard units, which were considered the best trained, were sent over first and were put into battle first, and therefore they suffered the greatest losses. At Cantigny, where the marines won their first fame, the newspapers had little to say of the other units. Gen. Pershing, however, in his report of that battle, says this:

On April 26 the First Division had gone into the line in the Montdidier salient on the Picardy battle front. Tactics had been suddenly revolutionized to those of open warfare, and our men, confident of the results of their training, were eager for the test. On the morning of May 28 this division attacked the commanding German position in its front, taking with splendid dash the town of Cantigny and all other objectives, which were organized and held steadfastly against vicious counterattacks and galling artillery fire. Although local, this brilliant action had an electrical effect, as it demonstrated our fighting qualities under extreme battle conditions, and also that the enemy's troops were not altogether invincible.

Who can accurately measure the full significance of this last sentence? For four long and unhappy years the German hosts had been victorious. In the previous March drive they had utterly crushed the English Fifth Army and came perilously near winning the war. All of us remember Haig's Macedonian cry. Who, then, I repeat, can estimate the tremendous value of this long prayed for demonstration that "the enemy's troops were not altogether invincible"?

When this campaign had ended the following general order was issued by the commanding general, which tells its own story:

General Orders, No. 112.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
France, July 9, 1918.

The commander in chief desires to record in the General Orders of the American Expeditionary Forces his appreciation of the splendid courage, service, and sacrifice of the officers and men of the First and Second Divisions of these forces during the recent operations in which these divisions participated and in which the enemy was checked by the resolute defense and counteroffense of the allied armies.

These divisions submitted fully for the first time to all the drastic tests of modern warfare, bore themselves always with fine valor; their cooperation with their brothers in arms of the unified command was prompt and efficient and brought from their allied comrades many expressions of sincere appreciation. The conduct of these brave men and that of their fallen comrades who made the supreme sacrifice has established a standard of service and prestige which every division of the American Expeditionary Forces will strive to emulate and preserve.

This order will be read to all organizations at the first assembly formation after its receipt.

By command of Gen. Pershing:

JAMES W. MCANDREW,
Chief of Staff.

Official:

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Adjutant General.

On the 15th of July the other great offensive opened; the offensive which all Germany hoped and believed would win the war. Alas for their hopes. It was indeed to be the last offensive, but its failure was to spell their downfall. Here, too, the Regulars did their full share of the fighting. Reading again from Gen. Pershing's report:

The Third Division was holding the bank of the Marne from the bend east of the mouth of the Surmelin to the west of Mezy, opposite Chateau-Thierry, where a large force of German infantry sought to force a passage under support of powerful artillery concentrations and under cover of smoke screens. A single regiment of the Third wrote one of the most brilliant pages in our military annals on this occasion. It prevented the crossing at certain points on its front, while on either flank the Germans, who had gained a footing, pressed forward. Our men, firing in three directions, met the German attacks with counterattacks at critical points and succeeded in throwing two German divisions into complete confusion, capturing 600 prisoners.

I believe every State in this Union shared in the sorrow and the glory of what has come to be known generally as the victory of Chateau-Thierry.

I believe I am within the record when I say that the great drive of July 15 was stopped by the soldiers of this Republic and the tide of battle turned by them which was the forerunner of Germany's collapse.

The following general order is a fitting acknowledgment of the praise due to all our soldiers alike. It will be observed that the divisions named are four Regular and four National Guard:

General Orders, No. 143.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
France, August 28, 1918.

(For official circulation only.)

It fills me with pride to record in general orders a tribute to the service and achievements of the First and Third Corps, comprising the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Twenty-sixth, Twenty-eighth, Thirty-second, and Forty-second Divisions of the American Expeditionary Forces.

You came to the battle field at the crucial hour of the allied cause. For almost four years the most formidable army the world had as yet seen had pressed its invasion of France and stood threatening at its capital. At no time had that army been more powerful or menacing than when, on July 15, it struck again to destroy in one great battle the brave men opposed to it and to enforce its brutal will upon the world and civilization.

Three days later, in conjunction with our allies, you counterattacked. The allied armies gained a brilliant victory that marks the turning point of the war. You did more than give our brave allies the support to which as a nation our faith was pledged; you proved that our altruism, or pacific spirit, our sense of justice have not blunted our virility or our courage. You have shown that American initiative and energy are as fit for the test of war as for the pursuits of peace. You have justly won the unstinted praise of our allies and the eternal gratitude of our countrymen.

We have paid for our success in the lives of many of our brave comrades. We shall cherish their memory always and claim for our history and literature their bravery, achievement, and sacrifice.

This order will be read to all organizations at the first assembly formation after its receipt.

JOHN J. PERSHING,
General, Commander in Chief.

Official:

ROBERT C. DAVIS,
Adjutant General.

There is glory enough for all surely in the record that was made. From the 18th of July to November 11 our boys in all branches of the service showed the mettle of their pasture. After this splendid division, the first to enter the trenches in October, 1917, had finished its great work with Cantigny, Chateau-Thierry, Belleau Wood, and Argonne upon its banners, the following general order shows how well the sequel held together:

General Orders, No. 201.

GENERAL HEADQUARTERS,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
France, November 10, 1918.

(For official circulation only.)

1. The commander in chief desires to make of record in the General Orders of the American Expeditionary Forces his extreme satisfaction with the conduct of the officers and soldiers of the First Division in its advance west of the Meuse between October 4 and 11, 1918. During this period the division gained a distance of 7 kilometers over a country which presented not only remarkable facilities for enemy defense, but also great difficulties of terrain for the operation of our troops.

2. The division met with resistance from elements of eight hostile divisions, most of which were first-class troops, and some of which were completely rested. The enemy chose to defend its position to the death, and the fighting was always of the most desperate kind. Throughout the operations the officers and men of the division displayed the highest type of courage, fortitude, and self-sacrificing devotion to duty. In addition to many enemy killed, the division captured 1,407 of the enemy, 13 77-mm. field guns, 10 trench mortars, and numerous machine guns and stores.

3. The success of the division in driving a deep advance into the enemy's territory enabled an assault to be made on the left by the neighboring division against the northeastern portion of the Forest of Argonne and enabled the First Division to advance to the right and outflank the enemy's position in front of the division on that flank.

4. The commander in chief has noted in this division a special pride of service and a high state of morale, never broken by hardship nor battle.

5. This order will be read to all organizations at the first assembly formation after its receipt. [14790–A–306.]

Mr. Chairman, all of us have indulged in criticism of the Regular Army. I have listened to many gentlemen do it, and some gentlemen have listened to me do it. I have no doubt that I shall continue to listen to criticisms of the Regular Army, and if the House will be patient with me in times to come, I have no doubt that they will hear me indulge in similar criticisms. The conduct of the Regular Army, Mr. Chairman, in this war has been such, however, that, in my opinion, every American can take pride in.

The Regular Army men who went over to the other side, as I have shown, did their duty fully on the battle field. A great majority—62 per cent—of the officers remained over here; and for what purpose? In order to train the other boys from civil life who were necessary to go. Did they perform that service well? I think the answer to that question came at Belleau Woods, at Chateau-Thierry, and along that long and bloody trail which lead thence to Sedan. They trained the boys fresh from the walks of civil life and demonstrated that whatever our lack in guns and cannon, we were in the main essential element of preparedness—the spirit of the people and the quality of our boys—the best-prepared Nation in the world. To my mind they also demonstrated that there is no necessity hereafter to maintain as a permanent Military Establishment any considerable number of troops above that which was authorized before the war. They showed that they could train the boys in civil life to be the match of any soldiers beneath the sun.

Mr. Chairman, I felt that in justice to the Regular Army some one ought to present these facts to the House and possibly to the country, because whatever else may be said of them, they have demonstrated that they are first-class fighting men.

I append the following, taken from the Official Bulletin, so that Members may see the exact losses in all the divisions which had the luck, and it was only luck, to get into action:

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we are sitting to-day under our constitutional power to make appropriations for the maintenance of our Army, and I must confess that I approached the deliberations upon this measure with an open mind. I am one of those who have consistently supported the administration and the Government in the prosecution of the war and all measures that I deemed essential or vital for the successful and victorious termination of that cause. But hostilities have ceased; the war is to all intents and purposes ended, and we now, gentlemen, sit here as the representatives of the American people to meet the propositions of rehabilitation and reconstruction. Since the armistice was signed and the war ceased each one of us, I am sure, in his own heart and intellect, has begun to take stock of what his course and procedure should be in the future with reference to these bills which should come before this House. As has been pointed out here time and time again, and you gentlemen all know, the war has necessitated the piling upon the Federal Treasury a stupendous and almost unimaginable burden that has to be paid out of the labor, toil, and sacrifices of the American people.

I am not making complaint about the appropriations which were made to carry out and win this war. I voted for them, and I have no apologies to make; but we are now, gentlemen, approaching—and are, as a matter of fact—upon a status of peace, and here comes the Committee on Military Affairs of the House and presents an appropriation providing for the expenditure of $1,916,000,000 for the purpose of maintaining the Army during the next fiscal year. It contains a provision, gentlemen, authorizing, in all events and under all circumstances, a standing army of over 25,000 officers and 500,000 men. Now, we are responsible to the people. I am not standing here to-day in the capacity of a diplomat; I am not standing here in this forum in the exercise of any judicial power; I am here as a representative of 200,000 hard-working, honest, toiling Alabama people, just like you are the representative of such in your district. What do you think their feeling and their judgment are upon this new proposal and absolute departure from the traditional policy of our people for a large standing army in time of peace?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know that there are now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means and in expectation it will be shortly reported to the House a bill which proposes to increase our bonds from $20,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000, with an additional issue of $10,000,000,000 of notes?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am aware of that, and every Member of this House is aware of it; but, gentlemen, the pay day has got to come in the future. [Applause.] Yet here we are on both sides of this aisle voting daily huge sums of money for all sorts of purposes, and I particularly desire to take this opportunity to admonish my Democratic brethren that the responsibility is primarily upon us to cut out these unnecessary expenditures, because we are the party in power and the country properly is going to charge us with any undue and wanton extravagance in these expenditures of the people's money. Yes; that situation has to be confronted, and that is the reason why I for one—and I do not claim any particular virtue upon this situation—propose to call a halt. I have to be guided, gentlemen, by this monitor here in my own individual bosom, by what little intellect God has given me as to my individual course and procedure; that is the reason, after the war ended, as I have said, as far as I am concerned I am going to see to it by my vote that our appropriations are limited to our governmental necessities. [Applause.] I voted against the appropriation giving $100,000,000 away to feed the Germans and Austrians, Russians and Turks and Bolsheviki over yonder, and my vote on that question did not meet with the approval of the majority of this House, but it met the approval of my judgment and conscience and will meet the approval of my constituents. I voted against the naval appropriation because it authorized the spending of $750,000,000 of the people's money right at a time when we are hoping and believing that the peace treaty at Paris will provide for the disarmament of nations.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I hope that my colleague from Alabama will not refuse to vote the money to pay the necessary number of troops before demobilization.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Oh, yes; that is the attitude my colleague undertakes to put us in. They want me hog-tied, as it were, for fear of criticism if I vote against a big standing Army. You can say, "Yes; he voted against an appropriation to pay boys still in the service——"

Mr. DENT. I think that is a fact.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What I want to do is to cut out the Army of half a million men in time of peace and have in the bill the necessary sums to pay and provide for the boys still left in the present Army. But that does not prevent us on the floor of this House from making an honest effort to cut down the expenditures provided in the bill, if it can be done. Now, what is the necessity of a standing Army? The proposed Army, as my friend from California [Mr. KAHN] called it, I believe, yesterday, a "stop-gap" Army of 500,000 men. I asked the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], a man of fine common sense and high patriotism, to give some reason for the necessity for this proposition, and what was his answer? I am sure it was the best that he could make. It was that they tell us—that is, the General Staff—that, in view of our colonial possessions, our insular possessions, and our long seacoast to defend, that, in their judgment, that is the minimum amount we should rely upon. Why? With what new menace are we confronted in reference to the safety of our insular possessions? Why, one regiment is a sufficient constabulary for the Philippine Islands. What war cloud is brewing over the Panama Canal Zone or Porto Rico or any other of our possessions that did not exist prior to our entrance into this war? Gentlemen, this is but the entering wedge for a permanent policy of a large standing Army that the people of the United States have opposed [applause] and to which conviction and sentiment I am unalterably opposed in time of peace. Why, it is admitted by members of the Committee on Military Affairs that the Chief of Staff, when he had a hearing on this proposition, advocated the adoption of this policy providing for a minimum Army of half a million men as a permanent peace policy, and when that proposition met with criticism in the committee finally Mr. KAHN suggested, or undertook to provide, a rider that would only provide for an emergency Army for the fiscal year of 1919–20. What is the necessity for keeping 500,000 boys in the Army if we can get them home this year? The boys in the Army from my district went to the war to lick Germany. They have done their part in finishing that job, and now they want to go home to their own people and get back into the useful and peaceful trades and callings.

We are told that our Army is being brought back home as fast as ships can be procured to bring them.

I trust that that is so. I pray to God that those in authority may exercise the same zeal, energy, and industry in getting them back as they did in getting them over there to the firing line when we sent them over there. [Applause.] I believe in good faith that they are making every effort to do so. I have scores of letters every day from my district from mothers, fathers, wives, and children asking when their soldier will get back. The farms all over my district are vacant because the boys are over there in the Army. I think we ought to put some legislation on this bill, gentlemen, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War immediately to discharge from the service certain classes of men. [Applause.] I propose at the opportune time to offer an amendment authorizing and directing him, as soon as possible under the machinery provided, to discharge from the service those who have dependents at home, all of those for whom the Government of the United States pay the family allowance at home, and those engaged in agriculture. I do not know what support that proposition will get. But, gentlemen, we are proposing here an Army of, as I say, 500,000 men, without any necessity for its existence having been satisfactorily stated by the members of the committee.

I am sure that the explanation that has been offered by the committee on this proposition does not meet with your honest convictions upon the ground of governmental necessity. If we are going to spend money extravagantly, let us spend it for some useful and serviceable purpose. Why should we have half a million men in camps throughout the country in absolute idleness, doing nothing except to conform to regimen and military discipline, producing nothing, but consuming all the time, under constant daily burdens of the taxpayers and the people of the United States? I say, if we are going to spend the money, let us spend it for some instructive, useful, and humanitarian purpose.

The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] said that 270 soldiers out of every thousand enlisted were afflicted with some congenital or contracted disease. We could spend $10,000,000 upon that proposition and accomplish great results along that line. There are to-day in the United States of America 8,500,000 people who can not read or write or understand the English tongue, making a great problem of national illiteracy, which I think this Congress could well afford, by Federal aid and cooperation with the States, to meet and master. We could spend it much more profitably in aiding the States to build good highways for the people or in providing Federal aid, stimulus, and leadership in the great problem of retraining for some useful calling the victims of industrial accidents.

Gentlemen, we ought to remember the people back home. We are too prone to overlook, I fear, sometimes the plain people of our district. And they are nearly all plain people, because there are but few millionaires; there are very few of the bluestocking element in America as compared with the general population. That man back there is the fellow who has to go down in his pocket and foot these bills. He can not escape. He is penalized if he does not pay. And already the Treasury Department is getting out its return for every citizen of the United States who commands a salary or makes wages of more than $1,000 a year, and asking him to go down in his pocket and pay his tithe of these great tax burdens. We ought not to forget them and the business men of the country. While we are discussing sovereignty let us sometimes think of the private citizenship back yonder.

I want to illustrate that spirit and that purpose by a suggestion once made by that silver-tongued son of Georgia, the late Henry W. Grady, a comparison that I have used before:

> Not very long ago I stood out here in front of this Capitol and looked up at this magnificent structure, the Capitol of our Republic, magnificent in its architecture and design, the flag of our Republic floating above the Goddess of Liberty on its top, and I thought surely that if justice and wisdom and mercy and humanity abided here that the world should be indebted to this temple that had taught the world its best lessons of human liberty.

A few days after that I went back to my district and visited an old farmer friend. As I walked up the gravel walk to his home I could see the beegums out there in the peach orchard. I could see the pigeons fluttering down through the air. I could hear the drone of the bees and the poultry's gentle clucking. My old friend met me at the door and bade me into the sitting room. You have seen its type among your people. There was the clean counterpane on the bed; on the mantel the clock that had ticked the watches of the living and for the dead. There on the center table was the old family Bible, thumbed by fingers long since stilled and blurred by eyes now dimmed forever. He led me out on the porch and we looked down on his fertile fields. He was an American farmer, sowing in his own season and selling in his chosen market, the master of his land and the master of himself. He had a service star in the window for a son who had been taken from that farm and who was fighting for that flag. As I looked upon that picture the memory of this magnificent Capitol Building here in Washington faded from mind. I felt and knew then, as you do to-day, that here in the hearts and homes of the people is the ark of the covenant and the hope of this Republic. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, let us not forget the homes of America, the toil and the sacrifice that lies before them when we, I am afraid, are about unduly to hamper and burden them with unnecessary taxation. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, it has been repeatedly stated in the debates on this bill that its provisions look to the maintenance of an Army of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men for the next fiscal year. When this feature of the bill was under discussion yesterday morning, having read it very hastily, I ventured to accept the same interpretation of its language, and so stated to the membership of the House. But since that time, after reading the act carefully, I am clearly of the opinion that it does not limit the program to the maintenance of an Army of approximately 500,000.

I ask you to read closely the provisions of the act at this point and see if the statement I now make is not amply substantiated by the language used. It provides:

> That in addition to the Regular Army now organized under the provisions of an act for making further and more efficient provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes, approved June 3, 1916, as amended, there shall be raised and organized under provisions of "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 8, 1917, as amended, a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

This language not only authorizes but instructs and requires that "a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men" shall be raised and maintained "in addition" to the force provided for in the act approved June 3, 1916.

Upon first reading the act I construed the word "aggregate" to apply both to the Regular Army organized under the act approved June 3, 1916, and the additional force required to be raised under the provisions of the act approved May 8, 1917, but a more technical construction seems to limit the application of the word "aggregate" to the additional force only. So if we adopt this measure as reported by the committee we not only require the establishment, in time of peace, of an Army of 175,000 men under the act of 1916, but we require that there shall be organized and maintained an additional force of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

If this interpretation is correct, this act would require the maintenance in time of peace of an Army of nearly three-quarters of a million men. Now, for my part, I am unalterably opposed to any such scheme. Whether limited to 500,000 men or not, I am opposed to authorizing in any event more than 175,000 men as provided in the act of 1916.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand you to say this force of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men is in addition to the Regular Army?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the language of the act.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. A strange thing about that is that the men who drew the bill meant it to read just the opposite, and all thought it did.

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, if the gentleman will consult the various members of the Committee on Military Affairs regarding this matter, he will find at least one member of that committee, a very able lawyer, who construes it as I do.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I have been consulting them for the last two months on it daily, and we all seem to have the opinion that the Regular Army and temporary forces when put together would equal 500,000 approximately.

Mr. STEAGALL. That was the conclusion I reached yesterday upon a careless reading of the bill, but a strict examination of the language shows it does not mean that.

Now, I do not wish to criticize the War Department, but gentlemen on the committee have stated that the plans of the department look to the establishment and maintenance of an army of approximately 500,000 men in addition to the regular force.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; I regret that my time is so limited; I prefer not to yield.

Mr. SANFORD. I want to help the gentleman to understand it.

Mr. STEAGALL. Well, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SANFORD. If the House should make a rule to the effect that in addition to the speech the gentleman is making there should be sufficient further speeches to make an aggregate of three, can the gentleman tell me how many speeches under that ruling there would be in all? Then he can express an opinion on the meaning of the paragraph.

Mr. STEAGALL. I thought yesterday that the word "aggregate" saved the point, but upon further reading of the bill I reached a different conclusion. The act provides that "in addition" to the Regular Army organized under the act of June 3, 1916, there shall be raised and organized under the act approved May 8, 1917, a force sufficient to maintain an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men. It is this force to be raised under the act approved May 8, 1917, that is to amount to an aggregate commissioned and enlisted strength of 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

But, gentlemen, there is no use to spend further time discussing this feature of the act, because I think members of the Committee on Military Affairs are sincere in their position.

I have the highest regard for the ability and fairness of the gentlemen on this committee, especially my good friend and colleague, the able chairman of that committee, Mr. DENT. I am sure they want to be fair with the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MCKENZIE], a member of the committee, stated yesterday that he welcomed and courted discussion, and would welcome an amendment to this portion of the bill if necessary to accomplish what the committee intended. In my judgment, if it is desired to make this bill accomplish what the Committee on Military Affairs intended, it will be necessary to pass an amendment to make certain its provision. To say the least of it, if this is not done it will leave it open for construction by the War Department. I am not sure that the first word of the provision for this additional force of approximately 500,000 men does not have a peculiar significance. You will notice that this provision begins with a requirement that there shall be organized and maintained a force of 28,579 officers. Remember, gentlemen, that whoever wrote the bill puts the officers first, and if the bill is passed in its present language I venture to predict that when they go to construe it some interpretation will be found that will find places for all these officers for the next year. After that possibly the scheme advocated by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] may be contemplated, a plan by which these officers can be used for purposes of instruction in a course of universal military training that efforts will be made to establish in this country.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. STEAGALL. My time is so limited that I prefer not to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. LAZARO. Just for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Well, I yield for a question.

Mr. LAZARO. Was that provision written by an officer or a private?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am not in possession of any more information than the gentleman is. Of course, he knows, as we all know in a general way, how this legislation originates—the way the various departments have of preparing legislation for our approval.

I am sorry this bill deals only with the creation and maintenance of the Nation's military force. I wish the committee would report some measure looking to the demobilization of the millions of men already in our armies. I think every man who has dependents and every man who was engaged in farming and desires to return to such work ought to be selected for discharge. I have introduced a bill, now before the Military Affairs Committee, which provides that all men who had dependents or who at the time they entered the military service were engaged in farming shall be discharged. I wish the committee would report that bill or some similar measure.

I think we ought to adhere to the principle of selection underlying the draft law, and demobilize our armies just as they were raised, with a view to obviating economic loss and industrial disturbance as far as possible. The task of finding employment for the vast number of men now in the Army is, indeed, a serious one. We are maintaining an employment bureau at an enormous expense to assist in this work. The Secretary of the Interior is seeking legislation authorizing the expenditure of $100,000,000 to purchase or improve lands for the use of soldiers to be discharged. Certainly in such a situation men who desire to engage in farming ought to be discharged with all possible haste. Not a day passes that every Member of this House representing agricultural districts is not flooded with appeals to assist in securing discharges for men who are begging to go home and begin the cultivation of crops, and it will be too late unless they get out in the next few weeks, because the planting season will soon be past. For reasons of public policy these men, and men who have dependents, ought to be given a chance to return to their former occupation in order to prevent the accentuation of economic difficulties that must follow the complete demobilization of our Army.

Gentlemen, I attach no importance to the provisions of this act which make this vast army only temporary. The gentleman from Illinois quoted a statement from the Secretary of War in which the Secretary said that all legislation was temporary, and that is true. This is the entering wedge, the beginning of a policy to establish a big standing Army in this country, and if the plan is countenanced by this House at this time there is no telling when we may hope to see it abolished. There has never been a time when such a plan was so unwise and inexcusable. This bill authorizes an expenditure of more than $1,000,000,000 for the support of the Army for the fiscal year beginning June 30, almost a year after the termination of the war. A year's expenditure for the support of the Army for any fiscal year before the war began was never over $100,000,000 or thereabout. How can we justify such a change at this time, at the end of the great war, when the only enemy constituting a serious menace to this Nation in a hundred years has been humiliated and crushed and when we are trying to establish universal peace?

The expense of the Navy before the war never ran in any fiscal year above $150,000,000, but we have just passed in this House a measure providing three-quarters of a billion dollars for the support of the Navy for the fiscal year beginning June 30 next—almost a year after the conclusion of the war—and the bill contains an authorization for additional ships that will add nearly a half billion annually whenever the completed program is set to going.

The vast increase proposed to be expended for the maintenance of the Army and Navy following the war, as compared with the expenditures made prior to that time, would in just a few years be sufficient to pay our entire national indebtedness.

I know it has been contended that the provisions of the naval bill for the additional program will never be put into effect, but I believe if the Congress passes that bill it, too, will be an entering wedge which will culminate in the policy of building the greatest Navy in the world. When it is admitted that our present naval strength is equal to that of the combined strength of any three nations on earth except Great Britain, with whom we have just been associated in the great war against the military autocracy of Germany, unless we are in danger of war with Great Britain, what excuse can any sane man offer for such a program? Of course, no man would dare say that there can be such danger after our recent effort to assist Great Britain in destroying the system of militarism which so recently attempted to destroy the freedom of the world.

We face already a public debt of nearly $25,000,000,000. We have just passed a revenue bill designed to raise approximately $6,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year; and yet, if I can remember correctly, the chairman of the committee in charge of that bill stated that the indications point to an expense of nearly $8,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year. How are we going to get the money?

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to deliver any lecture on economy. I have usually voted with the majority of the House in making provision for the expenditure of money, and I am not censuring nor criticizing now. I know how it all comes about. Every measure that is brought in here for the unnecessary or unwise appropriation of money is always supported by the claim that it has some peculiar merit distinctively its own, just as was the case with the bill brought in by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and which was passed a day or two ago.

Each and every one of these schemes to take money out of the Treasury is always represented as having some merit peculiarly its own. But I voted against the naval bill, and I am going to vote against this bill if the provision is retained authorizing the maintenance of a standing Army of 500,000 or 700,000 men in time of peace. So far as I am concerned, from now on I am going to treat all alike and cast my vote against all useless expenditure of the people's money when they are burdened, as they are, almost beyond endurance. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the truth is we have been doing many unusual things in this Congress since we entered the war. And every time we have been confronted by the people of the country with the suggestion that we were departing from well-established customs and ideals we have answered them by saying, "Yes, but we are in war, and we want to go about winning it; but as soon as it is over we are going to tear down the military machine being built up and undo many of the things now deemed essential and indispensable to the winning of the war." Now, gentlemen, we have right here the opportunity to make good our promise by returning to the established policies and well-known wishes of the American people in the matter of our regular Military Establishment. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON rose.

Mr. STEAGALL. I decline to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TILSON. I was going to ask for the floor in my own right.

Mr. STEAGALL. I have voted with the majority almost invariably during my service in this House. I voted for the declaration of war. I voted against the McLemore resolution. I have voted at all times, as I thought, for the assertion and for the defense of American rights, for the right of the people of this Nation to traverse the high seas, and for the right of the producing masses of the Nation to maintain commerce with the world and ship their products to every quarter of the earth. And when those rights were at stake and the welfare of humanity was involved I voted for every dollar of appropriation suggested from responsible sources, in order to maintain our Army and sustain the dignity and honor of the Nation.

But we are now practically at peace with the world. We should return to the policy of simplicity and economy, to the old ideals, and get back into the paths established by our fathers, and run this Government as it used to be run without so much centralization of power in Washington and without the burdens involved in the maintenance of so many bureaus to control business and regulate the activities of the people. Let us release the initiative and productive forces of the Nation, and let the country move forward along normal lines, to the end that we may develop our resources, discharge our obligations, and leave our children unhampered and unshackled by a staggering public debt and the expense and danger involved in a large standing Army. Let the Government take its hand off the citizen and out of his pocket. Let the Government umpire the game and give every man in this Republic an equal chance to fight out the battle for industrial success. [Applause.] These are the things we have promised the people during the war, and, so far as I am concerned, I intend to make good the promise. [Applause.]

But, gentlemen, it is not alone upon the idea of dollars and cents that I am opposed to the maintenance of a vast military organization in this country in time of peace. It is a matter that transcends any question of dollars and cents. It tends to the overthrow of American ideals of government. [Applause.] Ah, gentlemen, to-day the thoughtful men of this country are not concerned so much about the dangers that lurk in foreign lands or any menace of other powers. We face domestic questions the solution of which affect the peace and perpetuity of this Republic. Solomon said: "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city." The greatest task confronting American statesmanship is to work out the many problems of rehabilitation and readjustment following the great war in which we have been engaged; to correct evils inherent in our national life; to eliminate the dangers and weaknesses of our own Government; to preserve it as a blessing to our children and a light to the world.

While cherishing the sincerest friendship for the masses of humanity everywhere now bleeding from the wounds of war, let us look first to the restoration of normal economic conditions among our own people. Let us release to the fullest the prductive forces of the Nation, extend our trade throughout other lands, and discharge the enormous burdens recently imposed upon our people. Let us not arouse their fears nor dampen their loyalty by the maintenance of useless and expensive armies. Above all things, let us not forget that when the record of this war shall be written by the impartial historian its greatest and most unmistakable lesson will be that the German Government, after whom some of us on this floor wish to pattern, went to her doom through her effort to dominate the world by military force—that in attempting to live by the sword she perished by the sword. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the House well knows that I am no apologist for the War Department. I try to stand by the officials of that department when they are right and to criticize them when I think they are deserving of criticism. I think that in some things they have been worthy of criticism, and I have attempted to administer it on this floor. One thing I have criticized is the delay in discharging the men from the Army; but there is no harm in facing the facts as they exist. There is nothing to be gained by misrepresenting the situation in which we find ourselves placed. Gentlemen agitate themselves very much over the provision of the bill which calls for an aggregate of 500,000 men, properly called a stop-gap Army. There should be no trouble about that. If that language does not mean what the Committee on Military Affairs intended it should mean, it is an easy matter to insert a single word that will make it mean that, and there is not a member of that committee who will resist it. There is no use in agitating ourselves over that proposition. The truth of the matter is that it is the intention of the committee to provide pay, subsistence, supplies, transportation, and other necessities for an Army averaging 500,000 men during the next fiscal year, and that is the smallest number which the responsible officers of the executive department of this Government claim they can get along with.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas for a question.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman uses the word "average" as applied to the 500,000 men. The language of the bill has nothing to do with an average.

Mr. TILSON. The item for the pay of the Army tells the story. The pay of the Army is sufficient for 500,000 men and the requisite number of officers during the entire year. Therefore the Army may amount to over a million men on the first day of July, 1919, but on the 30th of the following June may not amount to 200,000 men; and that is what we mean by the average, and that is what we have provided for here.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. If no substantive legislation is provided, will not the present Army continue in existence until the emergency is ended, and all that will be necessary will be a sufficient appropriation to provide for that Army until demobilization is completed?

Mr. TILSON. Yes, that will be so; but as a member of the committee I, for one, believe that it would be a great hardship upon these men who were either drafted or enlisted for the war to be kept for an indefinite time until peace shall be finally concluded. We believe it to be the better plan to enlist a volunteer force of men who are willing to serve in that Army during the next year.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. No; I decline to yield, if the gentleman will excuse me. I do not wish to take any more time.

I should like to call upon some of these gentlemen who have had the floor and who have discussed this matter on the other side to state what items they would cut out of this bill. We have a large Army over in France, and we all wish to see every man brought back home.

What is the largest item of this $1,100,000,000? Nearly half of it is for transportation, $449,000,000. Would gentlemen cut that out? Our men over there must be brought home.

The supplies must be carried to them while they are over there. We must have the transportation.

Our soldiers must be fed. One hundred and twenty million dollars is for their subsistence. Would gentlemen cut that out? Would they let the men starve?

Then there is the pay. We are told that 500,000 men are the smallest number that can perform our part of what ought to be done in cleaning up the aftermath of this great war. This is the best opinion that we can get from the military advisers of the Government. Therefore we are providing for the pay of 500,000 men, and the pay item amounts to $303,000,000. Would gentlemen cut that out? We must provide the pay if we have the men.

Gentlemen are indulging in destructive criticism, but I would suggest that they tarry a moment and say what they are going to put in place of what they destroy. After having incurred these heavy burdens, after having voted for these expenses, it is all very well to say that we want to return to the old-time normal. All right; but we are not yet at the old-time normal, and we are not in sight of it. It is going to take a great deal of money to return to it; but the point is that having voted for these great appropriations, having incurred these great expenses, gentlemen must take their share of the responsibility in helping to get us out of the difficulties in which we have been placed by the aid of their votes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman from Georgia here?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, for one I am not disturbed about the language of this bill on page 58. I think the argument that my friend from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has just made will clear a doubt in the minds of some of us as to whether or not the legislation is to be permanent. At any rate, I am not one of those who have believed that we can raise 500,000 men by voluntary enlistment. I might say that I am disturbed somewhat about the 28,579 officers that the bill provides for. If we are going to have 500,000 men, that will mean 20 divisions and 5 army corps, and, of course, it will require the 28,579 officers; but I do not believe that one single officer should be appointed or commissioned for this Army until the Army grows to the strength requiring that particular officer.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. That very provision is in the bill.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then it is a better bill than I thought for. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. The officer can not be appointed until the men are in the unit he is to command.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The committee is in hearty accord with the gentleman from Massachusetts. [Laughter.] But I did not rise to discuss this bill in this particular feature. I listened to a discussion on the floor yesterday in which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HERSEY] had something to say about what is colloquially known as the "canning factory" of the American Expeditionary Forces, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] asked the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] what he knew about the "canning factory," and he said in his belief it never existed.

When I referred to the conditions at the reclassification camps at Blois twice in the past month, I think I gave the House substantial evidence that there was a "canning factory" at Blois, and if my good friend from Nebraska will read the Washington papers he must be familiar with the intelligent contributions of George Rothwell Brown, who went to France, who spent months in France, and who has given through the columns of the Washington Post a magnificent description of what he saw and what he knew about conditions in France. I commend to my friend from Nebraska that he read the Brown story of the "canning factory" at Blois.

Now, I am going to read a letter just received from France. Sunday's mail brought me 40 letters from France this time, every letter from a stranger, and they come from colonel down to second lieutenant. I am not going to read them all. I am going to read two. I am not going to say that what is conveyed to me in the first letter is the truth. I have only the evidence in this letter; but if it is the truth it is horrifying. Listen to this: It is signed by a major, and, of course, I shall not give the man's name, but he appends the number and location of his outfit, and he refers to having read some of my remarks on the floor of this House in the Paris edition of the New York Herald. He says:

FRANCE, January 20, 1919.

Gen. Hill, of Illinois, one of the most able and conscientious officers that the National Guard ever produced, was hailed before that tribunal, whose door should have upon it "All who enter here leave hope behind," and told he could accept a colonel's commission in the S. O. S. or a major's commission in the line, and he stated that he came over here to fight, and was going to fight if he had to fight as a private. He went to the line as a major, and every officer and man who knew him testified to his soldierly conduct and ability. I have visited his grave near Epionville, in an orchard, in that shell-torn Argonne Forest, and as I stood at that shrine I felt that if God ever cursed a human being he surely would trouble the consciences of that board, who never smelled powder, but who have broken the hearts of many patriotic American officers.

Col. Joseph Cavander, who left Wyoming with as good a regiment of husky westerners as was ever organized, and who was transferred from the Infantry to the Artillery, with no choice, and who took up the new work with vim and enthusiasm, and put together a regiment whose record has not been excelled, and who were on the fighting line for five long months, was detached from the regiment and sent to the same board, where he was informed that he could take a captain's commission or go home. Broken hearted he walked over to the hotel and fired a .45-caliber pistol bullet into his brain, and then the casualty reports showed him "killed in action," and I have in mind at least 50 generals, colonels, and lieutenant colonels of the National Guard who have met disgrace at this tribunal of injustice, and I will be glad to furnish the names and addresses if they are needed.

We stood this long without a murmur while the war was going on, for the reason that nothing mattered much if the boche won, and we were willing to suffer even these things, in order to maintain harmony in our own forces, but now we feel that justice must be done.

Sincerely, yours,

_____.

May I say here that before I read that letter I consulted with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], and he said that he knew Col. Cavander well, and that the earlier reports from the Expeditionary Forces did say that he was killed in action. Yesterday, only yesterday, the record was corrected to show that he died from a self-inflicted wound.

I may say that my correspondent is unknown to me except as he signs himself, and that he is not from New England but, I understand, from a Southern State.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I have a letter from a member of the Expeditionary Forces in France, dated January 15, 1919, in the course of which he says:

Senator GALLIVAN—

And he simply anticipates [applause]—

of Massachusetts certainly put it up to them in the Congress about keeping you all in the dark.

I will not ask the gentleman to give up his time, nor shall I ask to take the time of the committee to read this in full, but I wish the gentleman would ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, so as to include this letter, which is most interesting.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will ask that permission for me now.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing this letter, or any other letters, in full to which he may refer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that his colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] may be granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the letter referred to and such other letters as he may choose to include. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall include that letter to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers at this point. It comes from a soldier son to his father, and is as follows:

VISERNY, FRANCE, January 15, 1919.

DEAR PA: I am sending this letter through the base censor, so that I may write more freely. I certainly feel that you people at home have a right to know the truth about what we are being forced to go through. What one reads in the papers is just the best of what is happening to troops in a big city. So much is written that, so far as we know, has no basis of fact that it would lead a person in the States to think that we were on a touring trip with the latest of every modern convenience at our command. This is good camouflage, but will be rudely destroyed when the troops get home.

The men located as we are, in a little village back up in the hills, are up against it. Probably 300 or 400 people inhabit the village. They are farmers by vocation. The only amusement they can offer the soldier is an abundant supply of red wine and rot-gut cognac. For those who can not stand the strain these two drinks have proven treacherous pitfalls. Many of the fellows, out of pure despondency, have taken to drink as a means of escape. When one has money he may occasionally get a supper cooked by some family. How can we do it with October, November, and December pay due us?

During the day we are drilled in elementary tactics, such as hand salute, squads right and left, facings, standing gun drill, etc. Most of the men have been in the service for upward of 12 months and do not need this. They even went so far as to try to give us tent pitching. Imagine that after we had traveled night after night across country with no tent poles and pins and had pitched our tents in the dark. Then we had struck camp in the dark, rolled packs, and all without the use of any light. To give us instruction in such things is pure nonsense. But what is worse, every day now men are detailed to crack stone for shed floors and to do "white wing" work in the town. One day a successful practicing lawyer from New York was on a detail cleaning up the streets while some of the Frenchmen stood and laughed at him.

Our billets are fairly comfortable, inasmuch as the weather here is mild. Being barns, however, it is practically impossible to keep the floors immaculate, as the authorities seem to demand. It was announced that if one "butt" was found on the floor at any time that thereafter no smoking would be allowed in the billet. It is becoming well-nigh intolerable living under such unreasonableness. If we hadn't seen a paper we would never have known the armistice was signed. Not a single thing are we told. We are just treated like so many serfs and ordered to do things without reason. What we would like to know is: Why are we kept over here?

Why are the authorities not picturing things as they are? Were we brought over here to fight Germany or clean these backwoods towns of France? How long does the law allow the National Army to be kept in France? Why do the people at home not find out some of the real facts?

We realize that all the troops can not be returned at the same time, for most of us have a reasonable amount of intelligence and are open to reason. But we do demand that our treatment be that that any self-respecting American should be accorded.

I wish that this might be brought to the attention of somebody who could use the material in presenting our side to the public. Of course you realize that an out-and-out publication with my signature might involve me in some difficulty, such are the regulations to suppress the truth from being known.

But we want to come home if our duty is done. If it is not, then we want to know about it and we will listen to reason.

Every single word of this is fact, and I do wish in some way something might be done. Every day is simply wasted and is costing the Government a large sum of money. It doesn't seem a very wise way to inspire patriotism toward the purchase of liberty bonds.

We are getting good food and plenty of it.

To-day classes in many subjects have been started, and this will, in some measure, help to lessen the tension; but we want to get back to civilian life, not to have beneficent charity forced upon us.

Outside of the depression caused by these conditions, I am well.

Please bear in mind that it would be unwise to publish the letter with my signature, but do try and use it in some way in behalf of us fellows so that we may get back.

Added a few days later:

I have purposely waited before sending this to see if possibly I had been in a supercritical mood when I wrote it. To-day I find myself in much the same condition mentally that I have been since coming into the town; but I have more facts at my command, with which I will not tire you. Our pay has not come, and yesterday, when one of the most-touted leaves was announced, scarcely anyone had any money at all. There is absolutely no excuse for this, for we have been out of the lines two months.

Senator or Representative GALLIVAN, of Massachusetts, certainly put it up to them in the Congress about keeping you all in the dark. Possibly a copy of this, minus the name, from a Massachusetts voter might help hasten the time when your two boys will be released from their idle occupation and be able to reenter a profitable civilian occupation.

Am trying to get a leave of absence to visit ———. Perhaps I will get it and perhaps I won't. I certainly want it.

Now that I have gotten some of this off my chest I will promise to write a cheerful letter next time.

Do try and do something for us.

With love, ——— ———.

I do not want to take up much more of the time of the House, but I have two short extracts from letters which I have which I desire to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I have two extracts here, one touching on what my colleague from Massachusetts has said, and this comes from a major of Engineers, who signs his name, who is at Tours. He says:

I also want to say to you that they are making our army here a regular mob; not soldiers. It is getting so that men have little respect for the officers, and if you knew all you would understand better why. It is getting so that officers are no better than enlisted men, as far as discipline goes, and the men know it. The papers seem afraid to publish the facts, if they have them.

In conclusion, I ask your attention to this short expression of opinion from a lieutenant colonel, who writes me from France:

No one in the American Expeditionary Forces over here would have had the attitude of Congress other than it has been during the active conduct of this war, but certainly every grant of an extraordinary power carries with it a strict accountability for the use of that power, and the National Guard and the Reserve Officers over here are glad to see that Congress at last is beginning to ask an accounting from the men who have been given extraordinary power.

Mr. Chairman, I simply rose to assure my esteemed friend from Nebraska that when we say something about conditions at Blois that it is not something that we have just dreamed of, but that it is an actuality, and that men have been wounded in pride and feelings and reputation at Blois almost as badly as on the fighting line at Chateau-Thierry. [Applause.]

Congress will get more of the truth when our valient boys get home. Suffice it for the present to say that I have given information to the House as it comes to me from the men who ought to know. I believe their statements. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It took the American people a long time to understand that we were at war. It seemed to take a long time for Congress to understand that we were at war. A man who rises now to make criticism of the War Department often brings down upon himself the condemnation of some Members of the House. It was not right to arouse the people of our Nation by calling attention to any mistakes that might have been made while the war was in progress; but it is now 90 days since the armistice was signed. Of course, legally speaking the war is not ended. But just criticism or criticism that is made for the purpose of righting wrong ought to be made, and a Member of this House who knows the conditions and refuses to call attention to them does not perform the duty that he owes to his people or to the people of the United States. The rôle of a critic is not a pleasant one, and a man who criticizes without offering some remedy does himself an injustice as well as the Members of the House.

I want to say a word in behalf of some of my people, because they can not speak for themselves, and it is in reference to the delivery of the mails to the soldiers in France, and I know that some Members here will say that they are getting very tired of hearing of that subject, and of hearing the matter referred to in this House. We are getting tired of that matter, but the thing that I am tired of is the fact that the mails are not delivered, and I am mightily tired of that. [Applause.]

In making this statement I appreciate the conditions under which the mails have to be handled. No sensible man who thinks but knows that it is a gigantic task, one that must take patience and time, and if I thought that my remarks here to-day would make my people more restless and dissatisfied and add to their distress I would desist from speaking. The War Department has stated that the mails were being delivered, and I think that the restlessness that is abroad among the people comes from the fact that the people know from returned letters properly addressed that their mail was not delivered to the soldiers. The War Department should take the people into its confidence and tell just what the facts are, giving the difficulty, because I know the American people have common sense, and that whenever any reasonable excuse is given them they will be patient, as they have been patient throughout this entire war. They are beginning to be impatient, however, because for 90 days the conditions, while improved, have not yet been corrected. Every man on this floor has received mail which has been properly addressed and which has been returned. That condition ought to be corrected, because I say to you that when you forget the breaking hearts of the fathers and mothers of these boys who won this war you forget the very foundation of patriotic sacrifice for our Government. Do not say these things do no good, for I have observed that criticism in this House calling the attention of the department to wrongs that are going on has attracted the attention of the War Department and efforts made to correct same.

I wish to refer to the proposition of working our American soldiers at $30 a month alongside of men who get $6 and $8 a day. Out there at Indianapolis, Ind., a private concern rented an old factory to the Government in which to store automobile trucks. When the men and officers arrived with the trucks to store them they found civilians clearing out the rubbish, and what happened? The civilian employees, whose business it was to clean out the rubbish for the private owner, were discharged and the American soldiers put in there to clean out the rubbish of that factory. That is not right; it is not fair. It is not fair to the boys, and I want to say here that there are other similar cases throughout the United States. This is not a criticism of the general policy of the Government, but it is simply calling attention to these facts in order that such things may not continue.

It is true we must not forget the wonderful achievements of our boys across the sea and the wonderful achievements of the War Department in this emergency, but because of that fact we should not shut our eyes or close our ears to those things that we ought to remedy. [Applause.]

Gentlemen of the House, there is another subject that I wish to discuss, and that is the demobilization of our Army. When the news came that the armistice had been signed the wives, fathers, and mothers of the men in France and in the Army in the United States immediately became interested in the return of the soldiers to their homes. To those not familiar with military methods it seemed just that the boys in France who had been engaged in the hard fighting should be the first to be returned home to America, and that those soldiers who were called under the first orders of the draft, according to their numerical numbers and who never had an opportunity to be classified under the selective-draft law, would be discharged early, especially those of them who were married and had dependent families and who, if they had had the advantage of classification, would not have been taken. I realize that it is a huge task to orderly demobilize an army, but I am convinced in my own mind that the officers having charge of the demobilization of the men should be compelled to give heed and act upon individual cases where the conditions demand the immediate return of the soldier.

Some say we are too impatient in this matter of demobilization; but, sirs, one can hardly be patient when he sees the daily exhibition of a purpose on the part of some officers not to give any attention to, but thrown in the waste basket, as it were, the applications of meritorious cases, and using the threat of court-martial to prevent the soldiers from requesting any assistance in the way of getting a discharge. Every officer that makes an order threatening court-martial proceedings against any soldier who desires to communicate with the Members of Congress or with his family ought to be cashiered and discharged from the service. Such procedure is un-American and should not be tolerated by this Congress. Every man who has a family that can possibly be spared should be immediately discharged. Every man who has employment on the farm, in the workshop, in the stores, and industries of the country waiting for him and can be spared should be promptly discharged. Some armed men, it is true, will have to be maintained for a while in Europe, but I imagine that it will not be necessary to maintain an extensive force there for many months. For military reasons many of the boys who did the fighting are with the occupation army in Germany guarding the Rhine, while there are many other soldiers who did not have the opportunity to reach the battle front are being first returned home. There is evidently some sufficient military reason for this, but the people do not understand why this is done, and it causes unfavorable comment and criticism, and the point I am insisting upon is that the War Department in so far as it can to take the public into its confidence and explain the reasons for actions on its part that run contrary to the public idea of common sense, equity, and justice. Every mail brings complaint from the families of wounded boys in regard to the failure of the War Department to furnish them with any information as to the condition at the present time of the soldier. It is not sufficient to answer that there is no casualty or that the soldier was wounded in September or October with no further information as to his condition, and I insist that the War Department obtain the hospital reports and furnish this information or explain why the same can not be furnished promptly.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, America helped win this war with the brave, heroic men who left their homes in this delightful and pleasant country and went overseas to fight and die on foreign soil; patriotic men and women at home toiled, saved, and sacrificed to sustain them in their hours of trial. Men in all walks of life who remained behind poured their money into the Treasury of the Government through the purchase of liberty bonds and war-savings stamps. They curtailed their business and conformed to all the orders in the regulations of the Government. The women of the cities, villages, and countryside vied with each other in the Red Cross work and other similar missions. Their contribution to the carrying on of the war can not be measured. Now, sirs, when our people have done all these things and are at this moment supporting fervently the Government of this country, I say that they have a right to have their heartaches receive due consideration at the hands of officers whose salaries they pay. In conclusion let me say, my prayer is that out of the peace conference may come a lasting peace and some system that will make impossible any great world war in the future.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the speech of my colleague from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], in which he objected to the temporary Army provided for in this bill of over 300,000 men, and unless the Committee on Military Affairs can show the need of such temporary Army I trust the House will not authorize it. By way of suggestion, may I call attention to the fact that the Committee on Naval Affairs, in providing a temporary naval force for the fiscal year 1920, required that they be shown what absolutely necessary service demanded this temporary force, and unless an essential service had been shown no temporary force would have been allowed. The bill as drawn and passed stipulated not only what service the temporary force should render but expressly provided that such temporary force should automatically be discharged when the need for their services ceased. In other words, a temporary naval force of 82,000 men for the purpose of manning cargo and transport ships for the oversea Army was expressly provided, and the bill further provides that when such transport and cargo service ceases, either in whole or in part, automatically the temporary force must be released. The same is true of the temporary increase provided for the Marine Corps. We gave them a temporary force equal to the number of men serving with the Army in France, and provided that when those men return from France automatically this temporary force shall be discharged. And it occurs to me that in providing a temporary force for the Army the duties of that temporary Army should be clearly shown and written into the bill. This House is entirely willing to provide adequate military force for the essential needs of the country, but unless the necessity can be clearly shown and unless provision is further made for the diminution of this temporary force as the needs disappear this House should not authorize the temporary force herein asked for.

Now, in connection with the duties the Navy is performing in bringing back our soldiers and in carrying supplies to them, the question was asked by Mr. GARNER, of Texas, how many naval vessels are employed for these purposes were being manned and operated by our Navy? A letter just received from Admiral Blue, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, gives this information. The Navy at considerable expense, and with some question from an economic standpoint as to the wisdom of its course, after the armistice was signed, proceeded to prepare 16 battleships and 10 cruisers to bring back our troops, and these naval vessels are now engaged in that service. They have a monthly carrying capacity of about 27,000, and the number to date returned on these battleships and cruisers, including those to be landed in a few days, exceeds 35,000 men. In addition to these they are manning with naval crews 72 transport ships for the Army and 267 cargo ships. Personnel units are now organized for 22 additional American transports, soon to be fitted out by the Army, and 20 additional large German transports, all of which it is hoped will be added to the service within a few weeks. Careful surveys are being made of other vessels, and if found suited for transport service the Navy is prepared to supply the personnel to operate the same. For this important work we have provided a naval temporary force. The vessels now in service and soon to be added, operated by the Navy for the return of our soldiers, have a carrying capacity per month of more than 250,000 men, and it is thought that additional cargo ships can be converted into transports so as to increase the monthly carrying capacity to 300,000. You will recall that with the limited number of transport ships flying the American flag during the war, our Navy carried to France more than 46 per cent of our Army of 2,000,000 men and furnished 82 per cent of the destroyer and cruiser escort for the ships carrying the entire force. Not a ship convoyed by the American Navy was lost, a most remarkable record, and one never equaled by any navy in the world.

Mr. MASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I will.

Mr. MASON. I am very much obliged and very glad to hear the report. I want to ask whether the gentleman knows of any rule in the War Department that prohibits or prevents the bringing of the boys home on first-class passenger ships? I ask the question because my colleague from Massachusetts, who came over on a first-class passenger ship, stated that there was room for a thousand more soldiers on that ship, which room was not occupied, and I wondered whether there was any departmental rule that they had to be brought back on battleships or some other sort of ships?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I regret to say I know nothing of the rules of the War Department. I am only giving information obtained from the Navy Department as to what is being accomplished with the ships manned by the Navy.

Mr. MASON. I am very thankful to hear it.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I recall the gentleman making a similar statement on yesterday, and I asked for information as to the ships manned by the Navy in bringing back troops—whether their full carrying capacity was being employed—and the answer was that in January, owing to the large number of wounded brought back, that the full carrying capacity of the ships was not utilized, for the reason that more room was required for the wounded.

It will doubtless interest the gentleman to know that it is now estimated that the seriously wounded will all be returned at an early day, and I am sure that then the carrying capacity of every ship can be used to the fullest.

Mr. MASON. I thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have not criticized any department of this Government on the floor of this House, and I shall not do so now. First, I shall make a few observations in reference to the speech the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] made a few minutes ago, which tended, it seemed to me, to prove the National Guard and the National Army are inferior to the Regular Army. All comparisons are odious, and I regret to see them made on the floor. I fear the statement of my good friend from Mississippi when it shall be read in the RECORD will not convey the real intention of the gentleman. I fear that those whose sons served in the National Guard units or the National Army might feel that their services were disparaged here upon the floor of this House, and be hurt thereby. I am going to acquit the gentleman from Mississippi from any intention of doing it, but nevertheless that is the way it now reads.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Does the gentleman question the accuracy of the statements I put in the RECORD?

Mr. CARAWAY. I never saw them. I do not question them. I do not have any opinion about them one way or another. It is so common to attribute to men who have special training superior qualities. There is a kind of fetish in the minds of some people that military science is a peculiar science, and that men who have not had the professional training of the schools can not acquire this knowledge. The history of this country shows that is a mistake. We have to go no further back than the War between the States to learn this. Many officers who came to the front toward the conclusion of that war were men who had not the military training of the schools. In the beginning of that struggle most officers of high rank were professional soldiers. To the end some of those most renowned for military prowess were men who had come to the Army fresh from civil life. Forrest, Gordon, and many others who followed the Stars and Bars are but examples. I mention this to say that comparisons of one branch of the service with another is wholly unfair. I am sorry that it has been indulged in on this floor. There is honor enough for all.

With reference to the bill itself, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has just come over and menaced us with his uplifted finger if we dare to touch one single provision in this bill. If we did so, the country, and he particularly, would hold us responsible for it; that the bill was a perfect product. It had come from the Committee on Military Affairs and therefore was sacred.

I have as much respect for the Military Committee as for any other 21 men on this floor, but no more. There is nothing in their history so far that shows they are supermen. The gentleman defied us to lay our hands on it. If we should we would pull down the temple or the ark of safety. [Laughter.] That sort of an argument does not impress us.

Mr. GORDON. Especially after the war is over.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, if you would believe what you heard here to-day from some gentlemen we are but getting ready for a real war. We have had a little difference of opinion, in which millions of men have gone down to their death, but a real war is now looming over the horizon, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] are the first to see its coming. All others are lacking vision if they do not see this spectre as they see it.

What I want to say about this bill is this: These 500,000 men here sought to be provided for you say you intend to raise by voluntary enlistment, and I take it for granted that the committee in good faith intends that. I do not want to criticize them. I think the language is susceptible of two constructions, but the committee has expressed itself as willing to make it susceptible of but one—voluntary enlistment. If this army is to take the place of the army that we put in the field under the selective-draft act, and that army be brought home, I am willing to vote for this measure if we need that many men to make certain the fruits of our victory and the safety of our institutions. But if it is to be an army raised merely to commit us to a peace army of that size, I shall hesitate. If it is to be supplemental to the army we now have in the field I do not know why the threat of the gentleman from Connecticut ought to deter honest men from voting their honest differences of opinion.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. CARAWAY. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has expressed better than I could express just exactly the purpose of this bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. What is it?

Mr. TILSON. We intend to raise 500,000 men to take the place as rapidly as possible of the men who are already in the service.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is it the intention to send this newly raised army to Europe?

Mr. TILSON. To take the place of certain men over there.

Mr. CARAWAY. Are they going to Europe?

Mr. TILSON. If it is necessary.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is that the intention? Was that what the department told the committee?

Mr. TILSON. The department does not give directions to the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is the first time I ever heard it; but let it go at that.

Mr. TILSON. That is as I understood it.

Mr. CARAWAY. What does the gentleman from Connecticut understand? Is it to take the place of the Army now in Europe?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. This Army is to go to Europe?

Mr. TILSON. As much of it as may be necessary. It is my hope that we will not need that many there. It is my belief that we will need comparatively few; but all that are necessary will go over there.

Mr. CARAWAY. And bring the others home?

Mr. TILSON. All that wish to come.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman from California, who knows practically everything, shakes his head. [Laughter.] I yield to the gentleman from California to set us all right. [Laughter.]

Mr. KAHN. The soldiers in Europe will have to come home when their units are ordered home. The soldier has no volition in the matter.

Mr. CARAWAY. I knew that. He could not resist.

Mr. KAHN. But what is intended is this: It is intended to bring home all the boys who are in Europe as speedily as possible. But it is recognized that we will have to have some soldiers over there, at least until the end of the next fiscal year. Now, instead of keeping the drafted men in Europe, it is very desirable to give all our men an opportunity to return with their respective organizations. We ought not to keep them over there longer than is necessary. It is proposed by this legislation to send over the men raised under this law by volunteering, or to maintain over there by volunteering as large a force as may be necessary, up to the number of 500,000 men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes additional, to go to the gentleman from Arkansas.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Now, I want to reply fully. As to the disposition of this Army and as to whether it is to be sent over there or not, that rests entirely with the Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States. He will have the right to dispose of the men as the needs of the country require.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, will everybody who understood that stand up? [Laughter.]

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. I would like to ask the gentleman from California this question: Is it his opinion that we will need some of these men over in Europe until July, 1920?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Whose opinion is that?

Mr. KAHN. The officers of the War Department of this Government, who have been running this war.

Mr. KEARNS. What are they going to do over there until July, 1920?

Mr. KAHN. Well, that is a question that the Committee on Military Affairs has nothing to do with. That is a question of policy to be decided by the President of the United States and the military department.

Mr. KEARNS. Well, it is a question with Congress whether it wants to provide the funds or not.

Mr. KAHN. That, of course, rests with Congress.

Mr. CARAWAY. Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have any rights on the floor I shall exercise them. [Laughter.] The two leading authorities in the world on militarism, the gentleman from Connecticut and the gentleman from California, do not agree. [Laughter.] Now, what a layman shall do in that event I am at a loss to know. [Laughter.] But I will say this, that the statement of the gentleman from California—and I say it with all due deference to the gentleman—conveyed no information at all. It simply said that if it is decided to send them to Europe they will send them to Europe, and if it is decided to send them somewhere else they will be sent there.

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. WISE. In my judgment this is the process: It is the opinion of the War Department that they will need that many men. The Director of Finance submits all these estimates. He wrote to the different departments and asked the question: "Based upon this—that we would have 500,000 men in the United States and insular possessions—what are the requirements of your department?" The head of that department would reply: "Based on your assumption as to 500,000 men in the insular possessions and the United States, we need so much money."

Mr. CARAWAY. And they are not to go to Europe at all?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. DENT. There seems to be some confusion as to the basis upon which we have proceeded to write this bill.

So far as I am concerned, and according to my information, as I tried to make it clear yesterday, it was this: There has been no recommendation whatever on the part of the War Department as to any army of occupation in Europe, but it was the opinion of the War Department that we were to have an average sized Army during the period of demobilization of 500,000 men, and we were asked to appropriate accordingly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Let me ask the gentleman from Alabama a question: Is it the gentleman's understanding that we are to raise this Army to take the place of the Army in Europe, or is it to be a supplementary Army to that which we now have?

Mr. DENT. The idea, as I think the language clearly shows, is simply this: To organize by voluntary enlistment an Army under the national-defense act of June 3, 1916, and to provide a temporary force by voluntary enlistment for one year such as may be necessary to take care of an average Army of 500,000 men.

Mr. CARAWAY. For what purpose are we to have an Army of 500,000 men?

Mr. DENT. The purpose was to put the men in during the period of demobilization. It would take that long to demobilize.

Mr. CARAWAY. The others are to be demobilized?

Mr. DENT. You can not get rid of an army in a short time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has again expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee whether it would be possible, if the authorities of the War Department should so decide, to still retain all the men in Europe that we have there and in addition to that have an Army of 500,000 men over here? Would we still have that Army over here?

Mr. DENT. I do not think so. I propose to offer an amendment, when we get to that section of the bill, providing that all the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917, for raising an Army by draft or conscription are hereby repealed, and that it is the sense of Congress that the Army organized under that act shall be demobilized as soon as possible.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is one amendment that I shall vote for. I shall, of course, have due regard for our necessities. We want to keep whatever force may be necessary to carry out and make sure the ideals for which we entered this war, but let us, as soon as consistent with that, return these boys to their homes.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I do not like the idea that the War Department may keep everybody over there in Europe.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yesterday I saw in the paper a statement purporting to come from the War Department saying that practically no further discharges would be made from the forces now in the United States; that the men now in the cantonments would be kept in service and those discharged who are in Europe.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman knows that that has been denied this morning by a high official of the War Department, and the statement has been made that there was no foundation for that. It has been so stated on this floor to-day.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman know who first made that statement, which made it necessary for somebody to deny it?

Mr. TILSON. I do not know who first made it, but Gen. McIntyre has denied it.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am glad to know that, although I want the soldiers brought home from Europe.

I have indulged in no criticism of the War Department. I am not criticizing gentlemen who have stood here on the floor and criticized the War Department, but that course has never appealed to me. I have always felt if I had any criticisms to offer I should offer them to the man whose conduct I am criticizing. I have never taken advantage of a forum where I could be heard and the other party could not, and I shall not do it now. I want to say, however, that I sincerely hope that this Army that we sent abroad and this Army that we gathered to go abroad, if their services should be required, may be discharged as quickly as it is possible. I have not much patience with the theory that it takes longer to get a man out of the military service than it does to enlist and train him. Yet we are confronted with the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that it will be July, 1920, before we can get the armies home from Europe.

In conclusion I shall say but this: I have never taken this floor to criticize or to eulogize men, but everybody agrees with me that it is the hope of the world that the men who are now gathered at Versailles to write a treaty of peace will make wars impossible in the future. [Applause.] I have no patience with the man who says, "We have had wars in the past; we will therefore always have wars." That is the doctrine of hopelessness, that the world can never be better than it is.

There are some of you gentlemen here who can remember when it was considered that certain offenses against the person or honor of individuals were of so grave a character that the individual could not keep his self-respect if he let a judicial tribunal right his wrongs. He had to kill his opponent, and he was denounced as a coward if he did not do it. A Vice President of these United States left the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol and went to New York and killed his opponent in a duel because, as he said, his adversary had assailed his honor. Members have left this floor and gone over to a little village yonder in Maryland, whose very name would be forgotten if it were not for the fact that men went there and killed each other to vindicate their honor. My particular section of the country was wedded to that practice up to the time of the Civil War, and until we wrote into the constitution of pretty nearly every Southern State a positive provision that no man who accepted a challenge or sent a challenge should be eligible to hold any office of honor or trust. That seems to have been the only means that could deter them. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. If the gentleman will go out to Bladensburg, to the old dueling ground, he will learn that 27 duels were fought there, 6 of them with fatal results.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; men thought they had to avenge their private wrongs. Now we have laid that doctrine aside, and we go to court with our differences or we do not say anything at all about them. I am satisfied nobody regrets that those old days are gone and that that custom no longer prevails.

The eyes of the Christian world—aye, of the whole civilized world—are centered upon one man. He carries in his keeping the destiny of civilization; and if God prospers his mission, all these armaments for which we are here providing in these the closing days of this great war will be permitted to rust in the arsenals. That man in Woodrow Wilson. [Applause.]

If he writes into the treaties of peace that are to conclude this gigantic war the promise that men may breathe once more without terror, that they may possess their own souls, and that never again shall nations of the earth be cursed with war, I do not care what may be said against him, that he has been inconsistent, that he has changed his opinion—God knows every man who has good sense changes his opinions—the whole world is going to say that he has been the greatest benefactor to mankind since Jesus Christ died 2,000 years ago. [Applause.] In the light of that sentiment I hope that gentlemen will find some way to reconcile this present gigantic military scheme with the desire of the world, with the hope of the world, that we shall not need it. I am willing to give this country all the force that is necessary to defend it, but I do not want to burden civilization with armaments at the very moment when we are praying that armies shall be called into the field no more. [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Is not the gentleman willing to trust that man to use such force as he thinks he may need out of these 500,000 men during the next fiscal year?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; perfectly willing.

Mr. TILSON. He has control of them as Commander in Chief of the Army.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; but so far as I know he has not requested an army.

Mr. TILSON. His representatives have.

Mr. CARAWAY. I do not particularly like this way of having all my information come secondhand. The strange thing about it, the thing that gives me pause, is that those who want a program that seems inconsistent with the very ideals that the President is trying to establish, for the first time I discover gentlemen on that side of the House wanting to align themselves with the President.

Mr. TILSON. The information about the Navy was firsthand information, was it not?

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, I voted for that program. We have, however, no intimation from the President, or from those who have a right to speak for him, that he wants this program. If he does, and it is necessary to carry out his purposes in going to Europe, I shall support it. Unless that is true you but excite suspicion by failing to disclose your reasons. If you have knowledge, divulge it. I have an open mind. I do pray, however, that no mother shall ever again be required to mourn her dead if their death can justly be prevented. My hopes and faith are with our President beyond the seas. God prosper his mission.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] referred to me in his remarks in connection with the efficiency boards in Europe. The statement I made on the floor, as Members will recollect, was that I did not believe there was a "canning factory," the imputation being that there was some sort of a board whose purpose it was to deal unfairly with the demotion of men in the United States Army. I think it is fair to the country and to Congress to know that under the law that Congress passed there is provided an Army Efficiency Board to pass on the efficiency of men to command men who are sent into battle.

No doubt a board has been acting there in France. It was a necessity, as everyone knows. We took 200,000 men into the Army as officers at the beginning of the war. It was impossible that all of these men would be found suited for the places they were appointed to, and in the good judgment of Congress and the War Department boards were commissioned to sit and decide upon the fitness of these men for these places. They have been ordered for trial before this board by their commanding officers, and they had to come before them and stand trial. I do not doubt that some mistakes have been made in the decisions of these boards. I know that I, as executive officer for a short time, had the appointment of men who were commissioned in the National Guard. I know that I appointed men in time of peace, because they had been chosen by their different commands, that I would not have wanted to see lead their men in battle in such a great war as we have just gone through. These boards have passed upon the men who have been in command, and that is what they were established for.

But what I object to is the imputation that there has been unfairness, or some sort of chicanery, in their actions. But of that there has been no proof brought before Congress. If I had been an officer in the Army and had been tried before one of these boards and they decided that I was not fit to lead men into battle, and I think in view of my military experience that would be a correct decision, I believe I could sit down and write as good a letter that injusice had been done me as has been read here. And so the thing that I protest against is the constant attempts being made by reading the complaints of men who have been passed upon by a competent military authority that they have been unfairly used and not justly treated without submitting any disinterested proof of unjust action.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman does not mean to leave the imputation that I have read a single letter from any man who has been illtreated? My letters were from men still in the service, who have written about men who had been illtreated, some of whom can not now speak for themselves, because they are buried in France.

May I say this to the gentleman, that since I made my first speech on this floor with reference to the conditions at Blois, I believe that the commander in chief of the Expeditionary Forces did not know of all the conditions, and that since that speech a brigadier general and three colonels to whom I referred on the 14th of January in this Hall have been restored to their command last week by order of Gen. Pershing?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Which shows that we have the right man at the head of the United States Army. I want to say in reply to the gentleman, if I am permitted, that it was not the man who suffered the judgment that wrote the letter. Well, if I had a friend that I thought had been unfairly used, I could write as good a letter in regard to him as has been read here. So after all the thing comes down to this, that this board has had a disagreeable but a necessary duty to perform, and I think the performance of our Army shows that we had men ready to perform their duty in France.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all debate on the paragraph has been exhausted. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LARSEN] will not exercise his right, I will exercise it. We have been now three hours making no progress on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. DENT. I hope the committee will let us read awhile.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section. I hope the gentleman will let some Members be heard a little while longer.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection, but let us read the bill a little while; let us make a litle progress.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENCIES OF THE ARMY.

For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the Office of the Chief of Staff; for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, including the employment of translators and exclusive of all other personal services in the War Department or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, District of Columbia, or in the Army at large, but impossible to be anticipated or classified; to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of War, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, including the payment of a per diem allowance not to exceed $4, in lieu of subsistence, to employees of the War Department traveling on official business outside of the District of Columbia and away from their designated posts, $100,000.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to make plain what I think was the view of the committee touching this bill. Under the Stone amendment of an appropriation bill, every man now in the Army will be discharged on the declaration of peace. Within four months they have to be returned to this country; but on the declaration of peace, as I understand it, every man that is now in the Army is discharged.

Mr. DENT. Except those who——

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I am coming to that—with the single exception of a few men who enlisted prior to the war whose terms of enlistment have not yet expired. The testimony before the committee was to the effect that there remain now but very few men of that character, so if we do not pass some legislation providing for an Army in this appropriation bill, immediately upon the declaration of peace we will find ourselves without an Army.

Therefore it is entirely impossible to view the fears of the gentleman from Arkansas that we intend to keep anybody in Europe contrary to their wishes, because their terms of enlistment expire with the declaration of peace. Another thing: The national-defense act, upon the declaration of peace, immediately comes back into full operation, except so far as the pending bill provides otherwise. The Overman Act, by its own limitation, ceases to operate with the emergency. It is true there is some reference to the emergency act of May 18, 1917, but that provision has reference more to the appointment of temporary officers than it has to the provision for enlisted men, because all enlistments must be voluntary. Those who want to go into the Regular Army, which will be limited by the national-defense act to 175,000 men, will enlist for three years, and those who are to be enlisted under the emergency act of May 18, 1917, will be enlisted under the one-year provision. It would be a very dangerous matter if before peace has been declared, before peace has actually been established, we were to leave this country without an adequate Army to deal with any possible contingency that might arise.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Is there anything now to prevent voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army up to 175,000 men?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes. Under the provisions of the act of May 18, 1917, all enlistments from that time on became for the war only, so that no one can enlist at the present time for anything except for the emergency. The very purpose of this act is to give the right to receive under voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army for three years such as desire to enlist therein to the numbers defined in the national-defense act and to provide a temporary additional Army by the one-year enlistments.

Mr. HARDY. Has the gentleman thought of this solution—to reinstate the act of 1916?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The law reinstates itself. It never has been repealed, but we have to provide for voluntary enlistments both in the regular and temporary Army, and that is what we are trying to do in this bill. Under the old law it was three years, and under this provision we are simply providing for a temporary force for one year after the Regular Army has been enlisted. Therefore we change the national-defense act so as to allow this temporary and this additional force by an enlistment for one year only.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me that it would clear the atmosphere a good deal if the committee would authorize reinstatement of the law of 1916.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Why reinstate that which is in full force and vigor? It has only been suspended by laws which expire upon the declaration of peace.

Mr. HARDY. And then a further provision authorizing the call for volunteers for the occupation of Europe as long as it is needed.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. We do not care for any occupation of Europe.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a bill on the calendar providing for that very thing that should have been called up long ago.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. This does it. This is the very purpose of this provision, instead of having an independent act, which would take some time to get through the Congress. We have placed it here as a rider on this bill for that purpose, providing for the reinstatement of voluntary enlistment for a three-year term for the Regular Army and one year for a temporary Army.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The gentleman states that if this law is not passed we would have no Army. Would we not have the Regular Army?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; except for a very skeleton force, because of the expiration of the enlistment of the soldiers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, do I understand under the War Department regulations, or the law itself, that notwithstanding a man may have been in the Regular Army before the National Army was raised, if he had been transferred to the National Army, when he gets his discharge from that Army he is out of the Army entirely?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. And must reenlist in the Army in order to get back into it.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The gentleman will understand that all enlistments prior to 1917 expired within three years, and a number of them had very nearly run out when the war was declared. There are very few of these soldiers now in the Army.

Mr. BARKLEY. And many of them have been transferred to the National Army.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. And the testimony before the committee was that there would not be a handful of an Army if we did not have this provision here for reenlistment. Another thing about this bill is that it only appropriates for 500,000 men. Gentlemen have asked on the floor whether this is to be in addition to the men over in Europe or if its to be supplementary to them. We appropriate for only 500,000 men altogether. We could not provide for an army over in Europe and an army here, supplementary to each other, because the entire appropriation is only for 500,000 men. The men now in the Army in Europe are virtually all released by the very terms of their enlistment upon the declaration of peace.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman stated awhile ago, in response to an inquiry, that under the act of May 18, 1917, voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army were stopped.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. What is the gentleman's opinion of this provision of the act——

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I do not know whether it is in that act or in an independent act.

Mr. WINGO. I think this is the one—section 7 of the act of May 18, 1917—and upon this language I desire to get the gentleman's opinion:

> All enlistments, including those in the Regular Army Reserves, which are in force on the date of the approval of this act and which would terminate during the emergency, shall continue in force during the emergency unless sooner discharged, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to shorten the period of any existing enlistments.

Does that mean that they can hold the men who, say, enlisted a few days before this act was passed?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; I think they can.

Mr. WINGO. For the full period?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Before April 1, but the testimony before the committee was that there were very few men now who could be held under the original enlistment, which was before April 1, 1916. I am not prepared to say the provision to which the gentleman refers is the act I have in mind, but the existing law is that all enlistments after April, 1916, are only for the war.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman gives it as his opinion that in order to enlist men in the regular standing Army there has to be affirmative action by Congress?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Because in this act we stopped voluntary enlistments in the Regular Army?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I do not know whether it is in that act.

Mr. WINGO. Some act?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, the gentleman from Virginia has made a very clear statement of this bill. I would like to make this suggestion: There is nothing in the law that stops enlistment, but there is something in the act that fixes the period.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. That is it.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield a little further?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Beginning section 7, the act to which the gentleman refers reads as follows:

> That the qualifications and conditions for voluntary enlistment as herein provided shall be the same as those prescribed by existing law for enlistments in the Regular Army, except that recruits shall be between the ages of 18 and 40 years, both inclusive, at the time of their enlistment, and such enlistment shall be for the period of the emergency, unless sooner discharged.

Is that the law to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. That is the provision to which I referred.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I will.

Mr. KAHN. My colleague will recall in this very proposed provision we also take care of that further condition permitting enlistment under the Regular Army act that a man who served four years in the reserves is wiped out by this proposed legislation.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes. I want to say another thing, gentlemen, and that is that under the operation of this law we go right back to the national defense act and the General Staff has only such powers as are conferred by this act and consistent with the national defense act, so there is no ground for complaint. This bill confers——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. My own position was that we ought to get back to this national defense act for the standing Army in peace just as soon as practicable [applause], but I for myself am utterly opposed to stripping the War Department of the necessary permission that it thinks necessary to maintain during the period of uncertainty and of unrest. Now, the question comes up here, what are we going to do? For my part I advocated that we simply appropriate for 500,000 men, and then let the defense act operate, but after the hearing and statements before the committee I thought the wise thing to do was to do what the War Department asked us to do; that was to provide for a temporary force for a temporary period and a temporary enlistment for the period of one year. We must bear in mind that the National Guard, which the national defense act provided as a supplementary force, has been wiped out. [Applause.] We provide this temporary Army by a temporary appropriation, by a limited enlistment period, under language which defines its temporary character, and this will give us an opportunity to recruit the Regular Army to the strength authorized by the national defense act, and will give the States the opportunity to reorganize their National Guard, for which liberal appropriations have been made.

Congressmen will assume a very grave responsibility who deny to the War Department and the President the Army deemed necessary to bridge over this time. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, on January 28 I presented to the House an order issued in the name of the commanding general at Camp McArthur which in substance forbade officers and enlisted men to attend the same social affair. Again, on the 7th of this month I referred to the matter and read a letter from the Secretary of War, in which he stated that the order had been revoked. During the last discussion of the matter the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] interrupted me and said this:

> I want to commend the gentleman for getting this order of Gen. Buck out of the way, and I want to ask him if he would not go further and get the other regulation out of the way that makes a distinction between the private soldier and the officer in allowing the officer to give social attention to our nurses in uniform and forbidding the private soldiers to do likewise.

That statement of the gentleman from Texas excited laughter in the House, laughter of incredulity, and indeed I myself was inclined to smile at it because I did not dream that it had been well made or was founded upon actual facts. But I have to-day received a letter which is a verification of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas.

I received this morning an anonymous letter—of course all public men receive them occasionally, usually they are abusive—but we know they are from cowards and we pay no attention to them. But this letter was written on the stationery of the Y. M. C. A. at Camp Gordon and was signed "A Committee of Soldiers," and though no names were signed to it I know they were not cowards, for I understand why they could not sign their names. I am going to read it to the House:

> CAMP GORDON, GA., February 9, 1919.
> Hon. GEORGE HUDDLESTON, M. C.,
> Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SIR: Your speech of January 28, rapping at the system of caste in the Army, is certainly to the point and at the right time.
>
> At present down here in Camp Gordon there is an order to the same effect, issued by the colonel commanding the base hospital, stating that nurses (female) are not to speak to enlisted men.
>
> If only some more Members of Congress would only keep up the good work that you are doing to eliminate the caste system from the Army. It is no wonder there is Bolshevism in this world—it was just that same caste that caused a revolution in Russia. The only way to keep the soldiers from becoming socialists is to do away with that caste.
>
> Your good work in Congress is certainly appreciated by the soldiers; a few more men with your good judgment would certainly help the soldiers.
> Respectfully, yours,
> A COMMITTEE OF SOLDIERS.

Mr. Chairman, I can understand how soldiers would not care to write even to a Member of Congress a letter to the slightest degree reflecting upon the officer class, particularly their own commanding officer, because we all know well what would happen to those soldiers had they signed their names and the matter become known to the commanding officer. It is a shame to the spirit of our Army and violative of true American ideals that brave men serving their country as soldiers should be forced to resort to anonymous letters in order to present their grievances. But we all know what the situation is. These soldiers did not dare to sign their names.

This letter verifies the statement made by the gentleman from Texas the other day, and I believe such an order has been posted at Camp Gordon. I am hoping that if it is not true the Army authorities will take occasion to deny that, as they did the statement of the order at Camp McArthur. This is a very trifling matter in itself; it amounts to little, as I said the other day, but it bespeaks the spirit of the Army. Now, we know that the private soldier is just as much a gentleman as the officer—a gentleman in the true sense of the word—as brave, kind, self-sacrificing, and true, for those are the qualities of the real gentleman. We all know that these nurses could well afford to associate with enlisted men, and we all know that the reason for this order is the contamination which it was feared that these women would suffer from such association—was "social" contamination, so that thereafter they would not be good enough for the officers to mix with socially. The purpose of the order was to build up a wall around them and say to the enlisted men, "This is our private preserve, you shall not trespass thereon."

It is a part of patriotism not to indulge in time of war in general criticism of our Army, but even in time of war just and proper criticism, which will raise its standards and will give to it a higher morale, certainly would be justified. But let us remember that the war is over and this is in time of peace. There is nothing sacred about the Army. It is merely one of the institutions of our country. Of course, I know the militarists would like, even in times of peace, to have us bow our faces in the dust as the Army goes by, and to salute a man wearing straps on his shoulders with reverence and awe. That is the spirit. But that is no part for the patriot. It is rather a part for another individual whom I do not like to name in this House.

But now is a time of peace, and it seems to me we ought to correct these evils that we recognize as being in our Army. A strange thing about it is that those who seem to desire that the Army shall be regarded as sacrosanct, and that a man should reverently take off his hat when he goes into its presence, have little respect for some of our other institutions. That class has no respect for Congress. They have not even respected Congress while the war was on. They have not feared they would break down the morale of Congress, but more than ever have they taken advantage of the opportunity to point out the faults and the mistakes of Congress and its Members. Congress certainly is higher and should be more exempt from criticism than the Army. We are here as the representatives of the American people, chosen by their suffrage, and have some small dignity because of our representative capacity. But the Army has no such position. It is merely a collection of individuals brought together for a certain purpose, and in time of peace its duties are not nearly so important as the duties of many other people.

I would rather have respect for the great army of American workingmen, going each day with the rising of the sun, with little tin buckets in their hands, to do a day's honest work, and to bring home some wages to feed their wives and children—I would rather look upon the labor of America as a great and worthy institution before which every patriotic citizen would take off his hat and bow in respect. I would rather regard any class of people, following any kind of peaceful occupation, producing something, doing something that is worth while, going to and fro in the world, engaged in commerce, in the practice of a profession, in doing something that is useful to mankind, or which adds to the beauty or welfare of the world—I would rather regard any of those occupations with respect than the soldier's occupation in time of peace.

Let us lay aside any thought that we may have that the Army is above criticism. It is not. Whether soldiers are generals or privates, they are men like you and me. Many of the officers are engaged in the business merely as a profession, which is a loafing job in time of peace, as it might be considered, not doing anything useful, except perhaps giving a little of their time to fitting themselves for a duty that may never come and can come only when our Nation is in danger.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All debate on the amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment on page 2, line 11, by striking out all of the words after the word "War."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 11, strike out, after the word "War," the words "and for such purposes as he may deem proper."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes in which to discuss the amendment, notwithstanding the order of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to these words and to the fact that similar words appear in a number of other paragraphs, each paragraph providing a very large amount of money for certain specific purposes, but placing it all at the disposal of the Secretary of War to be used just as he may please.

I submit that is not the proper way to legislate. No paragraph should contain those words. If the committee preparing the bill—and if the committee does its duty, it prepares the bill and does not permit somebody else to prepare it and place the bill in its hands and insist it shall be passed as presented—the committee that prepares the bill will designate specifically the purposes for which the money is to be used and will not find it necessary to use those words which I consider very improper, words that authorize the Secretary to spend the money just as he pleases.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is now talking about the contingent fund?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am talking about this item and calling the attention of the committee to the fact that similar words are used in a number of other paragraphs in this bill.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contend that that is unusual language which is used in that place?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I insist that it is improper language to be used in any place, and I insist that the committee should perform its duty and specify the purposes for which the money is to be used. It ought not to give the Secretary of War or any Cabinet officer or head of a bureau carte blanche to use large sums of money. During my service in Congress I have noticed that this practice of leaving the expenditure of money to the discretion of public officers has grown up and is growing alarmingly. There is a tendency on the part of committees and on the part of the House to shirk their duty. They are not willing to take the time and give proper attention to the preparation of the bills. They write "So and so shall be done in the discretion of the Secretary of War," and "So and so shall be done and the money shall be expended in the discretion" of some officer named. That is a shirking of duty. It is not a proper way to legislate. And we are growing more and more into the habit of accepting bills as they come from some one in a bureau or a department, instead of being willing to give the time necessary and put forth the effort necessary to draw properly the bills ourselves.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman's amendment were adopted there would be no traveling allowance whatever in the bill.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If that relates to traveling allowance, why did not the committee put it in as such, and not permit the Secretary of War to have $100,000 for buying automobiles or motor boats or airships or something of that kind? The paragraph as it stands permits the use of money for any purpose in the discretion or according to the sweet will of the Secretary. In the next paragraph I notice, on the next page, there are the same words. There is $200,000 appropriated for "such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper." Those words run all through this bill, aggregating millions of dollars. All through this bill are provisions to the effect that the money shall be expended just as the Secretary of War may deem proper.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. In a moment. If the money is intended to be expended for traveling expenses, the committee should write it in the bill, so that we will know what the money is to be expended for, and take away the discretion of the Secretary of War. If it were always wisely used, that might not be necessary; but from my experience with departments and bureaus I know that frequently the laws are distorted and sometimes the money is misspent.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has had much longer service in Congress than I have had, but I ask the gentleman if that provision has not been in the law ever since he has been in Congress?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. It may have been in the Army bill, but not in bills that I have had to do with; but wherever found it is improper.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of the Army War College, being for the purchase of the necessary stationery; typewriters, and exchange of same; office, toilet, and desk furniture; textbooks; books of reference; scientific and professional papers and periodicals; printing and binding; maps; police utensils; employment of temporary, technical, or special services; and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, including $25 per month additional to regular compensation to chief clerk of division for superintendence of the War College Building, $9,000.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Mr. Chairman, during the colloquy this morning between the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and myself it was developed that the War Department estimates that it will not be able to demobilize the conscripted army now in France and in this country until about July 1, 1920. This bill provides for a volunteer army of 500,000 men during the fiscal year from June 30, 1919, to July 1, 1920. Therefore, if this bill passes without amendment we will have two armies, the present army and the new army.

Now, I believe that we should make some provision for demobilizing the conscripted army before the end of the fiscal year 1920, or that we should not provide for a volunteer army of 500,000 men. Clearly the conscripted army should be demobilized.

Therefore, as I announced this morning, I shall offer at the proper time an amendment, which I desire to call to the attention of the committee; and, having spoken to the chairman about it a little while ago, I will furnish him with a copy of the amendment after I have read it for the information of the House. The amendment is as follows: On page 58, line 23, after the word "prescribe," add the following:

Provided, That all men who enlisted in the Army for the period of the war and all men inducted into the Army under the so-called selective-service act and all officers commissioned for the period of the war shall be discharged not later than July 1, 1919: Provided further, That any such soldier shall be immediately discharged upon the filing of an application with his immediate commanding officer, whether he be at present in service overseas or within the United States; that said soldier shall be discharged upon the filing of said application and shall continue to receive the same pay and allowances thereafter to the date of and be furnished transportation from the point where he is released from the Army to the point of his enlistment or induction: Provided further, That all such men discharged under the foregoing provision shall be granted the opportunity to enlist in the Volunteer Army under the provisions of this section until the voluntary enlistments provided for herein shall be filled.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCULLOCH. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In what place does the gentleman intend to offer that?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I thought on page 58, line 23, after the word "prescribe," would be the proper place.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCULLOCH. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman seriously contend that 60 days after the passage of this act we should demobilize and discharge from the service our entire Army, so that we would be without any Army whatsoever, regardless of our obligations, 60 days after the passage of this act?

Mr. McCULLOCH. The gentleman was not listening to me carefully, else he would have known that I never intended or suggested such a thing.

Mr. TILSON. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. McCULLOCH. What I said was that if you are going to provide for a volunteer army of 500,000 men, you should provide for the demobilization of the conscripted army. You should not hold, nor authorize or permit the War Department to hold, the conscripted army to the end of the fiscal year 1920 or for the time covering the period of enlistment of the volunteer army. Why leave it to the Secretary of War to enlist 500,000 volunteers and still keep an army of 2,000,000 conscripted men? The amendment only reaches those who enlisted for the period of the war and the conscripted men. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] says that we only need the 500,000 men provided for in this bill.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman means that they shall be discharged after we get the 500,000 men?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I mean that the War Department should go ahead at once and provide its volunteer Army which it says it needs, and then demobilize and release from the Army the men who were taken from their vocations of peace and were put into the Army for the period of the war. The war is in effect over now. It may take the peace conference six months or eight months yet to complete its labors, and it may take the Senate six months more to decide upon the treaty of peace and have it signed. These boys should be released and discharged as soon as possible.

Mr. DENT. I understand the gentleman is not offering that amendment now?

Mr. McCULLOCH. No; I am discussing it. Now, under the conscription law these men can be held, as I understand it, for four months after the signing of the treaty of peace. That may mean that the conscripted boys will have to remain in the Army for a year and a half or two years. This committee brings in a bill providing for a volunteer Army of 500,000 men for the next fiscal year, or from June 30, 1919, to July 1, 1920. Then the gentleman from California, on this side, comes forward and says we are not going to be able to demobilize the conscripted Army until the end of the next fiscal year, or July 1, 1920. I say it is absurd to think of raising the volunteer Army and still keep the conscript Army; but the best advice we have from the War Department is that they are going to keep them, if they see fit, until July, 1920. Now, my experience with this department has been that the officers are reluctant to let go of the men. A lot of the officers have better jobs now than they ever had before in their lives, and after the Army is demobilized they will have to go back to private life and a lot of them are going to be working for the privates.

So they are interested in keeping this Army business up as long as they can. I have a constituent at one of the camps who was making $15,000 a year as a physician, and who is now engaged in the important work of signing the name of a major to papers already approved, work that any boy would be able to do. Yet that man is deprived of his discharge, or the approval of his commanding officer which would enable him to be discharged, because they say that he is necessary to the service. We all know that such cases are numerous. They do not want to let them go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of that time the debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded.

Mr. WINGO. I want to offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto shall terminate. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, I have a bona fide amendment that I should like to offer.

Mr. DENT. Make it seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman modifies his request to seven minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I would not want to be a party to any attempt to hamper the War Department in its efforts to demobilize these troops. I understand that the question of transportation enters into it, and all that sort of thing; but I believe that in order to be consistent Congress ought to go on record as being in favor of the demobilization of the conscript Army, and that a provision should be written into this law which will result in demobilization. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] says he is going to suggest an amendment; but the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama as he made it to me still leaves it up to the War Department to decide when it will act, and I think they have reasons of their own for keeping these boys in the Army just as long as they can. A lot of them, at least, have their own reasons. I believe Congress ought to be consistent, and that we should not provide for a volunteer Army of 500,000 men unless we intend to go about raising them, and the War Department ought to go about raising them. They should provide the volunteer Army, and then they should be required to demobilize the conscript Army and let the boys come home and go back into the various positions and pursuits of peace from which they were taken. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCULLOCH. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman understand that it was the theory of this legislation, as I understand it, that practically every man who enlists under this will come out of the present Army? He will have to be demobilized or transferred into the new Army.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Why, certainly, if they raise the Army; but they do not have to raise it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They will be demobilizing the one Army while they are raising the other.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Let them go ahead and demobilize. The way to resume is to resume, and the way to demobilize is to demobilize. This bill does not provide for demobilization. We are providing for raising 500,000 volunteers, but we are not providing for releasing these boys in the conscript army, and there is no law that will make the War Department do it until four months after the signing of the treaty of peace.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This bill provides for it.

Mr. McCULLOCH. It does not provide for anything of the kind.

The provisions in this bill, which are to be found in the legislative section, on pages 57, 58, and 59, relative to the organization and strength of the Army, provide for a force of approximately 500,000 men for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1919, and ending June 30, 1920. The declaration is made in the provisions that such organization shall be "temporary." It is further provided that "the enlisted force for the Regular Army shall be raised by voluntary enlistments for periods of three years, and for the additional forces herein authorized by voluntary enlistment for the period of one year." Under existing laws the conscripted army, which, according to my recollection, it has been estimated during this debate numbers approximately 2,000,000 men, a large proportion of whom are now in Europe, can be held for service by the War Department until the proclamation of the treaty of peace has been promulgated. They can be held during all the negotiations at the peace table, during the discussions of the Senate preparatory to ratification, during all the complicated procedure prior to the issuance of the proclamation, which anybody knows will consume many months.

Some have estimated that it will take more than a year to carry out all of these complicated negotiations and formalities. During all of that time under existing law the War Department can hold these boys for service. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], the ranking Member on the Committee on Military Affairs on this side of the Chamber, made the statement this morning that the War Department did not expect to have the conscripted Army demobilized much before July 1, 1920. So that from the most authoritative source upon this floor next to the chairman of the committee, we are informed that this process of demobilization of the conscripted Army is going to take a year and four months or the entire fiscal year for which the volunteer force of approximately 500,000 men is provided in this bill. The gentleman from California in response to my question during the debate this morning, said that this force of 500,000 men was all that was necessary to make up the army of occupation. Now, this bill provides for the force they say they need, but there is no provision in it whatever requiring the demobilization of the conscripted Army, so that unless some amendment is adopted, the War Department is going to have a force of 2,500,000 men that they can do with exactly as they please and will not be forced to demobilize any part of it, if they do not see fit to do so until the treaty of peace has been proclaimed. We are asked to rely upon the statement of members of the committee who do not even say that they are speaking by authority of the War Department, but who have been content with the declaration that they have been told that the conscripted Army will be demobilized "as speedily as possible," and in the next breath the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] indicates what he means by "as speedily as possible" by saying that it will probably take until July, 1920. Now, if these soldiers are not needed and it has clearly appeared from this debate that they are not needed and that the force provided in this bill will be sufficient, then this conscripted Army should be immediately demobilized or as soon as it is possible to do so, and men who have patriotically responded to the call to the colors and who have done their part when their services were needed should not be required to depend upon the whim of some Army officers as to whether or not they will be relieved from service. These boys should be permitted to go home, if they are not needed, and it is the duty of this House which passed the legislation that took them from their homes, their avocations and their schools and placed them in the Army to serve during the war, to see to it that they are released and not leave these boys subject to the petty whims of Army officers, in order to get the justice that is rightfully due them.

The first section of my amendment provides:

Provided, That all men who enlisted in the Army for the period of the war and all men inducted into the Army under the so-called selective-service act, and all officers commissioned for the period of the war, shall be discharged not later than July 1, 1919.

There should be written into this bill a definite provision in regard to the demobilization of the conscripted Army.

Whatever the provision is, it should be definite and certain, and the War Department should be forced to live up to it.

The next section in the amendment only differs from the present orders of the War Department in that it takes away from the commanding officer the opportunity which the present regulations afford for him to play Army politics in the discharge of men. The regulations now provide that men shall be discharged upon application "if in the discretion of the commanding officer" such action should be taken. These conscripted soldiers should be discharged upon their application and permitted to come home if they desire to do so, and the officer should be required to fill their places by volunteers. The second paragraph of the amendment is as follows:

Provided further, That any such soldier shall be immediately discharged upon the filing of an application with his immediate commanding officer, whether he be at present in service overseas or within the United States, that said soldier shall be discharged upon the filing of said application and shall continue to receive the same pay and allowance thereafter to the date of, and be furnished transportation from the point where he is released from the Army, to the point of his enlistment or induction.

I feel that the foregoing provision is only just and fair to the soldier. If he wants to get out of the Army, since the war is over, he should be released upon the filing of his application and not be subject to the politics of the Army and the whims of commanding officers.

The last provision in the amendment is as follows:

Provided further, That all such men discharged in accordance with the foregoing provisions shall be granted the opportunity to enlist in the Regular Army, if he so desires, under the provisions of this section until the voluntary enlistments provided for herein shall have been filled.

If a boy who has been in the conscripted army wants to remain in the Army as a volunteer, he should have the opportunity to do so, and in my opinion he should have a preference.

Every Member of Congress is besieged with requests from soldiers, and the parents and friends of soldiers, to get them out of the Army. If this amendment is adopted, it ought to solve the problem, and the Congress at least will have done its part toward assisting our boys in getting out of the Army and back to the avocations of peace. Of course, the Army officers do not want to be shorn of any power; they want to be able to exercise their discretion, but unless the War Department can show reasons for holding these boys they should be demobilized and discharged, and it is up to this Congress before it authorizes another army to know something about what is going to be done with the present Army, and in the face of the statements made by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] to-day upon this floor the conscripted army is not necessary, and the force of 500,000 men provided for in this bill will meet all the requirements.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in lines 19 and 20, page 2, to strike out the words "typewriters and exchange of same; office, toilet, and desk furniture."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO: Page 2, line 19, strike out the words "typewriters, and exchange of same; office, toilet, and desk furniture."

Mr. WINGO. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee what provision, if any, is attempted to be worked out by which this furniture, including surplus typewriters which they now have in the War Department, can be utilized for these different branches as they may be needed?

Mr. DENT. I do not know about that.

Mr. WINGO. My information is from a Member of the House that we have a surplus of typewriters and desks, and I would like to ask if the War Department has authorized the sale of typewriters and desks?

Mr. DENT. That is my information.

Mr. WINGO. My information is that they are selling typewriters at $10 apiece; good typewriters. Instead of the War Department going ahead and disposing of them, why not work out some plan by which the typewriters can be distributed among those departments that need them, instead of authorizing them to buy new ones?

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. I am willing to accept a proviso that in the event that there is a surplus of typewriters in one branch they can be transferred to another. This is the language that has been carried in the bill for some time.

Mr. WINGO. If my amendment is adopted, I shall, of course, offer the same amendment at the proper places throughout the bill, because the bill is full of other provisions of a like character. The excuse for this is that it has always been carried. The fact is that they have been spending money like drunken sailors for office furniture—they have thousands and thousands, and I speak advisedly when I say thousands, of desks that they do not need. I am told by one Member of the House that he told his secretary to go and buy six typewriters at $10 apiece. That is an absolute waste of money. We ought to stop it and ought to turn this expensive furniture and office equipment over to other departments that need it, instead of sacrificing it and giving it away. If my amendment is adopted, I intend to offer it all through the bill, and then let it be transferred from one department to another where it is needed.

Mr. STAFFORD. They have already done that.

Mr. WINGO. Then why carry this here?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman had yielded to me, I would have told him.

Mr. WINGO. Then I regret not yielding to the gentleman. The gentleman is in favor of my amendment, is he not?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it would be a hardship on the service to strike these words out.

Mr. WINGO. All right, if you have provided for it; but where is the provision carried?

Mr. STAFFORD. The President has issued an order, at the suggestions of the Committee on Appropriations, providing for transferring all unnecessary supplies that will not be needed by the departments to the control of the General Supplies Committee of the Treasury, and that that order also has a prohibition that no such supplies shall be purchased except under authority of the General Supplies Committee.

Mr. WINGO. Where are these typewriters and supplies being sold?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is news to me, that any supplies are being sold, because under the presidential order promulgated in December last, when it was first called to his attention, this order was issued.

Mr. WINGO. Well, Mr. Chairman, I hope my amendment will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were 19 ayes and 22 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingent expenses of the Military Intelligence Division, General Staff Corps, including the purchase of law books, professional books of reference; subscription to newspapers and periodicals; drafting and messenger service; and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad; the cost of special instruction at home and abroad, and in maintenance of students and attachés; and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, $200,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, some days ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] called the attention of the House to an order, purporting to have been issued by authority of Maj. Gen. Buck, at Camp MacArthur, Tex., in reference to the attendance of officers and enlisted men at social functions. While I felt at the time that there must be some mistake about the matter on account of my belief that the order was absolutely at variance with the character and conduct of Gen. Buck, I did not feel warranted to speak about the matter until the facts could be ascertained. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] was good enough at a later date to place in the RECORD a statement of the Chief of Staff to the effect that the obnoxious order which purported to have been issued on the 6th of January was countermanded by Gen. Buck on January 8, just as soon as his attention was called to its existence.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDWELL] on January 29, 1919, addressed to Gen. Buck the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., January 29, 1919.

Maj. Gen. BUCK, United States Army,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GEN. BUCK: I inclose herewith clipping from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday.

I am a member, as you probably know, of the Military Committee of the House and am anxious to know whether or not you caused the order to be published as therein stated; and if you did, by what authority, and what was the occasion therefor?

I am informed by several officers in the Army that this is in violation of the rules and regulations, and that if such an order was published, you are liable to punishment by a court-martial.

Before taking the matter up in the committee, I am writing this letter in the hope that you will be able to explain the circumstance.

Yours, sincerely,

CHAS. POPE CALDWELL, M. C.

The gentleman from New York received the following reply:

HEADQUARTERS CAMP MACARTHUR, TEX.,
February 10, 1919.

From: B. B. Buck, major general, United States Army, commanding.
To: Hon. CHARLES POPE CALDWELL, United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. (through The Adjutant General of the Army).
Subject: General Orders, No. 1, Headquarters Camp MacArthur, Tex.

1. I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 29, 1919. It appears to have been delayed in the mails. I hasten to answer.

2. The order in question was not authorized by me. I knew nothing of its preparation or contemplated issue until I saw it in the public print. Without waiting a moment, I hastened to my office at camp headquarters and summoned my executive officer, his assistant, the camp adjutant, and the provost marshal to come to my office.

These officers being assembled, I showed them the order and demanded who wrote it and by whose authority it was published, at the same time stating the fact that the subject had never been brought to my attention. Also, I repeated what they all knew full well, that it was only in matters of routine administration in which the policy of the camp was well known and which I had already approved that the staff was authorized to issue orders without first getting my approval. I called emphatic attention to the fact that this order did not have my approval; that it in no way reflected my sentiment or my wish; that no greater error could possibly be committed by the staff than had been committed in this case; that this order, by its inexcusable provisions, had at one stroke made me out as insincere in what I had said to my command in my Christmas address or as an overbearing snob, both of which I disclaimed. I then repeated, "Who is responsible for this order?"

Two of my staff, the executive officer and the provost marshal, at once desired to take the blame for its preparation. Whereupon I said, "However many may have been engaged in its preparation, there was only one who could be responsible for its issue—the executive officer. It is the executive officer who is responsible to me for its issue. It is wrong in substance, contrary to my wish, practice, and sentiments, and must be immediately revoked."

I thereupon turned to the camp adjutant and directed that the order be immediately revoked, and that messengers be dispatched to recover every possible copy of the order which had been distributed. This was done by the issuance of General Orders, No. 2, Camp MacArthur, January 8, 1919, copy herewith.

3. I regret exceedingly the issue of this ill-advised, unauthorized, unnecessary, harmful, un-American document. But its issue was not foreseen by me, had never entered by mind, and came as a complete surprise to me. It dealt me a severe blow, which I was powerless to parry, and at once placed me in the unenviable position of being forced to discredit my staff or acknowledge myself to be a snob.

4. During the few hours it was in effect, so far as I can learn, there was no action taken under its provisions, and consequently, so far as this camp is concerned, the order has operated to the disadvantage of only one of its members—myself.

5. Had the order expressed by views or my wish, or had I had an opportunity of passing upon it before its issue, I should have stood upon it. Under the circumstances I feel it my duty to repudiate it.

B. B. BUCK.

Accompanying the letter was the following order:

HEADQUARTERS, CAMP MACARTHUR,
Waco, Tex., January 8, 1919.

General Orders, No. 2.

I. Paragraph 1, General Orders, No. 1, current series, these headquarters, which prohibits officers and enlisted men attending the same social affairs, is hereby revoked.

All organization and separate unit commanders, this camp, will have all copies of paragraph 1, General Orders, No. 1, c. s. these headquarters, which have been furnished them returned to camp headquarters immediately.

By command of Maj. Gen. Buck.

W. H. WOOLWORTH,
Major, Infantry, United States Army,
Acting Executive Officer.

It will be noted that the gentleman from Alabama complained of the objectionable and offensive order on January 28, 1919, and that Gen. Buck had revoked the order on January 8, before knowledge of the order had reached either the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] or the War Department. This fact should be sufficient evidence that Gen. Buck neither authorized nor had knowledge of the contents of the order until after its issuance, and that he at once vacated and recalled it.

For fear that some erroneous impression may be entertained by Members as to the personal character and sincerity of Gen. Buck, I desire to say that it was my privilege to serve under him as a cadet many years ago, and I believe I know something of the kind of stuff of which he is made. I learned to know him well and intimately, and I can assure the House that he is an excellent man and a fine soldier. He is a native of the State of Mississippi and was appointed to West Point from the State of Texas and has been in the Army a great many years. He is a man of the highest integrity and character.

In 1898 he was a major in the Second Texas Infantry Volunteers. I was an enlisted man in that regiment and I have personal knowledge that he then displayed consideration and respect for enlisted men.

Gen. Buck went to France with the first contingent of Regular troops. He was in the First Division, whose gallant conduct and behavior have been so well discussed to-day by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

At this point I desire to insert in the RECORD an article appearing in the New York Times under date of February 9, 1919, which refers to the operations of the First Division, as follows:

[From New York Times, Sunday, February 9, 1919.]

COURAGE, DASH, AND VICTORY IN FIRST DIVISION'S RECORD—STORY OF AMERICAN REGULARS WHO LED THE WAY TO FRANCE AND WHOSE CASUALTIES OF ALL KINDS REACHED 23,974, INCLUDING 715 OFFICERS.

(By Maj. Gen. A. W. Greely, United States Army, Retired.)

There is no division of the American Expeditionary Forces that has failed to display in the face of the enemy the qualities of courage, discipline, and efficiency which are acknowledged attributes of the American Army. It is natural and commendable that war correspondents and local newspapers should loudly and proudly acclaim the achievements of the military organizations identified with and formed in their own communities. It would be an injustice to the rank and file of our citizen soldiery if their own sections failed to display pride, especially in the combat divisions.

Thus New England honors the Twenty-sixth Division, New York the Twenty-seventh and Seventy-seventh, Pennsylvania the Twenty-eighth, Michigan and Wisconsin the Thirty-second, Kansas and Missouri the Thirty-fifth, Ohio the Thirty-seventh, and the Pacific States the Ninety-first, to mention only those of greatest losses.

It should be borne in mind, however, that certain organizations are entitled to general recognition for their soldierly merits, as they present to the world by the men of their ranks a thoroughly homogeneous army, gathered from all sections and all races of our composite Nation. These troops are of the so-called Regular Army, whose ranks are now filled almost to a man by volunteers for service only in the great war. It is not generally known that the war casualties of these organizations—battle and disease—have depleted their ranks from 25 to 100 per cent of their original personnel. These vast gaps have been filled by drafts from the replacement divisions of selected men, thus making the Regulars truly national organizations.

That the public may appreciate the fiber and metal of these representative troops, formed by such a national consolidation, it appears desirable and of timely interest that the achievements of a typical regular division should be briefly, if somewhat inadequately, described.

For this purpose the First Division is selected, not that its bravery is superior, its discipline better, or its morale higher than mark the others, but because it was the first division to reach France, first to serve in trench warfare, first to fire a hostile shell, first to lose a man, first to capture a prisoner, first to repel a German raid, first to man an independent sector, and first to recapture a town (Cantigny) and hold it against all counterattacks.

THE OFFICERS IN COMMAND.

Sailing from Hoboken on June 24, 1917, the First Division reached St. Nazaire, at the mouth of the Loire, on the 24th of that month. The division, 27,000 strong, was trained by Gen. W. L. Sibert, of Alabama, but went into actual war service under Gen. Robert Lee Bullard, also of Alabama, with Col. Campbell King, of Georgia, as chief of staff. The First Brigade, Sixteenth and Eighteenth Regular Infantry, was commanded by Gen. John L. Hines, of West Virginia, and the Second Brigade by Gen. Beaumont B. Buck, of Texas. The Artillery Brigade, the Fifth, Sixth, and Seventh Regiments of Field Artillery, was finally put under Col. W. A. Holbrook, of Wisconsin. In addition, there were the First Regiment of Engineers, the First, Second, and Third Machine Gun Battalions, a headquarters troop of Cavalry, Signal Corps, field battalions, and medical units.

Unskilled in methods of modern war and unprovided with field artillery, the division was scattered to suitable camps, where they were intensively instructed by experienced officers from the French Army. That such training involved physical hardships, uncomplainingly endured, is evident from Maj. Palmer's statement that some of the men, in want of new shoes, drilled with their feet wrapped in sacking. The Field Artillery had to unlearn their own drill and acquire expert skill with the remarkable but novel French gun, the famous soixante quinze, 75-mm. A French officer commented on the high intelligence and extraordinary aptitude of his artillery pupils.

Three months later, with coming winter and almost continuous rains, the division was inducted in trench warfare, serving under French command, a short distance southeast of Nancy. The usual horrors of trench life were experienced, though their vitality and methods prevented any material increase in the sick. Here the first hostile shell was fired by Battery C, Sixth Field Artillery, on October 23, 1917. The Germans on November 3, by a barrage, cut off the advanced outpost and captured 11 prisoners. The command, rallying, repelled the enemy. Trench service, rendered by battalion detail for 10 days each, was marked by 56 casualties—3 killed, 43 wounded, and 11 captured. One German prisoner was taken. The casualties herein given include killed, wounded, gassed, missing, and prisoners, but not by disease, accidents, etc.

The trench apprenticeship was followed by independent service January 15 to April 3, 1918, about 12 miles northwest of Toul, in a sector near St. Mihiel. Here the First Division relieved the famous Moroccan Division, cooperating with the Sixty-ninth French. The Toul service entailed constant losses with small chance of reprisal. The front was dominated by the St. Mihiel hills, of which Mount Sec was the key, strongly held by German batteries within easy range. Maj. Palmer tersely describes the situation: "It was like sitting at the foot of the stairs and having the fellow at the top throw rocks at you from behind a curtain." Occasional incursions into no man's land were made, whereby 11 prisoners were captured with machine guns and flame throwers. In this quiet sector the First Division had 352 casualties—56 killed, 150 wounded, 127 gassed, and 19 missing.

HASTILY SHIFTED TO PICARDY.

The vast and dangerous offensive launched by the German command on March 21, 1918, called the division into extremely active service. On March 28 Gen. Pershing offered the American force in its entirety to Gen. Foch, and a week later the First made its great journey half across France to Picardy. It was a test of administrative ability, met successfully by Pershing's quartermasters, to move with its essential accompanying paraphernalia 27,000 men, 1,700 animals, and 1,000 wagons. Turning over its sector to the Twenty-sixth New England Division the First made this transfer of more than 300 miles and was in Picardy, near Beauvais, on April 18.

How it was done no one knows, for the railroads were swamped with ammunition, reenforcements, supplies, etc., for 3,000,000 men, while the roads—in awful condition—were jammed with ambulances, motors, fugitives, and troops. It was nearly confusion confounded between withdrawals before the enemy, the evacuation of the occupied provinces, and transfers of troops to meet exigencies. But the First got there, both fit and equipped to fight.

Kept for a time in reserve, the First occupied the Cantigny front—April 25–July 7—three miles west of Montdidier, then strongly held by the enemy. The operations of the division in this sector are popularly supposed to have been confined, as far as fighting went, to the capture of Cantigny, which was a mere episode involving only one-fifth of the casualties here suffered. The First was put in line opposite the very apex of the most advanced German salient, with orders to hold it at all costs. If the front gave way Amiens, a few miles to the northwest, would fall and its railway system be destroyed. The fatal effect would be the diversion to southern France of all the supplies needful for the British Army, which was then receiving from the channel ports everything needful for all forces north of the Somme.

Constant fighting, though on a small scale, continued almost daily until early June. The front had to be kept against preponderating and victorious enemies, who, holding both banks of the Avre, were within easy cannon shot of Amiens. The First not only gave no ground in the repeated attacks of the enemy, but it made them pay toll, capturing from its columns 60 prisoners and 3 machine guns. It paid dear, however, as its casualties—omitting those in the capture of Cantigny—numbered 140 officers and 4,183 men; killed, 199; wounded, 1,621; gassed, 1,999; missing, 49. The few missing show that the men fought to the last.

HOW CANTIGNY WAS TAKEN.

The division commander viewed with dissatisfaction the occupation by the enemy of the village of Cantigny. Admirably organized and strongly fortified by the Germans, its high ground dominated both the American front and also sections in the rear. Whenever another advance was made, and it was daily expected, Cantigny was an excellent jumping-off place for a great assault. If it could be captured and held its value for a counter offensive was strikingly evident. Preparations for its capture were systematically made.

At daybreak on May 28 the division artillery opened a terrific bombardment which drove the enemy to their shelters. At 6.30 a. m. the troops went over the top as the artillery fire pulled back to an initial barrage a hundred yards in advance of the moving line. Col. Ely, with the Twenty-eighth Infantry, and Lieut. Col. Theodore Roosevelt, jr., with a battalion of the Twenty-sixth Infantry, moved forward with clock-work regularity, 55 yards a minute. Each man had food for two days, ample water, much ammunition, and intrenching tools. The town was taken within an hour, when began immediately the consolidation so essential, as counterattacks were certain. The Engineer detachments wired under fierce fire the trenches occupied, while the men of the Signal Corps spread their cobweb lines to insure telephonic communication with the rear.

To take Cantigny was easy compared with holding it. Six counterattacks were made by the exasperated Germans, without success. Fierce artillery fire soon reduced Cantigny to a mass of formless ruins, but the Americans held fast, repelling the enemy, who ceased their efforts after losing over 1,300 men killed and wounded, besides 225 prisoners. The casualties of the first numbered 1,067—killed, 199; wounded, 652; gassed, 200; missing, 16. Heroically fighting after being wounded, Lieut. Col. Maxey, Lieut. Drum, and Corpl. Finnegan were killed.

IMPORTANCE OF CANTIGNY CAPTURE.

A small affair, seemingly, Cantigny's capture was a matter of great and international importance. There could not have been a more timely victory, for on that very morning the last German success was attained. Going over the top of the Chemin des Dames, their shock troops drove the allied forces down the Marne to Chateau-Thierry, and thus placed Paris in imminent danger of capture. At this critical and disheartening period it fell to the lot of the First Division of the American Expeditionary Forces to prove to the anxious allied nations that a counter-offensive was possible, and that victory was yet to be gained for the free men of the world.

For a few days a part of the First Division turned from scenes of war to parade in Paris on July 4.

Three days later urgent orders put the First Division on the march. For four days and nights it went on without any regular rest, now on trucks, now hiking. Of the men's physical condition near the end one of its officers writes: "The dismounted men would fall asleep in the gutter at every halt. The mounted men dozed in their saddles, and the animals could scarcely drag one foot after another. When a chance for food came most men hit the hay, though too tired to sleep." The afternoon found them 10 miles in rear of the battle line, which they were ordered to occupy so as to go over the top at daybreak.

Foch had perfected his plans for a counteroffensive. The march to their assigned positions had to be secretly made over unknown roads, through fields and forest, without a gleam of light, lest the enemy note the movement. To add to the troubles a thunderstorm soaked their clothing and made the shell-ruined roads veritable quagmires. In utter darkness thousands of men, hundreds of horses and of motor trucks jammed the road in almost inextricable masses. It was feared that some units could not reach the line in time to go over the top, fixed at 4.35 a. m. One unit barely reached the front at 4.30 and went over almost exhausted.

IN FOCH'S GREAT OFFENSIVE.

It was known that the fighting would be desperate, as it involved attacks on fortified heights held by an enemy flushed with victory and confident of continued success. Hundreds of camouflaged nests of machine guns, heavy batteries in positions of natural strength, caused the enemy to believe their terrain impregnable. It rested on the courage and persistence of the American soldier to prove this a fallacy.

The division entered the counteroffensive under its new commander, Gen. Charles P. Summerall, of Florida, distinguished as one of the captors of Peking in 1900. I was sandwiched between the One hundred and fifty-third French on the left and the veteran Moroccan division on its right, with the Foreign Legion.

At 4.35 a. m. the First went over the top in extended order of five paces interval. The artillery, hitherto silent, started a rolling barrage which, systematically lifted a hundred yards a minute, drove the enemy to their shelters. Advancing as planned, and leaving small parties from time to time to clean up the snipers and machine guns, the main body attained its first objective and halted 20 minutes, as allotted. Night found them at the third objective, about 3 miles' advance, having smashed through the wire barricades and fortifications constructed the previous six weeks. Scarcely a thousand casualties, and more than that number of prisoners with many guns, were the record of the day. The Sixth German, Eleventh and Forty-second Bavarian Divisions were that night reinforced by the Thirty-fourth and Twenty-eighth Divisions, presaging warm work for the morrow.

On July 20 still another German division, the Forty-sixth, confronted the First. As it had outrun the One hundred and fifty-third French in advance, the First Division was asked to take the village of Berzy-le-Sec, which had been assigned as a French objective. This village was a fortified place, which dominated the Soissons-Outchy-le-Chateau Railway, and its capture meant the loss to the Germans of the entire salient. It involved desperate work, and that day failed. The fighting was intense, often at close quarters, when grenades, bayonets, knives, and even clubbed rifles were used. To and fro swayed the struggling masses, with slight and dearly gained advances by our men. The American casualties had now run up to 3,000, about the number of prisoners captured by them. With nightfall Berzy was still uncaptured, and the Moroccan division was relieved, which was also the orders of the First. Summerall, however, told the corps commander that he had promised his men that they should go on, and was unwilling to leave victory half gained.

VICTORY ON SOISSONS HIGHWAY.

The losses of the Second Brigade had been enormous among its officers, as nearly all had been killed or wounded. However, on the morning of the 21st, Gen. Buck paraded his exhausted and decimated command, and, walking down its front under heavy fire, led them in assault. They swept into Berzy-le-Sec, capturing its men, batteries, and machine guns, and winning the most important objective. Meantime the First Brigade had overrun the Soissons-Chateau-Thierry highway, leaving no hope to the demoralized enemy. Victory then and for the future was assured.

The perfidy and the contemptible methods of the Germans appear from a report by an officer of the division. The moans of a wounded German attracted the attention of an officer in the advance, and in response to his pitiful appeals first-aid treatment was given. The officer went on to join his command, and a few hundred yards further a companion officer called out that he had been shot from the rear. It developed that the German, refreshed by first-aid treatment, had crawled up to the shell hole, and, resting his machine gun on the edge, opened fire on our troops. Just punishment of the treacherous soldier was rendered needless. A German shell exploded and killed him.

One prisoner was brought in with his high leather boots full of grenades and his right arm adorned with a Red Cross badge.

The captures included 125 officers, 3,375 men, 75 guns (77 millimeter and 150 millimeter), 50 mortars, 300 machine guns, 2,500 rifles, with much ammunition and supplies. The price paid was the heaviest to date of any division, 7,840 in all—killed, 1,252; wounded, 4,771; gassed, 274; and missing, 1,543. One officer to every 16 men was killed—an extraordinary proportion.

Many officers and men were cited by division orders, and to others distinguished-service crosses were issued by order of President Wilson.

This victory of the First against six German divisions was naturally followed by recognition. Buck and Hines became major general and Holbrook a brigadier. The chief of staff, Campbell King, was made brigadier and succeeded by Col. John N. Greely, general staff, who, cited "for distinguished ability while performing duties of grave responsibility," served in that position until the armistice was signed.

Quiet service for assimilation of about 8,000 replacements was had in the Saizera sector during August, the casualties numbering only 21. The St. Mihiel operation, September 12–15, was not entirely the picnic that has been sometimes assumed. Familiar with this terrain from their earliest service, the First Division had an important share in the capture of the salient. Against resistance they advanced 8 miles in 19 hours, and their reconnoitering party 12 miles. Their casualties were 11 officers and 761 men. They captured 5 officers, 1,190 men, 30 77-millimeter and 150-millimeter guns, and much war material.

Moved up by easy stages, the First Division took station at Cheppy, awaiting its fiercest fighting between the Argonne Forest and the Meuse River. A serious emergency arose, and its orders came. Entering this sector, it fought continually from October 1 to October 12 under conditions of undescribable difficulties, over a terrain capable of easy defense and against the best German divisions, who knew that defeat there meant the absolute loss of the war. The situation is best set forth by Gen. Pershing in General Order 201, the only order devoted during the war to a single command. It begins:

"The Commander in Chief desires to make of record * * * his extreme satisfaction with the conduct of the officers and soldiers of the First Division in its advance west of the Meuse between October 4 and 11, 1918."

The First Division paid a fearful price for its Argonne victory, the casualties numbering 8,554, of whom 117 were officers. Killed, 851; wounded severely, 2,664; wounded slightly, 1,710; gassed, 1,614; missing (mostly dead, it is thought), 1,715. One of every three!

Ordinarily this would have been the end of a division for months, but the First answered promptly for an emergency in the operations against Nouzon and Sedan (November 3–8), where it sustained losses of 1,087, and captured 54 men, guns, etc.

Summarized, its war casualties, killed, wounded, gassed, and missing, aggregated 23,974, of whom 715 were officers. Its losses by disease are unknown, but the total replacements slightly exceed 30,000.

The armistice signed, the First Division left Abincourt, near Verdun, six days later, and by a march of more than 200 miles occupied the Coblenz bridgehead on December 24. It was the first American force to cross the Rhine.

The brigade of the First Division commanded by Gen. Buck participated in the battle of Cantigny on May 28, 1918, and captured that village. Here for the first time our allies and the enemy had opportunity to estimate the fighting qualities of American troops when fighting as a large American unit and under American leadership and direction. Had the conduct of the brigade been less gallant or heroic or its leadership less efficient or daring, despair would have assailed our allies and hope would have brightened in the hearts of our enemies. The brigade under Gen. Buck's command took a conspicuous part in the thrust toward Soissons, which began on July 18, 1918. At the battle of Berzy-le-Sec, July 21, 1918, after losing 75 per cent of his officers and 50 per cent of his men, Gen. Buck and his brigade continued to advance until the town and all objectives were captured.

For gallantry in action on that occasion he was decorated by the French, cited in orders, and awarded the distinguished-service cross by the commanding general, American Expeditionary Forces, and promoted by the President to the grade of major general. [Applause.] Since his return to this country he has received a second decoration from the French Government. He has been awarded the Croix de Guerre with two palms, which, as I understand it, is a superlative mark of distinction for gallantry in action.

In this connection I desire to insert the following clippings from the Waco Times-Herald of Waco, Tex.:

[From the Waco Times-Herald, Feb. 12.]

MAJ. GEN. BUCK HAS CROSS OF LEGION OF HONOR COMMANDER.

Gen. B. B. Buck, United States Army, at present commanding Camp MacArthur, has received through the War Department at Washington official notice of his appointment as commander of the Legion of Honor by the French Government. Last August Gen. Buck was made chevalier of the Legion of Honor, and he is now advanced in that order to the rank of commander.

When seen by a reporter to-day, Gen. Buck said he was very happy to have received this additional honor, and displayed with evident pride the beautiful decoration sent him by the French Government. He also received at the same time an additional Croix de Guerre from the French Government. Gen. Buck has been decorated with the distinguished-service cross by Gen. Pershing for his work on the battle front in France.

HOW BUCK LED MEN IS TOLD IN STARS AND STRIPES.

In that famous journal of the men overseas, the ever-popular "Stars and Stripes," are found many graphical tales of adventure and life on the battle front. In the edition of Friday, January 3, there appears the following article of local interest, in that it pertains to the actions of the present commandant of Camp MacArthur, Maj. Gen. Beaumont B. Buck:

"Against the most desperate opposition, the Americans were relentlessly approaching Berzy-le-Sec, the capture of which would mean to the Germans that the Soissons-Outchy-le-Chateau Railway and the Soissons-Chateau-Thierry highway could no longer be used for transportation into the Marne salient from the railhead of Soissons. It would mean, in short, the salient was lost.

"Knowing this only too well, the enemy during the night thrust into the line covering the village and its all important heights still another division, the Forty-sixth Reserve. On their part the staff of the Twentieth French Corps, finding that the One hundred and fifty-third Division was still some distance from it, directed the First United States to take Berzy-le-Sec at 2 o'clock next day, for which purpose the Second Brigade was reinforced by a battalion from the divisional reserve.

FORWARD TO FIERCE STRUGGLE.

"At the appointed time, following a furious barrage of two hours by the divisional artillery, the troops went forward. There followed a struggle as ferocious and protracted as any in the annals of the American Army. Time after time throughout the afternoon and night the lines surged back and forth in attack and counterattack; machine-gun nests were taken and the opposing infantry grappled one another with bayonets and trench knives, grenades, and clubbed rifles.

"At length, early on the morning of the 21st, when the officers had nearly all fallen, killed or wounded, and when his men, exhausted, but still determined, had dropped back for a brief respite, Gen. Beaumont B. Buck, the brigade commander, walking along his front beneath the hail of the enemy's fire, personally directed the formation of the line for a last supreme effort, and then himself led the first wave as it rose up and rolled toward and into and over the smoking ruins of the village, engulfing there a battery of field guns, dozens of machine guns, and hundreds of prisoners.

"The victory was won."

On January 16, 1919, the War Department received officially from the commanding general, American Expeditonary Forces, the insignia for commander of the Legion of Honor, and an additional Croix de Guerre for transmittal to Gen. Buck.

At this point may I call attention to the following extract from General Orders, No. 109, War Department, November 19, 1918, as follows:

General Orders, No. 109.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 19, 1918.

By direction of the President, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved July 9, 1918 (Bul. No. 43, W. D., 1918), the distinguished-service cross was awarded by the commanding general, American Expeditionary Forces, for extraordinary heroism in action in France, to the following-named officers and enlisted men of the American Expeditionary Forces:

Beaumont B. Buck, brigadier general, 2d Infantry Brigade, 1st Division. Before and during the attack on Berzy-le-Sec, France, July 21, 1918, he displayed conspicuous gallantry and heroic leadership of his command. When most of the officers of his brigade had fallen,

Gen. Buck, with contempt of personal danger and in spite of heavy artillery bombardment and machine-gun fire, traversed the front of his advancing forces, gave correct directions to his organization commanders, and led the first wave of the culminating attack which stormed and captured the town.

BY ORDER OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR:

PEYTON C. MARCH,
General, Chief of Staff.

OFFICIAL:
P. C. HARRIS,
The Adjutant General.

Could there be paid more eloquent tribute to the bravery and courage of an officer than that here solemnly written upon the records of the War Department regarding the conduct of this heroic Texan?

Can any of you hesitate to credit his statement that he not only did not authorize or sanction the issuance of the order forbidding the attendance of officers and men at the same social function, but that he abhors and repudiates the spirit of such an order? I entertain nothing but scorn and contempt for the spirit that would seek to establish social castes among those of the white race, in the armies of the Republic, or among the white citizens of the United States, and have no difficulty in believing that such a view is shared by a man of Gen. Buck's American birth and breeding, and who with an unsurpassed bravery fought on foreign shores to defend the principles for which the United States reluctantly but resolutely drew the sword.

Can you believe that this soldier of the Republic either claimed for himself or sanctioned the claim of other officers for social distinction when upon the battle field he neither sought nor would accept the privilege of safety that might have been his to claim, but with sergeant and corporal and private, in the equality and democracy of danger, he marched and mingled in and about the market place of death? He claimed for his general's stars no pride or prerogative in the red republic of the battle field.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, lines 11 and 12, after the word "attachés" in line 11, strike out the words "and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on that paragraph and all amendments thereto be now concluded, unless the gentleman would like to have five minutes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I would like to be heard.

Mr. DENT. How much time?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto be concluded in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is similar to the one I offered a few moments ago. The words I would strike out of this paragraph are practically the same objectionable words found in the former paragraph. I do not offer this as a criticism of the War Department. There has been a great deal of criticism, a great deal of fault has been found. I have not indulged in much criticism, although I can truthfully say I trust that some of these abuses I hear about and read about may speedily be corrected. I offer this amendment because I think they are improper words to be included in any paragraph of an appropriation bill. They give too much discretion and repose too much power, confer too much authority upon the officer named. When criticism of this kind is made the question is often asked, can not you trust the Secretary of War, can not you trust the Secretary of Agriculture, and so forth? It is not a matter of distrust at all, or if I were to reply directly to it I would say that rarely does the Secretary of War or the head of a department himself exercise discretion as to the expenditure of the money placed at his disposal. The discretion is exercised by some one down the line, perhaps almost if not at the foot of the line, somebody in whose hands we would not place a large sum of money, some one whom if we knew him we would not rely upon or trust discretion to in all matters. But I submit, gentlemen, this is an improper way to legislate. All possible safeguards should be thrown around the expenditure of money. And I wish again to call the attention of the committee to the improper and slothful methods into which it has fallen, the carelessness and unwillingness to give time or take the trouble of writing properly into the law regulations and restrictions as to how money should be expended,

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I will.

Mr. CANNON. This is for contingent expenses, Military Intelligence Division. If you strike that out it would be for contingent expenses. Now, it says "including the purchase of law books," and so forth, and then if you add the other you put in all that surplusage. It says here "and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper." That is, for such other contingent purposes. If the gentleman would really like to have it, in my judgment, in proper shape, he would move to strike out all the paragraph after the words "staff corps," in the fourth and fifth lines, because if you strike out "and for such other purposes" you can not use this contingent fund for anything except what is specially mentioned. I am inclined to think so, but I just call attention to it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I think the words to which the distinguished gentleman from Illinois has called attention indicate the lines along which the Secretary must travel in spending that money. They are something of a direction with him; they are something of a limitation upon his discretion and authority; but if the words I object to are included there is absolutely no limit to what he may do.

Mr. CANNON. Suppose he wanted some ice. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, could you buy it from that fund?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The gentleman has prepared more appropriation bills than any other gentleman in the House, perhaps as many as all the rest put together, and he knows that item after item appear in bills coming from his committee that specifically provide for the purchase of ice, and I know no gentleman who objects more strenuously to unlimited authority than the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman remembers that we will be dry after July 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WINGO. I reserved a point of order, and I want to make it on certain language in the paragraph. The language to which I direct the point of order is in lines 8 and 9. The language is "and of the military attachés at the United States embassies and legations abroad." That is for contingent expenses. It is not authorized by existing law. It is properly carried in the Diplomatic bill in the contingent expenses of the different embassies.

Mr. MANN. It is existing law.

Mr. WINGO. It is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. DENT. Is the gentleman sure he is correct in that statement? It has been carried in this bill ever since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. That may be true, but the statute of limitations does not run on a point like this.

Mr. DENT. But the gentleman's statement that it is not carried in the existing law, I think, is wrong.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Would it be necessary that there be a specific law?

Mr. WINGO. I think so.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. These military attachés are Regular officers, members of the Regular Establishment, on special detail, and this is simply an appropriation to pay for their expenses. It is no different than if it were said "the Army officers who are in Alaska."

Mr. WINGO. But the contingent expenses of all attachés at every embassy are payable and provided for out of the contingent fund in the bill provided for the different embassies.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is in error. The Diplomatic bill does not pay their salaries.

Mr. WINGO. I am speaking of the contingent expenses.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Or the contingent expenses.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. As the gentleman from Minnesota states, this is for the contingent expenses of a military officer of the United States. The Military Intelligence Bureau, under which this item is carried here, is the particular bureau that designates and has charge of that officer, and this is to pay whatever contingent expenses that officer may be to in gaining military intelligence. He is not responsible to the embassy, but to the Military Intelligence Department here in Washington.

Mr. WINGO. That is a new statement to me. But this is not authorized by existing law at all. It very properly is carried under the contingent expenses of the embassies.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know any provision of law authorizing any of the contingent expenses in any of the departments of the Government?

Mr. WINGO. No. I really think a point of order would lie against all these contingent items.

Mr. MANN. Well, if the gentleman is correct, nearly every item could be stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. There are several items that I am going to try to get out on a point of order.

Mr. MANN. There are a number of items that are clearly subject to a point of order in the bill; but this is an appropriation for the maintenance of the Army. Now, everyone knows that every department of the Government must necessarily have various contingent expenses. And the creation of the department itself is, in my judgment, a sufficient warrant for an appropriation for the contingent expenses. It would be ridiculous, Mr. Chairman, to say that when we created a department or provided an army we should in detail describe the character of the buttons that the men had to wear.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman that would be ridiculous.

Mr. MANN. It would be ridiculous to say that we can not appropriate for buttons because it is not authorized by law. Buttons are no more authorized by law than many various other contingent expenses necessary for the Army, which no one can foresee, in many cases, in advance. Here is a provision which provides for the payment of contingent expenses of officers of the Army abroad under proper provision of law. I do not see how the gentleman can contend we can not make an appropriation for the contingent expenses.

Mr. WINGO. Here is my contention. I agree with the gentleman that the only justification in law for contingent expenses, of course, is upon the theory that the act creating any bureau contemplates, and therefore by implication we are authorized to make, appropriations for all the expenses that are necessarily incident and understood to go with that kind of an establishment which has been created. This is an item for contingent expenses in a military establishment, to pay for contingent expenses, it is true, of a military officer, but while he is in another branch of the service, which has a contingent fund which is provided for by law and which is used by that embassy in paying the contingent expenses of that particular official.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. While these military attachés are attached in a way to an embassy abroad, that is on account of our international relations. We are not authorized to send an Army officer to England unless he is accredited in some way and connected with the embassy. That is our diplomatic relation. That has nothing to do with our power in reference to the payment. And these military attachés must get their pay for contingent expenses out of the Army and not out of the Diplomatic bill. They are not a part of the embassy.

Mr. WINGO. They are so regarded under international law. They are under the control of the ambassadors.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They are not.

Mr. WINGO. They are directed to report to an ambassador.

Mr. MANN. We have a lot of commercial agents abroad, accredited in a way, that are under the control of the Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. WINGO. Some of them are; but as to military attachés, they are attached to embassies.

Mr. MANN. They are all accredited in some way and connected with the Diplomatic Service. That is the only way you can get them abroad.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to add a word to that which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has just stated. These military attachés are in no wise a part of the diplomatic forces of the United States. As the gentleman pointed out, in order to send a military attaché or naval attaché to the Court of St. James, we send him there under the direction or under the roof of our ambassador. This man is gathering military information. It would not be of any value to this country to have him report that military information to the ambassador or to the Secretary of State here. That is not the place where it goes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The place where it goes is through the military channels to the General Staff of the Army. While the military attaché may be at the embassy, or may have an office at the embassy, he may be in one sense attached to that embassy; but he is really a missionary of the Army, working for the Army, and he reports to the Army. All the information he obtains is placed in the possession of the Army and is for the benefit of the Army, and the allowances for contingent expenses are not to enable him to accomplish or perform any duties apart from that which customarily belongs to that position, but they are to enable him to perform the work which may be necessary in handling his position, which is one authorized by law.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin. I wanted to make that statement first.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand from the statement of the gentleman, these military attachés are not appointed by the Secretary of State, but are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Certainly. This much must be admitted: A military attaché is an individual of such a character that foreign governments usually exercise some little discretion as to receiving him. They are consulted before he is appointed; ordinarily they are consulted before a man is appointed. For instance, if we contemplated sending a man to France at the present time as military attaché we would consult the French Government to see if such and such a man we desired to send was satisfactory to the French Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under whose jurisdiction are these officials?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They are exclusively under the jurisdiction of the War Department to which they belong.

Mr. WINGO. Is that true—that the American ambassador has authority to send home a military or naval attaché?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I have not heard of such a case.

Mr. WINGO. Has he not done it?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not know as to that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The head of the Military Intelligence Department states specifically that this sum is necessary to pay the extraordinary expenses of the attachés. He states specifically that these men are responsible, as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] states, to the Military Intelligence Department, and this is his estimate of the amount they ought to have for their contingent expenses.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman will recognize that these men are doing work that is not diplomatic at all. They are not spies, but they are skilled observers, sent out to get information of every possible and conceivable character that would be advantageous to obtain from a military standpoint.

Mr. WINGO. We have a separate force that we appropriate for as military observers?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The gentleman from Minnesota will admit, as the gentleman indicated here, that without doubt if an ambassador should report to the Military Intelligence Bureau here that a particular man would be objectionable to him, that man would be withdrawn. But that would not mean that in all respects the man was not answerable to the military department.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Yes. This is work which the ambassador could not attend to at all, and therefore he, the military attaché, has expenses that are peculiarly incident to this work.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. How much of this money is expended in that way?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We ask for $200,000. We reduced the entire estimate of appropriation from $800,000 to $200,000.

Mr. SISSON. The amount of this item before we got into the war was very much less than that, was it not?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. It was $11,000.

Mr. SISSON. Is there any particular reason why you allow such a large sum as this at the present time? Most of this sum, of course, will go to pay the military attachés.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The reply to that question, made by Col. Dunn, in charge of this branch of the service, was that this particular branch of the Government had been allowed to become practically inactive. We had one officer in charge of the Military Intelligence Bureau here in Washington, with these attachés acting without sufficient funds. The experience of the war has proven that the Military Intelligence Department is one of the most important branches of the Army, and we are attempting now to build it up to something like the proportions the country demands. The War Department thinks it should be vastly more than it is.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that in troublous times we must have military attachés, and I can understand the delicacy of such matters in war times, and therefore you put in this item, which can be expended with liberality. But what I am asking the gentleman is, Is not this item very large, even taking that fact into consideration?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Committee on Military Affairs thinks this is a very moderate sum, upon the showing made before the committee by that department.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, before the war, in former bills, this whole item only represented $11,000. Why should we change now and say that the contingent expenses of an embassy abroad or any of its staff, including the military and naval attachés, should be appropriated for separate and distinct from the contingent fund of the embassy? There is no authority of law to do it. They never have been paid out of this particular fund, although they have carried this kind of an item for years in the Army bill, but the largest amount ever spent for all these purposes heretofore was $11,000 before the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SISSON. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The size of the item has nothing to do with the propriety of the item.

Mr. SISSON. The size of the item was referred to in reply to the suggestion that they have always paid the expenses of these military attachés out of this fund. But $11,000 would have paid the contingent expenses of very few of them at the rate they propose to allow them.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, what is this? A point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. A point of order has been raised. The Chair is trying to get at the facts.

Mr. CANNON. It is on account of the military attaché?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The contention, as the Chair gathers it, is that this is an expense that is not carried in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Where is it carried, then?

Mr. WINGO. In the Diplomatic and Consular appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am quite sure that the Diplomatic bill never has carried it. These people are in the military service.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not in the Diplomatic bill at all.

Mr. CANNON. It is not in the Diplomatic bill. When they are assigned to this duty as military attachés, they get the contingent expenses necessary for them to have. They are paid in this bill. They get their salaries from the Army bill.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the chairman of the committee yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not have a copy of the current law before me, but, if the chairman will remember, the officers representing this branch of the Military Establishment asked for some new language enlarging the powers of this department, and in the committee I made a point of order against all new language that was proposed to be interjected into this item; and I now ask the chairman of the committee whether he struck out all the new language, and whether the language in the bill is the language of the current law?

Mr. DENT. It is. This language has been carried in this bill ever since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. WINGO. It has been stated here that the contingent expenses are not carried in the Diplomatic bill. They are so carried to the tune of over $1,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. For these men?

Mr. WINGO. It includes these men, and out of that fund they have been paid heretofore.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. The gentleman is mistaken.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask one or two questions, because a determination of the parliamentary status depends upon a question of fact. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Arkansas to state that these expenses that are referred to here have been paid out of another appropriation and never have been paid out of this appropriation?

Mr. WINGO. My understanding is that heretofore, before the war, this particular branch of the service, which is sought here to be provided with a contingent fund, had a very small contingent fund of only $11,000, which covered everything; that while it carried the language of these military attachés, students, and interpreters, yet, as a matter of fact, all the contingent expenses of all attachés, clerks, and employees were paid out of the contingent fund of the different embassies and legations. Now it is sought to create a separate contingent fund. That is the position I take.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the contention of the gentleman from Arkansas that this is not a proper military expense?

Mr. WINGO. That it is not authorized by law; that primarily it is an expense of the Diplomatic Service.

The CHAIRMAN. Why is the payment of a military attaché not a proper military expense?

Mr. WINGO. The payment of his salary is a proper military expense, but this is a contingent expense while he is acting as an attaché at a diplomatic post.

The CHAIRMAN. If he is an Army officer, drawing an Army salary, and incurs a contingent expense, why is not that an Army expense?

Mr. WINGO. He incurs these expenses as an attaché of a diplomatic unit, and his contingent expenses while acting with that diplomatic unit are properly payable out of the contingent expenses of that particular post.

The CHAIRMAN. If a particular Army officer, drawing an Army salary, is assigned to do a particular work, and in connection with that work incurs certain expenses, the Chair can not see why that is not an appropriate Army expense, to be paid out of the contingent allowance for Army expenses. So far as the Chair has been furnished with any information, it has been of an argumentative character; and, dealing with that, the Chair thinks this is clearly an Army expense, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. The other point of order which I reserve is on this language, about which there can not be any question that it is not a proper charge against the Military Establishment:

The cost of special instruction at home and abroad, and in maintenance of students and attachés.

These students and interpreters are also cared for out of the contingent fund of the Diplomatic and Consular bill, a fund of over $1,000,000, and plainly that is not a part of the Military Establishment.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will read the language in the Diplomatic and Consular bill he will see that the kind of students there provided for are not at all the kind of students provided for in this paragraph. They have no more connection than a Hottentot has with a New Yorker on Fifth Avenue.

Mr. WINGO. There is a very close connection; that is the kind of students they are.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman wants to have the facts right, the students provided for in the Diplomatic bill are student interpreters in China and Japan.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman tell me what those students are?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman can read he can find them for himself. We provide for student interpreters attached to the legations or embassies in China, Japan, and Turkey. Here is a provision in the Diplomatic bill for 10 student interpreters in China and Persia.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman misses my whole point of order. I am not talking about the pay of these students; I am talking about the contingent fund.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair ask the gentleman, Do these students belong to the Military Establishment?

Mr. WINGO. No.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why, yes; they do.

Mr. WINGO. They are appropriated for in the Diplomatic and Consular bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom for years, at least before the war, for the Government to send Army officers away for instruction to foreign schools of foreign Governments. They send them there for military instruction. That has not the slightest connection with the Diplomatic and Consular Service.

Mr. WINGO. That is provided for in a different fund. This is contingent expenses of the Military Intelligence Division and General Staff Corps.

Mr. ANTHONY. How do we pay the expenses of these students?

Mr. WINGO. They are paid out of a specific appropriation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the gentleman contend that the ordinary expenses ought to be paid by the War Department and the contingent expenses paid by the Diplomatic Service?

Mr. WINGO. The contingent expenses are not the same as salaries.

Mr. CANNON. What is the difference between paying salaries as such and the maintenance after you put them on duty? They have to have water; they have to have a place to live.

Mr. WINGO. There is absolutely no difference, but there is a distinction between salaries and a contingent fund, between the contingent fund and maintenance and the pay fund. You specifically provide for the maintenance, and then you undertake to provide that out of the contingency fund you may pay expenses that can not be foreseen.

Mr. CANNON. The expenses, every dollar, must come out of the Treasury Department. If these are to be paid at all, their salary can be paid from this appropriation in the Army bill, and then there must be, according to the gentleman's theory, a second audit of the contingent expenses. If it be true that the contingent expenses are chargeable to the Diplomatic Service, that would be audited by the State Department, so you would have two audits.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Alabama if these students are a part of the Military Establishment?

Mr. DENT. That is my understanding; they are being detailed under the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. And the Military Establishment provides for their pay?

Mr. DENT. Absolutely.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, they are a part of the Military Establishment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some member of the Military Affairs Committee tell us what these students and attachés are. Where is there any authority for the Military Department maintaining students that are not authorized by law?

Mr. ANTHONY. This Government is in the habit of receiving at its service school representatives of foreign governments as a matter of courtesy, and in return we send representatives of our Army to schools in foreign nations for the purpose of keeping up to modern ideas. That practice has prevailed for a number of years to my knowledge.

Mr. MANN. And a proper practice. Are the students referred to here, "maintenance of students and attachés," Army officers?

Mr. ANTHONY. All that I have ever known are Army officers sent over there for instruction, and they come back and bring new ideas.

Mr. MANN. It seems rather queer language, "maintenance of students and attachés." If he is an Army officer, he gets his salary and gets his allowance. How is he maintained in addition to that—out of the contingent fund?

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to say that practically all the military attachés we have sent abroad were the sons of rich men, men able to pay their own expenses.

Mr. MANN. I know; but these are not military attachés.

Mr. ANTHONY. They have their expenses paid.

Mr. MANN. We have already provided in this paragraph for the military attachés sent abroad, but here is an item for the maintenance of students and attachés. I presume, having been in the bill before, no one on the Committee on Military Affairs has asked for information about it.

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know what additional information the gentleman wants.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman "thinks, perhaps," and that is all. He has not stated as a fact that these are Army officers sent abroad and maintained by the Government out of the contingent fund.

Mr. ANTHONY. All I know have been Army officers.

Mr. MANN. I know; but I do not know whether the gentleman is talking about what this item refers to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to add that in my experience—and it is not particularly great, not any greater than that of any other Member—I have had opportunity to make inquiry, and I have received information respecting this item. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] tells the literal truth. While the term "students" is used, I do not think it is——

Mr. WINGO. As a matter of fact, you have no authority of law for it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am making a statement, and after a time may be glad to yield to the gentleman from Arkansas. These are officers who were in the capacity of students located in some foreign country. For instance, the gentleman from Kansas cited one. He might be in a school for cavalry in France or in Italy. I would like to especially mention that several of our officers had the very good fortune to be sent to France to study artillery some six years ago, and it was a godsend to America that they went there. That is this class of men. Rather than curtail the item, we ought to enlarge it, because they are the men who have kept our Army in touch with the progress of the military art.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota state from his own knowledge that this item of maintenance of students refers to that class of officers?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am sure that it does.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman be sure? This is all guesswork.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I can not say that I know it of them all.

Mr. WINGO. The officers the gentleman is talking about are military observers.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not necessarily.

Mr. WINGO. But they have been.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to answer this question: Can he refer the Chair to some authority which justifies this item? The point of order has been made, and the burden is upon the chairman of the committee to refer the Chair to some authority that supports it. This thing is taking up a disproportionate amount of time.

Mr. DENT. I can not put my finger upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will sustain the point of order.

By unanimous consent, Mr. CARAWAY was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: To strike out "$200,000," in line 13, and substitute "$114,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 13, strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$114,000."

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the regular order that the gentleman is demanding?

Mr. DYER. A vote upon the amendment. Debate is exhausted upon this section and all amendments thereto.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman is right about that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offered an amendment a short time ago. Was it ruled out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman get recognition from the Chair?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan: Page 3, lines 11 and 12, after the word "attachés," in line 11, strike out the words "and for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. MILLER of Minnesota) there were—ayes 25, noes 12.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MILITARY OBSERVERS ABROAD.

For the actual and necessary expenses of officers of the Army on duty abroad for the purpose of observing operations of armies of foreign States at war, to be paid upon certificates of the Secretary of War that the expenditures were necessary for obtaining military information, $25,000.

Mr. DYER and Mr. MILLER of Minnesota rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I did not know the gentleman from Minnesota was a member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I was on my feet before the gentleman, and for that reason I was recognized. Certainly I could not discuss it more intelligently than the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word in reference to this part of the bill upon which we are now engaged, and especially because of the action of the House a moment ago in an affirmative vote in view of the motion to reduce expenditures in the preceding paragraph from $200,000 to $114,000, and that in the face of the statement made by the chairman of the committee that the amount had already been reduced from the estimate submitted by the War Department from $800,000 to $200,000. It seems to me that this is perhaps the most important item in this bill, bar none. It is very difficult for us or for any people to throw off habits long formed, customs, ideas, established usages, and now we must recognize one thing, it seems to me, to start with, and that is that we have a Military Establishment. We have a Military Establishment that has cost a good deal of money. We have one that has just performed a signal service to the country and to the world. Now, we should do, it seems to me, one of two things, either abolish the Military Establishment, because we do not want it any more and do not care for any service that it can render, or we should support this Military Establishment in a scientific, sensible, and, you might say, sane manner. If we are to do this latter, then we should give heed to the latest military thought and to the experience we have recently had. A fool perhaps can never get wisdom, but the membership of this House certainly represents a very high grade of intelligence, and I am sure we get wisdom from day to day. Officers of the Army, about whom we have heard so much to-day, likewise are a high grade of men, and they get wisdom, so that what they know to-day may be better than what they thought was knowledge yesterday, and so with ourselves. When we entered this war we had a General Staff which had been with us for several years and had done some conspicuously good work, but that which our military men stood aghast at was the fact that in the General Staff work they never recognized that part to which military intelligence belonged. Any observer, any student, any participant in the great war through which we have just passed knows that the most important part of any army, bar none, was the intelligence branch. The German Army had it developed to the highest possible point of efficiency. They indulged in activities and in ways that we do not approve and that we do not propose to imitate, but they had developed their branch of intelligence in their general staff until it was a marvel of efficiency and was the real reason why they were able to do such wonderful things, even though the world was pitted against them. The French, next to the Germans, had the most perfect intelligence branch of their general staff, and in some respects it was as good as the German. It was almost as good, on the whole, and in some branches perhaps superior. It was the bulwark of the allied army. The British Army had no general staff comparable with the German or the French, and in their general staff they had no military intelligence branch worthy of the name. The British Government and the British officers told you, I know, who visited there and studied, as they told me, that one of the things they first had to do was to build up an intelligence branch, and they would that they had started years back to do it; that before any movement, big or little, in offense or defense, could occupy the attention of a commanding officer up to a platoon commander, a battalion commander, or a brigade commander up to an army commander, prepared to do all and his best, the guide for that all was the work of the intelligence branch of the staff.

We have had nothing of the kind in this country. Our Army at the outset had nothing worthy of the name. We have during this war, by reason of appropriations and power in the hands of military officers, built up an intelligance branch that is splendid, to say the least.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can I have five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WALSH. Is it a fact that the greatest intelligence branch of any army in the world was maintained by the Russian Army?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Not in the least degree. The gentleman is certainly misinformed.

Mr. WALSH. That is my information, gathered from reading.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. They had a spy system honeycombed with inefficiency and graft, and it was not worth a single kopeck that they ever paid for it. The German system was infinitely efficient; the French system infinitely efficient and patriotically superb.

As I was saying a moment ago, the British democracy had no intelligence branch on their staff. We had none. We have during this war built up one, and a good one, and now it should be maintained. I repeat it, if I may, for emphasis, that if we are to have an Army at all let us have an Army that is efficient; let us provide them with the instrumentalities they need in order to scientifically do their work. It may be again, as it has been time and again during the last two years, that the lives of many hundreds and even thousands will be saved by the intelligence work of that branch of the staff. We do not want to make war either for offense or defense, but the world knows we will fight if necessary. But if we are going to fight, let us fight with a superior intelligence, as we know we can fight with a supreme courage. And the way to equip ourselves is by the experience which we have had recently, and perpetuate the institution which they have built up—the intelligence branch of the Army, that requires ramifications out through the countries of the world; that requires a headquarters at Washington; that requires reasonable appropriation; and instead of $200,000—a paltry sum—they might easily use a million or more.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I certainly will.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman from Minnesota seems to be pretty well posted on this matter. I would like to have him explain to the committee what are the functions of the intelligence department in peace times?

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. It certainly is a large contract to submit to me in the three or four minutes which I have at my disposal. I could give a catalogue of a great variety of activities. But let me cite the gentleman to this, that we are not now in peace times, quite. We hope to be soon. In peace times you build your military strength. It was in peace times that the intelligence branch of the German Army gathered the material that enabled the German Army to stagger the civilization of the world. It was the accumulation of military intelligence in peace times that enabled the French Army to beat the Hun, with all their efficiency and intelligence and strength. It seems to me the part of wisdom on our part that we should maintain this branch of the Military Establishment, this modern and most extremely important branch of our Army.

There is one other subject I want to say a word on, because I do not want to trespass on the time of the committee, before I leave. We have had a great deal of discussion in the past two days on military matters. It is not surprising that gentlemen will differ on many of the principles involved in our military system and our military life. I have noted, however, with some degree of concern, as others have, perhaps all of you, the general disposition to find fault and complain at this hour. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] entertained us with a very vigorous exposition of his views, and whether or not we agree with him, we are all ready to take off our hats to him and say, "GORDON, you always stand by your convictions and you let the world know where you stand." [Applause.] I like that kind of a fighter, and not the kind of man who in private will say a thing and come out in public and try to dodge it because he thinks somebody will not like his position. It seems to me if we are going to gather one further lessen from the war of recent times we have got to change another habit which we have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I do not feel like asking the committee for an extension. So this nugget of wisdom I will postpone for some other time.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota may have five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Minnesota will not take the time now.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am very grateful to my friend from Pennsylvania, but I do think the committee should read a while.

Mr. MANN. We have read scarcely three pages of this bill. It is much more important to pass the bill, from the point of view of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], than to talk about it, although we always love to hear the gentleman talk.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. If the gentleman will permit, I was led to make the observations I made for fear some gentleman would move to strike out this item here. I thought some one would be encouraged to take the whole life, soul, and breeches out of it.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I want to know something about this item. This item is to pay the expenses of observing operations of the war abroad. Will the gentleman say it is submitted merely as an item for possible use, or is it submitted with the expectation that it will be actually used, the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think it is fair to state that it is a possible contingency. I do not think any money was used in the last two years of this war out of this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I supposed it was an appropriation to be used if a situation arose where it would be necessary.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota always speaks interestingly, and usually accurate is the information that he gives. But I think his criticism is unjust when he accuses me of striking the life out of the item for the Intelligence Department. I think I have had occasion, perhaps, to know as much about the Intelligence Bureau as the gentleman. I have a dear friend who is connected with that bureau, and I suspect I know as much about it as the gentleman from Minnesota, and I admire the work of that bureau as much as he does; but when we give them ten times as much as they have had heretofore for the purchase of law books and books of reference and subscriptions to newspapers and periodicals, and things like that, I think we have been pretty liberal. We have not cut the life out of it when, where they had heretofore only $11,000, we give them for contingent expenses—not for salaries, but little expenses that can not be classified and appropriated for in advance—when we give them over ten times as much, or $103,000 more, than they ever had before. I think they can get along very well on that sum for contingent expenses, and I think they may be ready to cut down to such extent as may be necessary, the same as any other department.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman suppose it will be possible at any place to make a reduction in the amount of a billion dollars or a hundred million dollars in this bill without somebody crying, even if it amounts to only 50 cents, that the whole country will be destroyed?

Mr. WINGO. No. I expect there will be a howl. The remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota remind me of the fact that it is hard to get away from old ideas. It is hard to get men in public office to cease thinking that the only way they can maintain the efficiency of their offices is to continue to add to their appropriations. That is a vital fault in men who have enthusiasm for their work, or for their bureau or department—to reach out and get more funds. Such men frequently think that the possibilities of good service to the Government are only limited by the amount which they can get out of the Treasury for their activities.

I do not complain of that. It is for us to pass upon the necessity of each case, and I, knowing what I do about the intelligence department, feel that I am about $100,000 extravagant when I favor giving them $114,000 for a contingent fund.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I heartily agree with the philosophy of the gentleman, that he has stated so ably; but it is a peculiarity of the Military Intelligence Section that its work is largely contingent, is it not?

Mr. WINGO. No.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. What we know as the Military Intelligence Section makes studies of various conditions—social, economic, political, and military—in the countries with which we may be at war. That is one of their functions.

Mr. WINGO. Well, you may name almost anything and I will agree that it is included in what the intelligence department believes are its functions. I know one of those gentlemen, and I love him, and he thinks he has authority to investigate and look into almost anything.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. We have in this branch of work little that is distinctly routine, that can be foreseen and provided for to the last detail. It is to a large extent contingent, is it not? It is a diffusive study.

Mr. WINGO. No. I would be inclined to agree with the gentleman in his idea at first blush, but if you get down to it you will find that they can reasonably anticipate any expenditure by classification, if not by particular detail.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thought that one of their functions was to follow the current of affairs that might unexpectedly develop in any country as to which we were interested in having information.

Mr. WINGO. They will do that, anyway.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They will have to do it, even if they incur a deficiency.

Mr. WINGO. Does not the gentleman think that $114,000 will give them all the law books and magazines and periodicals they need to read? Their traveling expenses are taken care of. Their automobiles are furnished. Their telephone and telegraphic bills are paid. Appropriations are made for everything—traveling allowances, subsistence, commutation of quarters, and everything else. What is there that you do not cover?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Do they not have some agents abroad?

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; they have agents abroad, and they are taken care of.

Mr. DENT. I thought we had disposed of that.

Mr. WINGO. I did, too; but my genial friend from Minnesota resurrected it after we had gone by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SERVICE SCHOOLS.

To provide means for the theoretical and practical instruction at the Army service schools (including the Army Staff College, the Army School of the Line, the Army Field Engineer School, the Army Field Service School and Correspondence School for Medical Officers, and the Army Signal School) at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., the Mounted Service School at Fort Riley, Kans., and the School of Fire for Field Artillery, and for the Infantry School of Arms at Fort Sill, Okla., by the purchase of textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, the purchase of modern instruments and material for theoretical and practical instruction, employment of temporary, technical, or special services, and for all other absolutely necessary expenses, to be allotted in such proportion as may, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, be for the best interests of the military service. Not exceeding $300 per month may be used for the payment of $100 per month to a translator at the Army Service Schools, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., $100 per month to a translator at the School of Fire for Field Artillery and $100 per month to a translator at the Infantry School of Arms, Fort Sill, Okla., to be appointed by the commandants of the schools named, with the approval of the Secretary of War, $75,0000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. I will ask the chairman of the committee what is the necessity for the provision from lines 11 to 18, inclusive? It may be very proper, but I want to know what is the necessity for it. What is the need of these translators out at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.? Are they Indian translators, or what are they?

Mr. DENT. The testimony before the committee on that subject was that these men were doing very valuable service out there. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] to explain that.

Mr. WINGO. What translators are they?

Mr. ANTHONY. They are translators whose services are used in translating military books and publications in foreign languages for the benefit of the student officers who are detailed from various branches of the Army.

Mr. WINGO. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. ANTHONY. While we are on this item I want to make a statement for the information of the House. If there is one branch of the military service that has demonstrated its great value and utility in the present war, it has been the service schools that are provided for in this paragraph. Some of the Members of the House have, thoughtlessly perhaps, made observations reflecting upon some of the graduates of these schools. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] the other day, for instance, rather unfairly, I thought, referred to the "Leavenworth clique," meaning the graduates of the service school at Leavenworth, when he referred to some of the injustices that had befallen officers of the National Guard in France. The gentleman overlooked the fact that because of the operation of the service schools for the past 20 years, when this country finally got into the great war it found it had a considerable body of highly trained officers who were not only the peer and the equal of the high ranking officers of the armies of the other great nations of the world but that we had an abundance of men skilled in military strategy and the art of war who were the superiors of the men in any of the armies of Europe with whom they had to cope. And because they had received the benefit of the wonderful training provided by these service schools it happens that a very large percentage of the commanders of our army corps, of our divisions and our brigades, were graduates of the Leavenworth service schools, placed in these high commands because of their splendid qualifications, all the result of the advanced education afforded by these schools.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANTHONY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KREIDER. How are the men appointed to these schools, or how do they enter the service?

Mr. ANTHONY. The men are detailed by the Secretary of War. It has been the custom to detail at least one officer from each regiment to attend the particular service school which covers the branch of the Army to which he is assigned.

Mr. KREIDER. Are these men limited to graduates of West Point?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; they are not. In fact, the service schools are partially intended to take in hand men who need brushing up, as well as men who have special qualifications for higher study, and who are given opportunities to broaden their military education at these institutions.

Mr. KREIDER. Are they chosen from the privates?

Mr. ANTHONY. Many of them have risen to commissions from the ranks. The gentleman understands that they are already officers of the Army before they are assigned to these schools.

Mr. KREIDER. Commissioned or noncommissioned?

Mr. ANTHONY. Commissioned officers. They are selected for the purpose of bringing them up to the very latest and most advanced methods of the art of war, so that they shall have a much greater knowledge of the handling of troops in larger bodies than the training with the ordinary organizations of the line with which they have heretofore been trained. They are given the very latest developments in the higher branches of military strategy, and it was due to this splendid education that these men were able to so satisfactorily solve the great problems they were called upon to face in Europe. Our service schools, and particularly the School of the Line and Staff College at Fort Leavenworth, have proven to have been tremendous assets and to have contributed largely to the splendid laurels achieved by American arms on European battle fields.

Mr. FIELDS. Of course, this may be properly termed a postgraduate course in military science, may it not?

Mr. ANTHONY. Absolutely; a postgraduate course in military tactics. It is brought to them from all corners of the earth. As I said, nearly 75 per cent of the men in the high command of our forces were graduates of these schools. They not only themselves were qualified, but immediately after the Army went to France they established a staff school at Langres, France, and practically every one of the instructors and directors and officers of the Langres staff school were graduates of the Leavenworth service schools. They there took charge of the advanced training of the officers of the National Guard and of the National Army who had no previous higher military education or experience in staff duties in handling large units of men, and in a comparatively short time they were fit for high command. When the history of this war is written these service schools will naturally be given credit for much of this great work.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. At this juncture, when we have been talking about students, I think the committee will indulge me with time enough to tell—and it will only take a few minutes—of a brilliant student, the son of James D. Hughes, of Toronto, Canada. He was a very brilliant young man, who answered the call soon after the war broke out and paid the supreme sacrifice. Somebody in speaking of the war referred to the deaths as the feeding of the guns, and some one else spoke about not being willing to raise their sons for the Army. Dr. Hughes, with that in mind, wrote a few verses dedicated to his son. The verses were printed in the European edition of the New York Herald, and I would like to read them.

THE SON.

(By Dr. James D. Hughes.)

God gave my son in trust to me;
Christ died for him, and he should be
A man for Christ. He is his own
And God's and man's; not mine alone.
He was not mine to "give." He gave Himself that he might help to save
All that a Christian should revere,
All that enlightened men hold dear.

"To feed the guns!" Oh, torpid soul!
Awake, and see life as a whole.
When freedom, honor, justice, right,
Were threatened by the despot's might,
With heart aflame and soul alight
He bravely went for God to fight
Against base savages whose pride
The laws of God and man defied;
Who slew the mother and her child,
Who maidens pure and sweet defiled.
He did not go "to feed the guns."
He went to save from ruthless Huns
His home and country, and to be
A guardian of democracy.

"What if he does not come?" you say?
Ah, well! My sky would be more gray,
But through the clouds the sun would shine
And vital memories be mine.
God's test of manhood is, I know,
Not "Will he come?" but "Did he go?"
My son well knew that he might die,
And yet he went, with purpose high,
To fight for peace and overthrow
The plans of Christ's relentless foe.

He dreaded not the battle field;
He went to make fierce vandals yield.
If he comes not again to me
I shall be sad; but not that he Went like a man—a hero true—
His part unselfishly to do.
My heart will feel exultant pride
That for humanity he died.

"Forgotten grave!" This selfish plea
Awakes no deep response in me,
For, though his grave I may not see,
My boy will ne'er forgotten be;
My real son can never die;
'Tis but his body that may lie
In foreign land, and I shall keep Remembrance fond, forever deep
Within my heart of my true son,
Because of triumph that he won.
It matters not where anyone
May lie and sleep when work is done.

It matters not where some men live;
If my dear son his life must give,
Hosannas I will sing for him,
E'en though my eyes with tears be dim.
And when the war is over, when
His gallant comrades come again,
I'll cheer them as they're marching by,
Rejoicing that they did not die.
And when his vacant place I see
My heart will bound with joy that he
Was mine so long—my fair, young son—
And cheer for him whose work is done.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

CONTINGENCIES, HEADQUARTERS OF MILITARY DEPARTMENTS, DISTRICTS, AND TACTICAL COMMANDS.

For contingent expenses at the headquarters of the several territorial departments, territorial districts, tactical divisions and brigades, including the Staff Corps serving thereat, being for the purchase of the necessary articles of office, toilet, and desk furniture, stationery, ice, and potable water for office use when necessary, binding, maps, technical books of reference, professional and technical newspapers and periodicals, payment for which may be made in advance, and police utensils, to be allotted by the Secretary of War, and to be expended in the discretion of the commanding officers of the several military departments, districts, and tactical commands, $15,000.

Mr. FLOOD. I would like to ask the chairman or some member of the Military Committee where the provision comes in for the purchase and maintenance of the automobiles used by Army officers.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There is an item for transportation for the Army later in the bill, on page 29, and all the automobiles under the new organization are purchased by one authority.

Mr. FLOOD. Does it provide that these generals and colonels shall have a separate automobile for their personal use?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No, sir.

Mr. FLOOD. How many passenger automobiles are assigned especially for the use of Army officers in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I asked that very question of an officer in charge of the Motor Transport Service of the Army, and he stated that the total number of automobiles assigned for the use of the officers of the Army in the District of Columbia were less than 200.

Mr. FLOOD. Less than 200! What use have they for 200 passenger automobiles?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will yield, I had a letter to-day from Gen. Drake, who is the officer the gentleman from Nebraska refers to, and I am quite certain that the number he gives was 260 or 246 used in this city, 120 in use in New York, and various numbers in other places. I also asked Gen. Drake a few days ago what the consumption of gasoline was by these specially assigned cars in Washington, and he said it was 1,068 gallons a day for the use of the Motor Transport Service. It is nothing more or less than a free taxi service.

Mr. FLOOD. What I was asking about was the number of passenger automobiles that are paid for out of the appropriations made in this bill and used by Army officers.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the information I am endeavoring to give the gentleman.

Mr. FLOOD. My information accords with the gentleman's.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Massachusetts does not mean to say that there are 260 passenger automobiles in The Adjutant General's Department?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the inquiry the gentleman made.

Mr. FLOOD. No; I mean in the entire War Department.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. FLOOD. I made a subsequent inquiry which the gentleman answered in reference to the number of automobiles used by officers in the War Department in Washington.

Mr. KAHN. In all the departments?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes. And now it seems there are two hundred and sixty-odd.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I presume the definite figures have been given by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY]. When I asked the question in the committee hearing evidently they had not been computed, for they said there were less than 200.

Mr. FLOOD. Is this bill going to carry an appropriation authorizing the use of any such number of automobiles by Army officers in the city of Washington?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This bill does not authorize nor does our committee attempt to determine the number of automobiles that shall be assigned to these different departments from the appropriation. We appropriate a certain amount of money for the Motor Transport Corps, and it is up to the departments to use those automobiles where they think they are essential to the conduct of the Army.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Who is the officer who is responsible for assigning these automobiles as they have been assigned in the past?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The information that is given to the committee is that now the purchase of automobiles is concentrated in one department of the Army, called the Purchase, Storage, and Traffic Division, in which they purchase all of the automobiles and automobile trucks, and everything of an automobile character, for the Army, and any bureau requiring those vehicles must apply to that particular department for them. Then this particular division, the Purchase, Storage, and Traffic Division, as I understand it, passes upon the necessity for those vehicles for that particular bureau applying, and when it is to the satisfaction of the Division of Purchase, Storage, and Traffic, and it goes up to the Chief of Staff, and I suppose eventually may be approved by the Secretary of War, the automobiles are purchased.

Mr. FLOOD. Is there nothing in this bill to prohibit that?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that I do not think this committee can undertake to say how many automobiles should be used, whether a certain officer shall have one or not. That is a matter for the administration of the Army.

Mr. FLOOD. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. FLOOD. Does not the Congress appropriate for certain officials that it thinks should have automobiles?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No.

Mr. FLOOD. It does for the Secretary of War and other Cabinet officers, and if there is any reason why Army officers should have automobiles at Government expense, why should not an explicit appropriation be made for that purpose?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think perhaps this may be giving a wrong impression if it gives the impression that each officer has an individual automobile——

Mr. FLOOD. A great many of them have. I have a list of them who have automobiles assigned to them individually.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That, of course, turns, just as my colleague says, upon the responsibility of those who are in command of the Army.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That they need them.

Mr. FLOOD. Congress ought to fix it so that no one, however high in command, can have the right to assign them.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Does the gentleman think that he or I can determine whether The Adjutant General of the Army ought to have an automobile?

Mr. FLOOD. I think I can determine it.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I think I can determine it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have very great respect for the ability of these gentlemen, but I doubt if they can do that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Can not the gentleman say whether or not every morning from 9 to 9.30 o'clock the streets of Washington should be filled with automobiles carrying young officers, 26 or 27 years of age, who are lolling around the cars, whistling, smoking, being taken down to their offices, when God knows it would do them a lot of good to get out and walk? The streets are full of automobiles lugging these loafers down to their offices.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I have confirmed the statement I made a few moments ago by telephoning to my office in reference to the letter to which I referred. This letter states that in the District of Columbia there are 260 passenger automobiles in use by the Army. One hundred and fifty-two of them are in general service in this city, leaving a balance of 108, which, I take it, are especially assigned to particular officers. Just what he meant by that I am not certain, but 152 of them are in general service. The total in use is 260. The consumption of gasoline is 1,068 gallons per day, which would mean, at 25 cents, a cost of over $250 a day for gasoline alone, to say nothing of the upkeep of the cars and the paying of the men to drive them.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman state the cost of these automobiles to the Government?

Mr. TREADWAY. The upkeep of them is all I was referring to. The price of gasoline alone would be $250 a day for the convenience of men riding around the streets of Washington. Some of these men are assigned chauffeurs, and I think that we figure that the cost of each man is about $2,000 a year. Is it not?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The chauffeur draws the pay of his rank, whatever it may be.

Mr. TREADWAY. He is a private, probably, and he draws a private's pay, as well as the cost of his clothing and his board and general expenses.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. But it costs the same as any other soldier.

Mr. TREADWAY. It costs the same as any other soldier. These cars cost the Government not less than $150 to $200 per month, and two-thirds of them are used as a convenience to certain officers, and they specify those that they care for or want. That is all they are good for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

That purchase and exchange of typewriting machines, to be paid for from this appropriation, may be made at the special price allowed to schools teaching stenography and typewriting without obligating typewriter companies to supply these machines to all departments of the Government at the same price.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. WINGO. Well, I make the point of order on the paragraph. It is plainly subject to the point of order.

Mr. DENT. What is the paragraph?

Mr. WINGO. Purchase of typewriting machines; page 6.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the chairman desire to say?

Mr. DENT. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I offer the customary provision we put in other bills covering this very question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before the Chair rules——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asked the chairman of the committee if he wished to say anything on the point of order, and he said he conceded it; therefore, the Chair sustained the point of order. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 12 insert the following paragraph:

That no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be used during the fiscal year 1920 for the purchase of any typewriting machine at a price in excess of the lowest price paid by the Government of the United States for the same make and substantially the same model of machine during the fiscal year 1918; such price shall include the value of any typewriting machine or machines given in exchange, but shall not apply to special prices granted on typewriting machines used in schools of the District of Columbia or of the Indian Service, the lowest of which special prices paid for typewriting machines shall not be exceeded in future purchases for such schools: Provided, That in construing this section the Commissioner of Patents shall advise the Comptroller of the Treasury as to whether the changes in any typewriter are of such structural character as to constitute a new machine not within the limitations of this section.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman makes the point of order, I am ready to be heard.

Mr. DENT. I make the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the provision is a limitation upon expenses. It was passed on about three different times in the last two years. It is the identical language which Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Courts, of the Committee on Appropriations, worked out several years ago to cover this question. It is carried in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and it has been carried in other bills heretofore, and it is plainly in order on the ground it is a limitation that actually worked out a saving of thousands of dollars. Under the Holman rule it is plainly in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold the order for about three minutes?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman is going to reserve the point of order—well, go ahead, we will save time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas has just made a point of order against a paragraph that would have resulted in a distinct saving to the Government, but he now substitutes a provision that will entail additional expense on the Government. He has offered as an amendment a provision that has been carried for a number of years in the legislative appropriation bill granting a privilege to the Government in the purchase of its typewriting machines at a special price, but the provision which he offers does not extend the privilege of the lowest price for these typewriting machines that is granted to schools. That was the purpose of the paragraph carried in the report of the committee. It was intended that in this Coast Artillery school all typewriters which were to be used in that school were to be furnished at the special price accorded by manufacturers of typewriters to schools generally.

Now he proposes as an amendment a provision that does not grant to this school the rate that is extended to schools generally. I think the gentleman was under a misapprehension of the facts when he made the point of order and when he offered this new amendment. I know he is sincere in his desire to economize, but I think he should withdraw his point of order on the paragraph that is carried in the bill and withdraw the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Why should this department have a provision in the bill and get a lower price on its typewriters than various other branches of the Government?

Mr. STAFFORD. The typewriting concerns have established a special price for typewriters——

Mr. WALSH. But that was not my inquiry.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am answering the gentleman in my own way. For typewriters when used by typewriting schools generally. Then the legislative bill carries a provision providing for the purchase of typewriting machines at a price that has been fixed for some years by the manufacturers. But that price is still higher than the price the typewriting machine companies supply the machines to schools for. This provision here was to sell to the artillery school these machines at the same price for which they agreed to supply them to the schools generally.

Mr. WALSH. What is the use of purchasing the typewriters? They have enough there now to build a fence with.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the gentleman would have been consistent if he had made a point of order and had stood pat.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know what the gentleman means by "standing pat."

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is young in politics, or otherwise he would be thoroughly versed in that technical phrase.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman going to insist on his point of order? I am ready for the Chair to rule on it. I shall not take the time of the committee, except in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman is in error when he thinks that the provision that went out on my point of order is a saving. It has been tried and found not to be a saving. The provision that I offered was a provision that was included in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill that we passed, and is in the identical language worked out by Mr. Chairman Fitzgerald of the Appropriations Committee several years ago. There is not any justification for the typewriter companies to refuse to furnish to every department of the Government typewriters at the lowest price that they furnish them to any department of the Government.

But if they furnish machines to one branch of the Military Establishment at a certain price, I can not understand why they can not furnish the same machines to every other branch of the Government at the same price. I think the gentleman was mistaken when he said that this item would have saved money.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question but what this would have saved money.

Mr. WINGO. I did not rely upon my own information, but I went to those whom I thought knew, and they said it would not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman state who those persons are?

Mr. WINGO. And it would nullify the provision I have offered, which is in the legislative bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Who are those persons who said it would not?

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman can easily ascertain. I know what the typewriter companies have been trying to get. The Auditor of the Treasury has passed upon this question, and under his rulings we saved $5 a machine on every machine the Government bought.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for a division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 22.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. A point of order was made and sustained on the paragraph beginning with line 14 down to line 19. Does that include line 13?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order, as the Chair has it marked in the bill, includes line 13.

Mr. WINGO. Thirteen to nineteen.

Mr. MANN. If the Clerk has it that way, all right; but the question has arisen lately, and has bothered the man in enrolling the bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER.

SIGNAL SERVICE OF THE ARMY.

Telegraph and telephone systems: Purchase, equipment, operation, and repair of military telegraph, telephone, radio, cable, adn signaling systems; signal equipments and stores, field glasses, telescopes, heliographs, signal lanterns, flags, and other necessary instruments; wind vanes, barometers, anemometers, thermometers, and other meteorological instruments; motorcycles, motor-driven and other vehicles for technical and official purposes in connection with the construction, operation, and maintenance of communication or signaling systems, and supplies for their operation and maintenance; professional and scientific books of reference, pamphlets, periodicals, newspapers, and maps for use in the office of the Chief Signal Officer; telephone apparatus, including rental and payment for commercial, exchange, message, trunk line, long distance, and leased line telephone service at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, excepting local telephone service for the various bureaus of the War Department in the District of Columbia and toll messages pertaining to the office of the Secretary of War; electric time service; the rental of commercial telegraph lines and equipment and their operation at or connecting any post, camp, cantonment, depot, arsenal, headquarters, hospital, aviation station, or other office or station of the Army, but not including payment for individual telegraph messages transmitted over commercial lines; electrical installations and maintenance at military posts, cantonments, camps, and stations of the Army; fire control and direction apparatus and matériel for Field Artillery; salaries of civilian employees, including those necessary as instructors at vocational schools; supplies, general repairs, reserve supplies, and other expenses connected with the collecting and transmitting of information for the Army by telegraph or otherwise; experimentation and research for the purpose of developing improvements in apparatus and methods of signaling, including machines, instruments, and other equipment for laboratory and repair purposes; purchase, lease, construction, alterations, and repair for such buildings required for storing or guarding Signal Corps supplies, equipment, and personnel when not otherwise provided for, including the land therefor, the introduction of water, electric light and power, sewerage, grading; roads and walks, and other equipment required, $4,000,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the word "purchase," on page 6, line 22; and on page 8, in line 9, I make the point of order against the word "purchase" and the word "construction."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DENT. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Creating, maintaining, and operating at technical schools and colleges, and at established flying schools, courses of instruction for aviation students, including cost of construction, equipment, and supplies necessary for instruction and subsistence of students, and excluding pay of military instructors and extra pay allowed candidates for commission (cadets) while at flying schools; extra pay allowed candidates for commission (cadets) while at flying schools; vocational training in trades related to aviation, including the employment of necessary civilian instructors, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, books of reference, scientific and professional papers, and instruments and material for theoretical and practical instruction at aviation schools; purchase of supplies for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs made by aerial observers; purchase of aviation supplies and equipment to be furnished Air Service organizations to be established during the year, and to maintain and replace the equipment of organizations already in service; establishment, enlargement, equipment, maintenance, and operation of aviation stations, balloon schools, fields for testing and experimental work, including the acquisition of land or any interest in land, by purchase, lease, condemnation, or otherwise; improvement of such land and making same suitable for the purpose intended; procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, telephones, telegraphs, and sewerage; purchase of stoves and other cooking and heating apparatus, kitchen and table ware, and furniture and equipment for kitchens, mess halls, officers' quarters, barracks, hospitals, and other buildings, screens, lockers, refrigerators, and all other equipment; purchase, manufacture, and installation of all kinds of machinery, tools, material, supplies, and equipment for repair and maintenance of aircraft, buildings, and improvements of aviation stations and balloon schools, and testing and experimental stations, or property or appliances used in connection with aviation at home and abroad; payment of mileage to officers of the Army traveling on duty in connection with aviation; salaries and wages of civilian employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere as may be necessary, and payment of their traveling and other necessary expenses; actual and necessary expenses of officers and enlisted men and civilian employees of the Army and authorized agents sent on special duty at home and abroad for aviation purposes, including observation and investigation of foreign military operations and organizations; experimental investigation and purchase and development of new types of aircraft; necessary expenses incidental to the administration of the Air Service; all damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad, $10,000,000: Provided, That claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad may be settled out of the funds appropriated hereunder, when each claim is substantiated by a survey report of a board of officers appointed by the commanding officer of the nearest aviation post and approved by the Director of Military Aeronautics: Provided, however, That the claims so settled and paid from the sum hereby appropriated shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $150,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire first as to the necessity, at the beginning of the paragraph, of "creating, maintaining, and operating at technical schools and colleges and at established flying schools courses of instruction for aviation students." Why should we provide here for sending Army boys to technical schools and colleges? How much of it is proposed to be done?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will state to the gentleman that they have a practice of sending certain students to highly developed technical schools in certain mechanical lines, like the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Boston, to give certain instruction that those institutions give better and more cheaply to the Government than we could afford to establish ourselves schools to give that sort of instruction.

Mr. MANN. If it is limited to that, I can see a good reason for that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the purpose stated.

Mr. MANN. The War Department some time ago entered upon quite a program of sending people to schools throughout the country, most of which was useless extravagance. Is it proposed to continue that through this item, or is it simply to take men who are already in the Army in the Aviation Corps and send them to technical schools?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That was the information given to the committee, that there were certain men in the service that might require this special technical instruction, and this was to give them the power and the authority to send them there.

Mr. MANN. Well, connected with the language in line 16, providing for "vocational training in trades related to aviation," of course, they might start to educate anybody they pleased, in or out of the Army. Now, what do they propose?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have no information about that, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. I do not think the committee was given any information as to what was contemplated there.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I know how these items get into the bill. During the war probably there was occasion for all this language, but now that the war is over there is probably no reason why the General Government should undertake to teach everybody in the country through the payment of tuition and expenses. It seems to me that where it is practicable we ought to begin to eliminate from the Army bill language which was expressly emergency language for the war.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It seems to me that the language in the opening section does not refer to what the gentleman on the Committee on Military Affairs referred to at all. It refers to establishing, creating, and maintaining courses of instruction, not maintaining students at those places at all. It seems to be designed to support courses of instruction in these various institutions rather than to send students there for education.

Mr. MADDEN. What does the word "creating" mean here? Does it mean creating schools?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Courses of instruction.

Mr. MANN. Connected with the rest of the language, "including cost of construction, equipment, and supplies necessary for instruction and subsistence of students, and excluding pay of military instructors and extra pay allowed candidates for commission (cadets)," I could not understand what that meant after reading it over a good many times, because it is followed by "extra pay allowed candidates for commission (cadets) while at flying schools."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The reason for that particular language is, as I understand it, this: There had been at one time an allowance of pay of $100 a month to these cadets who were students in the schools learning to fly, and later that law was changed so that these cadets received only the pay of enlisted men, if that was their rank. The statement was made to our committee that these men, while they were being trained, were in the most hazardous position, that they were the men who principally got hurt.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is now seeking to explain the reason for a part of the language in the bill. But here is what I direct his attention to:

Excluding pay of military instructors and extra pay allowed candidates for commission (cadets) while at flying schools.

And then in the next line:

Extra pay allowed candidates for commission (cadets) while at flying schools.

First, you exclude it and then you include it in identically the same language. First you say it is not, and then you say it is.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I know the reason for the appropriation was given to us, that those men should receive that pay for the reason I stated. Why it should also be excluded I can not say.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman in reference to giving authority to enlarge the aviation stations, to buy new land and improve it as they please, and construct all the buildings they may choose to construct upon it. Is it not time for us now to say to the Army, "If you want to buy new land for a station, tell us what it is and tell the committee what you want"? If they want to construct a lot of new buildings, instead of giving to them $10,000,000 to use as they please, when we know that as we now see it—possibly not as we would have seen it if the war had continued, but as we now see it—there have been cases of gross extravagance in the purchase of land which was not needed.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that I think it was the intention of the committee to give no authority for the purchase of more land for these aviation training schools.

Mr. KAHN. Except in those cases, as I recall, where the negotiations for the purchase had been practically concluded.

Mr. MANN. But this is for the next fiscal year. If they have concluded negotiations for the purchase of land without any money to pay for it, they ought to come before Congress and ask for the money for that purchase and not try to slip it into the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I will say to the gentleman that this appropriation of $10,000,000, as he can readily see, is simply an estimate or guess. The department came before us asking for this purpose $17,337,000.

Mr. MANN. Oh, of course, the original estimate, and probably the language in the bill, were drawn before the armistice was agreed upon.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Probably. Now, if I may state, the principal item which induced the committee to grant the money was the experiment and research item. That is, they represented to us that they needed a goodly sum to carry on research work in this great field.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They asked for balloon research and building $1,600,000, and then they had a general item for the purchase of undeveloped types of balloons, $2,000,000. The sum of the items amounted to about $14,000,000. The committee decided that these items were such as should be given a rather liberal appropriation, so we fixed on a general sum of $10,000,000, thinking it would be sufficient to carry on this work.

Mr. MANN. I congratulate the Committee on Military Affairs. Aviation in the Army is more important than it is in the Navy. The Naval Committee brought in an item of $25,000,000, which the House reduced to $15,000,000. These two combined items will make $25,000,000 for experimental purposes, which is a very big sum of money.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. A vast sum of money.

Mr. STAFFORD. It ought to be all under one head.

Mr. MANN. Now, on page 11 it provides that all damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad may be paid out of the $10,000,000 appropriation. It uses the word "all." Then it includes a proviso that claims not exceeding $250 in amount for damages to persons and private property, resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad, may be settled out of the funds appropriated in this bill. What object is there in having the first provision as to the payment of "all" damages to persons if the $250 proviso is to stay in the bill?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It seems to me that it is contradictory language; first, it gives unlimited authority and then limits it to $250 in each case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on page 10, line 2, against the word "enlargement," also against the language beginning in line 4, page 10, "including the acquisition of land or any interest in land by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise; improvement of such land and making same suitable for the purpose intended."

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me before he makes the point of order? Would the general language "establishment, equipment, maintenance, and operation of aviation stations, balloon schools, fields for testing and experimental work," not grant authority to the department to purchase land? It says "establishment of aviation stations, balloon schools, fields for testing and experimental work."

Mr. MANN. I do not know. It may be that the comptroller would hold that it would, but my opinion—I had not thought about that part of it—was that they might establish some of these stations on land that the Government now owns, or at some military camp, and that might be a very proper thing to do; but they would not seek to enlarge them, except by the purchase of new land. I do not think we ought to start in on enlarging appropriations to give the department authority now to spend money as they please to buy land.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it not a fact that the department has a large number of fields at this time?

Mr. MANN. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I further reserve the point of order to make other points of order.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS. Under existing law the Government has leased the ground, where it has constructed very extensive improvements. In fact, I think most of the flying fields in this country are occupying leased ground, upon which the Government has an option of purchase. I presume the contracts of purchase are made under existing law. Does the gentleman think the point of order would lie against the proposed appropriation under which the Government would be permitted to purchase the land upon which it had taken an option under existing law?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Secretary of War and the Assistant Secretary of War appeared before the committee and assured us that for all the existing training camps and aviation fields they have the money appropriated by this Congress to complete the purchases if they determine to do so. This money would be for the purpose of buying entire new projects.

Mr. MANN. I do not suppose, as a matter of fact, that when the language was drafted under certain conditions that under existing conditions they would ask it. But, notwithstanding, I do not think it is a good thing to keep it in the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the committee will accept the gentleman's suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a further point of order against the language on page 11, beginning in line 5, "All damages to persons and private property resulting from the operation of aircraft at home and abroad." I think the proviso ought not to remain in.

Mr. DENT. I think it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Just a moment, if the gentleman will yield. This is not an unusual provision to carry, or, at least, it is not unique.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Mississippi will pardon me, I do not know that I should make the point of order if there was no other language in the bill, but it goes on to insert a proviso that is exactly contradictory.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I think that came about in this way. This same provision with some limitation is carried in the river and harbor appropriation bill. It is for this reason: Sometimes they will, in the improvement and operations of the boats for the Government, smash a little boat, say, valued at $50.

Mr. MANN. We do not, if the gentleman will permit me, in the river and harbor bill carry an unlimited authority to any department to settle the claims for damages.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. This is not unlimited.

Mr. MANN. The language to which I have made the point of order is unlimited.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I see his point now.

Mr. MANN. I know how it came about; somebody wrote the first provision, and then somebody else put in a proviso without looking at the first provision.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. I was under a misapprehension.

Mr. GORDON. I think, Mr. Chairman, that these two provisions are not necessarily in conflict. In the first place, there is the damage claim. Then it limits the amount that may be paid on any one claim to $250.

Mr. MANN. First it says all damages, but the proviso covers the whole case.

Mr. GORDON. That is true; but it simply limits the authority of the department to settle any one claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "at technical schools and colleges and," to be found on page 9, lines 8 and 9.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will move to strike it out, I will accept such an amendment.

Mr. CURRY of California. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

By unanimous consent Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. MCKEOWN were granted leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, let us finish the paragraph.

Mr. MADDEN. You will never get through with it. When they get through with the points of order we propose to move to strike it out so as to have it rewritten and confine it to the work that should be done under the law.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to serve notice now that it is my intention to-morrow morning to call up for consideration the conference report upon the war-contract bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama gives notice that he will call up the conference report on the war-contract bill to-morrow morning.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 14, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

CORRECTION—FOOD SUPPLIES FOR EUROPE.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, on January 24 when the Senate voted upon the bill (H. R. 13708) providing for the relief of such populations in Europe, and countries contiguous thereto, outside of Germany, as may be determined upon by the President as necessary, I had a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], who was unavoidably absent that day. I was informed that if present he would vote for the bill. I had a transfer, but having been informed that he would vote for the bill if present I voted without making the transfer. I have since learned from that Senator that an injustice was done him, and that had he been here he would have voted against the bill.

I take this opportunity to correct the injustice that was done the Senator from West Virginia.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Ohio relative to the punishment of one William Hohenzollern. It will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 4) relative to the punishment of William Hohenzollern.

Whereas it is charged by the press of the world, asserted by men of authority in a position to know, and believed by a large majority of the human race that William Hohenzollern, the former Kaiser and Emperor of Germany, actuated by a lust for world domination, was the instigator and cause of the recent world conflict of arms, which has drenched the fields of Europe in blood; entailed a sacrifice of millions of lives; maimed and crippled for life millions more; laid waste vast areas of cultivated lands with their happy homes; brought woe, want, and starvation to multitudes of innocent people; devastated thousands of villages and cities; and, with a ruthlessness hitherto unknown, has destroyed churches, cathedrals, and works of art held sacred for a thousand years; and

Whereas it is further charged and believed that said William Hohenzollern, disregarding international law, has violated solemn treaties made by his government; ordered his generals and soldiers to use brutal and inhuman methods of warfare never before used or known by civilized nations; that he commanded his officers and men to kill and murder defenseless men, women, and children; and that during said conflict he advocated such hellish designs and employed such infernal devices of warfare in order to overcome and destroy the cherished democracy of the world as to create himself the arch enemy of mankind and the greatest criminal of all times; and that his damnable acts finally constituted such a menace to the peace of the world that it challenged the sense of justice inherent in the United States, the friend and sponsor of human liberty, and caused her to enter the conflict, that she might assist in making the world safe for wide-world democracy;

Whereas tentative peace and safety has been obtained at such enormous cost and sacrifice resulting from the alleged acts of one man who, in a position of high authority, thirsted for world power to satisfy his vaulting ambition: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, That it is the sense of this body that "punishment of crime must be made certain in order that society may be safe" and that nations may be secure in their rights and liberties, whether the criminal be of high or low degree, whether he be a king or a peasant, a ruler or a slave; that in the interest of the welfare of the human family and for the future safety of nations justice demands that William Hohenzollern should be apprehended, such formal charges preferred against him as the evidence warrants; that he be given a fair and impartial trial with full opportunity for defense, and, if found guilty, that he be made to suffer punishment commensurate with his crimes, the same as any other criminal; and

That the secretary of state of Ohio be instructed to prepare and forward one copy of this resolution to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., one copy to the President of the United States Senate, and one copy to the Department of the Secretary of State with the request that it be transmitted to President Woodrow Wilson at the peace conference at Paris as representing the sentiment of this general assembly.

CARL R. KIMBALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CLARENCE J. BROWN,
President of the Senate.

Adopted January 28, 1919.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
STATE OF OHIO,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, William D. Fulton, secretary of state of the State of Ohio, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of house joint resolution No. 4 as adopted by the general assembly January 28, 1919, and filed in the office of the secretary of state February 4, 1919, and is now on file in this office and in my official custody.

[SEAL.] WILLIAM D. FULTON,

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Ohio, petitioning Congress to investigate the origin and nature of the disease known as "influenza," which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 12) petitioning Congress to take action for the suppression of influenza.

Whereas this country has been devastated recently by an epidemic of one of the most deadly diseases known to science; and

Whereas medical experts are not agreed either as to its origin nor the proper mode of treatment; and

Whereas those countries where it was first prevalent suffered more than one attack of the scourge and there is reason to fear that we will have a like experience; and

Whereas the public health can not be safeguarded on State lines but is a matter of national concern: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

SECTION 1. That we request the Congress of the United States to appropriate an amount not less than $5,000,000 to be devoted to an investigation of the origin and nature of the disease commonly called "Spanish influenza" and of the best methods of counteracting it and to the protection of our national life by the total eradication of the germ or germs to which such disease is traceable.

SEC. 2. That copies of this resolution be sent by the secretary of state to the Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., and to the President of the Senate of the United States.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SESSION OF 1919.

A concurrent resolution to the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States.

Whereas the successful prosecution of the recent world-war would have been impossible without the staunch and loyal cooperation of the Nation's workers; and

Whereas many of these workers have while engaged in industry sustained injuries as serious and as enduring as those suffered by soldiers on the field of battle and are as greatly in need of rehabilitation in order that they may be restored to capacity for useful pursuits; and

Whereas there is now pending in Congress a bill known as the Smith-Bankhead bill, Senate 4922, House of Representatives 12880, which would make available for industrial and other cripples the same advantages of retraining that have been extended to soldiers wounded in the line of duty, granting aid from the Federal Treasury for the reeducation and placement of the disabled and giving the invaluable assistance of the Federal Government in standardizing, and developing such work: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition your honorable body to give early and favorable consideration to the aforesaid Smith-Bankhead bill, both as an act of justice and as a fitting recognition of the splendid service of American labor during the recent world crisis.

That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the President of the Senate and to each Senator and Representative from Minnesota.

W. I. NOLAN, Speaker.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INCOME-TAX RETURNS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, directed to the collectors of internal revenue throughout the country, advising them that taxpayers can make their returns in an incomplete and informal way in case they find that they are unable to make a complete return by the 15th of March. I think this matter ought to be given as wide publicity as possible, and upon the suggestion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue I wish to ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, in connection with the request of the Senator from North Carolina, I suggest that the letter to which he refers ought to be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish it also to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The request of the Senator from North Carolina will be complied with.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, D. C.

(Released Thursday, February 13.)

Although no general extension of time will be authorized for filing Federal income-tax returns due March 15, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue has approved a novel feature of tax collection which will serve for all practical purposes as a possible extension of 45 days for the filing of corporation income and excess-profits tax returns in cases where corporations are unable to complete and file their returns by March 15.

If a corporation finds that, for good and sufficient reason, it is impossible to complete its return by March 15, it may make a return of the estimated tax due and make payment thereof not later than March 15. If meritorious reason is shown as to why the corporation is unable to complete its return by the specified date, the collector will accept the payment of the estimated tax and agree to accept the revised and completed tax return within a period of not more than 45 days.

Under the plan adopted for corporation payments and returns, the Government will be able to collect approximately the amount of tax due on or before March 15, thus meeting its urgent needs, and corporations actually requiring further time for the preparation of their complete returns will be granted ample time in which to do so.

One of the advantages of this plan is that it relieves the taxpayer of one-half of 1 per cent interest per month that would attach to the payment of the taxes under an extension granted at the request of the taxpayer. The taxpayer will, of course, not be relieved of interest on such amount as his payment may fall short of the tax found later to be due on the basis of his final return.

Should the payment on March 15 of the estimated tax due be greater than the tax eventually found to be due on examination of the completed return, the excess payment will automatically be credited to the next installment, which will be due on June 15.

Provision for systematically handling this new feature will be made in the construction of the new return blanks for corporations. The new form will be a combined income and excess-profits blank, embodied in which is a detachable letter of remittance. Any corporation which finds that, for sufficient reasons, it can not complete its return by March 15 may detach and fill out the letter of remittance and forward same to the collector on or before March 15, together with a check, money order, or draft for the tax due on that date. If the exact tax is not known, the estimated tax due will be paid in this manner. A statement in writing of the reasons why it is impossible for the corporation to complete the return by the specified date must accompany every such remittance.

Individual taxpayers will be given similar privileges in cases in which it is made clear by the taxpayer that the time available is not sufficient to enable him to complete his return by March 15. No reason exists, according to the internal-revenue officials, for delaying the filing of the returns of individual incomes, except in unusually difficult cases.

Forms for returns of individual incomes up to $5,000 will be distributed by collectors within a few days. Forms for larger incomes will be available about February 24. Corporation blanks will be distributed by March 1. Regulations governing the administration of the new income tax will also be available before March 1.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first amendment of the committee is pending.

The SECRETARY. The first amendment of the committee is, on page 2, line 4, to strike out "$12,500" and insert "$18,750," so as to make the paragraph read:

Tenants Harbor, Me.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 12, Sixty-second Congress, third session, $18,750.

Mr. FLETCHER. This project is reported on favorably in House Document numbered 12, Sixty-second Congress, third session. It has the indorsement of the engineers in this language.

After a careful consideration of all data available the board reached the conclusion that the improvement of Tenants Harbor by the United States is now advisable in the interest of commerce and navigation to the extent of providing a channel 15 feet deep at mean low tide and 375 feet wide in the manner proposed by the district officer, estimated to cost $12,500, the full amount of which should be provided in one appropriation.

The House accepted the amount as specified in that report. Upon the hearing before the committee Gen. Taylor stated that that estimate was made in 1913, and that on account of increased cost of labor and material now it would require the sum of $18,750 to complete the improvement. Therefore the committee recommends that change, because it is advisable to complete the improvement rather than merely to start it.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Did the Senate committee proceed upon the theory that the present prices of everything will continue indefinitely, and therefore increase the cost by practically one-third?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not the belief, I think, of the Senate committee that the present high costs will continue indefinitely, but no one can tell, and at the present price of material and labor the engineers are of the opinion that it will cost $18,750 to complete this improvement. Of course, if it does not cost that amount they will have that much balance to go back into the Treasury.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator a general question, which will perhaps save my propounding the same question with respect to specific items? Have all these increases been based upon existing high prices, and has the committee not taken into account the fact that there may be and probably will be a reduction in prices before the execution of the projects?

Mr. FLETCHER. There are some items where the engineers think they could probably complete the project within the present estimate, but in other cases they have reason to think that the present prices require an increase. Of course, a work like this ought not to take very long to complete it; it ought to be completed in a very few months, and it is not likely that there will be any great decrease in prices of labor or material during the time required to complete this project.

Mr. KING. It seems to me it is unfair to the Government to make these appropriations based upon a standard which we know will not be maintained. As the days go by the standard will be reduced, and the cost will grow less. The appropriations it seems to me are entirely too large if they are based upon the standard of prices which now exists for products and labor.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question, more in the nature of a general question? Can the Senator tell us what the unexpended balances are on the various projects that are covered in the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have the list, and I can give those items as to any matter in the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Take this one of Tenants Harbor.

Mr. FLETCHER. That, of course, is a new project and never has been undertaken.

Mr. KENYON. What would the unexpended balances amount to, in a general way? I do not mean to have the Senator take up each item, but do they run up to $40,000,000 or $45,000,000?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; I do not know that I have them all footed up, but I take it that that is quite true.

Mr. KENYON. I noticed a statement in the minority report of the House committee to the effect that the unexpended balances amount to about $45,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think perhaps that is about correct as to the entire bill.

Mr. KENYON. There are $45,000,000 that could be used for these projects now unexpended?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is about correct. I have not footed them up, but I think that is practically correct. I had them printed as a committee document, the entire list furnished by the engineers, and it is available to the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I think Gen. Taylor stated to the committee that there were $50,000,000 on July 1 of last year.

Mr. FLETCHER. That would leave probably $45,000,000 now.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that I can furnish the list of items of unexpended balances, and they amount to a little over $45,000,000. The Senator is right in saying that there is an unexpended balance of $45,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think so, for the whole country, and for all the projects.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that means for all projects that are under way.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is true.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the Senator knows that that is more than the last appropriation bill and, in fact, if I remember correctly, it is more than the last two appropriation bills for rivers and harbors carried.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is more than the last appropriation bill, but is accounted for very largely because on account of war conditions they have not been able to go on with some of the work they might otherwise have proceeded with. We have taken into consideration, I will say to the Senator, every item of unexpended balance in dealing with the items of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. But the Senator will also admit that there are appropriations here for projects that yet have on hand considerable unexpended balances?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is quite true, and in those instances we have inquired of the engineers as to what they will need for the next fiscal year in addition to what they have now available, and we have carried into the bill only the amounts which the engineers say are necessary to proceed with the work for the next fiscal year, beginning July 1 of this year and ending June 30 of next year.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean to say, then, that the requirements for rivers and harbors for the coming fiscal year will amount to from forty-five to forty-eight million dollars?

Mr. LENROOT. To $80,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I am keeping within the House bill as it passed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course it will amount to that.

Mr. SMOOT. If we include the Senate amendments, it will amount to $80,000,000; but I am now speaking of the bill as it passed the other House, and, taking the unexpended balances, the amount at the disposal of the department will be about $76,000,000, and with the Senate amendments about $80,000,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. There are unexpended balances to the credit of the various projects which are not mentioned in the bill at all.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are not dealing with those in this bill; but they enter into the sum which is available as reported here and are included in the $45,000,000; but many of those items are not mentioned in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida is right in that statement. I can see from a list of the projects that have unexpended balances, and then comparing them with the items of the bill, that there are some projects that are not mentioned in the bill that have unexpended balances. The Senator is correct in that; but what I asked the Senator was, Is it possible to spend $80,000,000 on rivers and harbors for the coming fiscal year; or, in other words, I want to know if the unexpended balances due upon projects and the appropriations provided for in this bill amounting to $80,000,000, providing the Senate amendments are agreed to, can be spent within the year named?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will my colleague on the committee allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMOOT. Just a moment until I finish the question, and then I shall be glad to have either one of the Senators answer the question, I do not care which. I want to know if it will be possible, under the conditions existing to-day, to expend all that money during the next fiscal year; and if not, why make these appropriations for projects that have an unexpended balance?

Now, I do not care which Senator answers my question.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see what the Senator from Utah has in mind. I will state that many of these projects have now available balances to their credit. Those balances will not be used up in the coming year, perhaps; the work may extend over a period of a good many years yet to come, but they are not included in this bill at all. For that reason it is not fair to suppose that the engineers propose to expend within the next fiscal year the amounts carried in this bill and the entire available balances as shown by the report of the engineers, because those balances in many instances will spread over a period of years.

Another thing is that some of the balances will not be spent at all; they will come back to the Treasury when the project has been practically completed. Those items enter into the available balances. We have only covered into the bill here with reference to specific items of the bill what the engineers say they will need for the coming fiscal year.

Mr. RANSDELL rose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to ask the Senator from Florida another question and then I shall be glad to have the Senator from Louisiana further explain the matter.

I have not separated these unexpended balances, showing the amount on projects that are not mentioned in this bill. What will be the amount of unexpended balances on projects that are not mentioned in the bill, to which the Senator from Florida has just referred? Can he, in round numbers, state what that balance will be?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not separated the items.

Mr. SMOOT. Neither have I; and I simply desire to have the Senator state what, in his opinion, it would amount to.

Mr. FLETCHER. I shall have to ask the engineers to figure that up, for that would be a problem for them.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator from Louisiana can answer the question.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I am sorry I can not answer that question. I simply rose for the purpose of explaining to the Senator from Utah that there is a large sum to the credit of some of the projects. I wish to illustrate that by speaking of the Delaware River, for instance. The report on page 11 shows, in a letter from Gen. Black, that on January 1, 1919, there were $4,110,778 to the credit of that item. That is a character of work which will require, perhaps, two or three years to finish.

There was nearly $9,000,000 to the credit of the Ohio River on the 1st of last October, if I recollect the way the figures were given to us. That work is lock and dam construction, and requires several years to complete it. The building of a lock and dam is a slow process. The work is authorized, but a great deal of the money, I am sure, has not yet been absolutely appropriated. The work has been contracted for; at least, it will be contracted for, and the Government will be obligated for the full amount by the 1st of next July. That goes to make up the forty-odd million dollars, which the Senator correctly says is to the credit of these various and sundry river and harbor works which have been authorized, but the money will not be expended nor will anything like all of it be expended during the next year.

I simply want to add that to the explanation of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. We shall not begin to expend the $80,000,000 according to the showing.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator further, to illustrate what I endeavored to state, giving merely an illustration of the statement of unexpended balances, that on page 9, for instance, we have Baltimore, Md. For the Baltimore Harbor and channels $676,432.33 was the available balance on June 30, 1918; and on December 31, 1918, the available balance was $674,862.81. That enters into this total amount of $45,000,000 of available balances; but it is not referred to in this bill at all; it is not covered. There is no provision for Baltimore Harbor in the bill, but the available balance on hand includes the $674,662.81 for Baltimore.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida is correct in that statement. All I wanted to get at was how much would the amount be if all such items were taken into consideration?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will try to get those figures for the Senator. I should have to consult the engineers about that, for I have not inquired of them concerning it.

Mr. SMOOT. In relation to the Ohio project, spoken of by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], he will remember, I think, that at the last session of Congress in the sundry civil appropriation bill, if I remember correctly, there was an appropriation of something like $3,600,000. I am speaking now only from memory. That, of course, was included in the amount that went to the credit of the Ohio project, was it not?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not recollect the exact amount, but I have no doubt the Senator's statement is correct. I know that the last river and harbor bill authorized the work on the Ohio to the extent of $5,000,000. We have been trying to prosecute that great work at the rate of about $5,000,000 a year, but I will say to the Senator that I imagine the money carried in the last sundry civil bill would not have been expended because of the difficulty of getting laborers and of getting contractors to undertake the work on account of the war. We have been trying, as I have stated, to carry that work on at the rate of about $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Utah will recognize that the improvement of the Ohio River is under a continuing contract.

Mr. SMOOT. I recognize that fact, but what I want to get at is how much money, if the Senate committee amendments are adopted and the bill becomes a law, we will have for the improvement and betterment of the rivers and harbors of the country for the coming fiscal year?

Mr. FLETCHER. The answer to that, it seems to me, is complete, for the engineers report to us, the House committee has found upon a thorough examination, and our own committee has found, that the engineers will need every dollar that is carried by this bill to use on these works for the coming year.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be possible to expend that amount of money, but I have my doubts whether or not it will be spent. What I had in mind was this: If it could be shown to the Senate that, without interfering with necessary work, $80,000,000 is too much, and the amount could be reduced, I think that this would be the very best time to make a reduction.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator understands that we can not use an appropriation made for a specific project for some other project. We can only take care of the projects mentioned and itemized in the bill. An appropriation applied to a particular project must be used on that project or else it goes back to the Treasury; it does not go somewhere else.

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware of that; but what I am trying to arrive at is this: This bill, we will say, when it becomes a law will carry $33,000,000——

Mr. RANSDELL. Thirty-two million dollars.

Mr. FLETCHER. Thirty-two million dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. I am speaking in round numbers. In the bill there are projects provided for that have already to their credit in the Treasury unexpended balances. If out of that $45,000,000 of unexpended balances there are projects mentioned in this bill to the credit of which there are balances amounting to, say, $25,000,000, or a little over half of the $45,000,000, then there would be a total of over $60,000,000 to be expended during the coming fiscal year. Does the Senator think that that amount can be expended?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think, beyond a doubt, the department can expend, should expend, and will expend, unless something unusual occurs, in the prosecution of these works the amount specified in this bill and for the purposes named in the bill. The Senator will remember that a good deal of the money provided is for maintenance of existing completed projects. They must be kept up; and there is carried in this bill for that purpose alone $3,707,300, while for improvements on projects already adopted and underway and for maintenance there is provided $5,800,000. For the new projects carried in the bill for maintenance there is provided $187,000 and for improvement of new projects only $10,460,000. That is all the bill carries for taking care of new projects. The unexpended balances available for other projects will be used, so far as the engineers can use them, in the prosecution of work on those projects for which the sums were appropriated. They say they can do that, and should do it; and, in addition to that, we should take on these new projects which are needing improvement. The total amount for the improvement of new projects, I repeat, is only $10,460,000 in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The maintenance item, I will say, is a very small percentage of the amount of $60,000,000 which will be provided for under this bill in connection with the unexpended balances for the projects named in the bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. A good many of those unexpended balances which have been listed are for maintenance purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. But the percentage for maintenance purposes, of course, is small in comparison with the total amount. All I had in mind was, taking into consideration now that there are $45,000,000 of unexpended balances for this purpose, if we are appropriating more than is necessary, it would be very much better to hew close to the line, especially this year, and reduce the appropriations as much as possible, particularly if there are any special items in the bill for which it is known that the money can not be expended.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say that generally I am in sympathy with the Senator's views about that; and the committee has had that in mind. We have only selected the projects which are most urgent and need improvement for the purposes of transportation, and we have endeavored to keep down the appropriations to the lowest possible limit. I think quite generally the committee believes that if we can reasonably and from an economical standpoint, everything considered, go on with these public works to-day, we ought to do it, because we are confronted, possibly, with a lot of idle men, and we ought to give them an opportunity to be employed on this public work where it ought to be carried on. Therefore we have felt that, notwithstanding high prices and notwithstanding the fact that expenditures seem to be large, we ought to take care of these public works which ought to be cared for, because of the fact that they are needed, and out of consideration of the fact that now is the very time when men need the work.

This particular project was, as I have said, reported on some years ago—in 1913—and has been awaiting the action of Congress for adoption. It is not a large project; it was recommended by the engineers and was provided for in the House bill. The report shows that there is commerce there, some 48,000 tons, principally of cut stone, paving stone, lime, and coal. Those and other conditions warrant the making of this channel. I think it is time to take it up and complete it, and in order to complete it and not make two jobs of it by going in there and spending $12,500 and then coming out and leaving it unfinished we thought we were justified in adding the necessary amount, even at present prices, to complete the project.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, measured by the sinuosities of its bays, my State has a coast line of something over 2,600 miles. Like all States bordering on the ocean, my people are as anxious as anybody to have some improvements, and I have had letters and solicitations from very many sources asking that appropriations be made for new projects.

This one item calls for $12,500. In taking the matter up, after the House had completed the measure, I found that the improvement could not be completed for $12,500, but that it could be completed for the amount set forth in this bill, namely, $18,750. There are very many reasons why this project should be completed, a detailed account of which I might give, but which, it seems, is unnecessary. It is only a small amount.

In every instance I have opposed the beginning of new projects in my State, although many have been suggested. I am one of those who feel that the appropriations ought to be kept down to as low a limit as possible; but it does seem to me that this item is not unreasonable, and that the amount carried is a very modest sum, inasmuch as it will complete the project. I have been opposed to these measures which carried money from year to year for maintenance and carrying on work; but this will complete the project, and of all that has been asked for in my State this is the only one that I have recommended. I do feel that the reason for it is sufficient to justify its adoption by Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. KING. Has the State made any contribution toward the completion or construction of this project, or has it proposed to make any contribution?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know that it has.

Mr. KING. Has the State made any contribution for the completion of any of the projects that have been constructed or are under contemplation by the Government in connection with the waterways and harbors of the State of Maine?

Mr. FERNALD. This is the only one contemplated at this time.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator if a large number of projects have not been completed or undertaken by the Federal Government along the borders of the State of Maine?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not think there have been a great number. In the past I do not think that we have had large expenditures, considering our coast line—only a very modest sum.

Mr. KING. My understanding is that a number of projects in the State of Maine have been undertaken and completed by the Federal Government. Now, the question I ask is, Has the State of Maine made any contributions toward any of those projects which have been undertaken by the Federal Government?

Mr. FERNALD. I do not know about that.

Mr. KING. Many of these projects have been purely local in character. Is not that the fact?

Mr. FERNALD. Why, I suppose that most of these projects are local in character. Almost every item, I assume, is of interest to the particular place where the money is expended.

Mr. KING. And beneficial to a limited number of people, and primarily to aid them in the disposition of their local produce?

Mr. FERNALD. Without doubt it would accommodate the local people more than the people of other States or other parts of our State.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator say that this project has any reference whatever to interstate commerce? Is it not a purely local matter, which, if it is of any advantage at all, the State itself ought to undertake?

Mr. FERNALD. I think there is a considerable commerce there, Senator.

Mr. KING. I understood from the Senator having this bill in charge that perhaps there were 45,000 tons per annum that could or would utilize this project after it was completed.

Mr. FERNALD. Yes; and the passenger traffic is much larger, I assume, than the freight. It is considerable of a resort and people from all over the country go there.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the Federal Government ought to construct projects for the accommodation of purely local commerce? And before the Senator answers that, let me ask, further, if the Federal Government constructs projects that are purely local in character for people who reside upon little creeks or bays or estuaries or upon the ocean, why, in justice, should not the Government provide instrumentalities of commerce for communities and districts in the interior?

Mr. FERNALD. Why, the Government is constantly spending money for local purposes. The establishment of a post office is for the advantage of the people living locally, and the Government is constantly spending money for projects of all kinds. Whether or not the Government should change its policy and spend money for various purposes only where the State government contributes is a matter which would have to be considered in general.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator's position, it is that it is perfectly defensible for the Federal Government to make appropriations which are purely local in their character and effects and advantage only a limited number of people in their local domestic traffic?

Mr. FERNALD. Why, this accommodates people outside the immediate location of this project. People from all over the country go to this town. In the summer months, during the months of July and August, people from all over the country, and outside of the country, go there. It is a summer resort. It is not purely and entirely a local matter.

Mr. KING. Do they go by rail or by boat?

Mr. FERNALD. They go by boat, largely, to Tenants Harbor.

Mr. KING. Then this is largely for the purpose of benefiting pleasure seekers who may go there?

Mr. FERNALD. Not altogether. Pleasure seekers go there, too; but a very large number of people go there from all over the country during the summer months. That is a large part of our business in Maine. We have more people from outside the State during the months of July and August than we have as a local population of our State. It is a large part of our business.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERNALD. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. Does this facilitate the industry of getting Poland water around the country? [Laughter.]

Mr. FERNALD. No; that is a little nearer to me than that. Permit me to ask the Senator if he favors the building of public buildings and post offices in the country?

Mr. KING. Is the Senator addressing that question to me?

Mr. FERNALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. I think the way that the Government has been induced by representations to construct public buildings all over the United States has been a positive scandal. The policy is vicious. It is wrong.

Mr. FERNALD. There are several bills now before Congress, I think, appropriating money for public buildings in the Senator's State. Is the Senator opposed to those bills?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when I had the honor to serve my State in the House of Representatives I refused to present numerous petitions for public buildings within my State, because I thought it was improper for the Federal Government to erect them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment with reference to public buildings?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FLETCHER. My recollection is that there has not been any public-buildings bill passed by Congress since 1913, so that it does not seem that we are very greedy on that subject. I think the last public-buildings bill passed Congress in March, 1913.

Now, with reference to this bill and this item, getting back to that, I call the Senator's attention to what the report shows—that a regular passenger steamer touches at this harbor, and having a greater draft than the depth of water available at low tide she is scheduled to stop only when tidal conditions will permit. It appears from the communications received that it is very important that the regular steamers shall be able to enter and depart at all stages of the tide, it being claimed that general business, as well as summer traffic, would be greatly increased thereby. So that it seems that they have a regular steamer stopping there, and it is desirable to make a channel so that she can get up to the dock for one thing, and then there is commerce besides the freight mentioned in the report.

Mr. FERNALD. Those are the facts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in discussing this matter in his opening remarks the Senator from Florida said that this was a new project.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is a new project. It never has been adopted by Congress before.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Government ever expended any money upon it before?

Mr. FLETCHER. None at all. It is an entirely new project, recommended by the engineers in 1913, and never has been adopted by Congress. It is an entirely new project.

Mr. SMOOT. What process is taken to get a recommendation of the Engineers on such projects as these?

Mr. FLETCHER. Usually a survey is ordered by Congress, and an estimate of cost is reported by the engineers in accordance with this order, with their recommendation. In this instance the engineers acted upon a resolution passed by the Rivers and Harbors Committee calling on them for a survey and recommendation respecting this harbor.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the survey of this project was ordered by Congress?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is how all of these new projects are initiated, is it?

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; that is the rule. I will say to the Senator that, all told, there have been in Maine 10 projects which have been under development and improvement and are practically completed now, I take it. Portland, Me., is one of them; and there is an available balance there for the maintenance of that harbor. Altogether 10 projects have been developed there, and this is the only new project that is proposed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Florida to suggest that appropriations for rivers and harbors improvements are never made until the projects have been thoroughly investigated by the Congress and the appropriation is thought to be necessary to promote the commerce of the country. These appropriations are not made to oblige the people living on the river banks or near by the ports. The Board of Engineers make a survey and estimate of the cost, and then Congress takes up the question as to the propriety and value to commerce of the improvements of the waterways project. That is the ground upon which all appropriations for rivers and harbors are made.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator to say that Congress never made an appropriation unless it was recommended by the Engineers?

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I did not make that statement. There have been instances where appropriations have been made against the findings of the Board of Engineers, but never until Congress has exercised its superior judgment and constitutional power in determining that it was to the interest of the American people that it should be done. I do not think absolute authority should be given the Engineers to determine whether appropriations should be made. That function belongs to Congress; but I do say that Congress never makes an appropriation until the engineers make a survey and estimate of the cost. Then, as stated above, Congress exercises its proper function of determining the question as to whether or not the appropriation will benefit the commerce of the whole Nation.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason why I asked the question was that I thought perhaps I had misunderstood the Senator, because I know that in many, many cases appropriations have been made for projects where the engineers have reported against the expenditure of the money for the purpose.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Oh, that is very true.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is very exceptional, however. I have never known it to be done since I have been chairman of the committee, and there is nothing in this bill that is not reported favorably and recommended by the engineers.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It has happened rarely; but it has never been done until the Congress or the committee has gone carefully into the investigation and determined that it was to the interests of the American people that it should be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I remember a river and harbor bill here a few days ago where the engineers reported against a project, and it was discussed upon the floor here for nearly a day, and then it went over for a day, and the following morning another report came in from the engineers approving the project. We all know how it happened; and all I wish to do at this time is to see that the record is kept straight, because projects that are reported against——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I think that is rather an unwarranted attack by innuendo upon the integrity of the Board of Engineers. I think the Senator will concede to the Board of Engineers the privilege of changing their estimates or opinions just as much as he would arrogate that privilege to the Congress or himself. I have known Congressmen to change their opinions. I have known Senators to discuss a measure and denounce it in the cloakroom and then come out here and vote for it.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but, Mr. President, an engineer who has made a survey and made an unfavorable report on a project is not very likely to change his mind overnight, without any further investigation.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The engineers have not changed their mathematical calculations. They may have changed their minds with reference to the business that is transacted at the port. I recall an instance down in my State, two or three years ago, where the engineers had recommended against the appropriation for Gulfport, and the matter was investigated, and I became thoroughly convinced that one great sawmill down there would have saved more to the people in that one little community than the entire cost to the Government of maintaining that port.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator says there was another investigation made. Nobody is complaining of that. What I complain of is that the engineers change their minds overnight.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Supreme Court does that. Are you going to abolish the Supreme Court?

Mr. SMOOT. They do not do it without some sort of an investigation.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that sometimes this happens: After the report of the Board of Engineers has been made, there come storms, there come earthquakes, there come various things to change the data; and, not only that, but frequently there come additional data submitted by the district engineers which have a distinct bearing upon the findings of the Chief of Engineers here. Those data may be delayed. They may be in transit. We have had that occur even while the bill is under consideration by the committee. Information comes in additional to what we have had respecting Hawaii, for instance. It sometimes takes a long time to get here, and the report is sometimes changed by reason of those data, which are unquestioned.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that in the case of the project to which I have reference there was no storm. It was very near Washington, and I remember very well that it was in the hot days of summer, and no storm happened; and I want the Senator to understand distinctly that I believe that the importunities of Senators have more effect upon the changes made by the engineers than all the storms in the world.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have never found that to be so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is a consolation to know that Senators have influence somewhere.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to pages 10 and 11 of the report, which show that sometimes the engineers reduce their estimates instead of adding to them.

The House made an appropriation of $2,500,000 for work on the Delaware River near the great city of Philadelphia. This appears in the report. I read from page 10, at the bottom of the page:

> While these estimates were under consideration by the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, a letter was received from the district engineer recommending that the amount be increased to $2,500,000. Based upon the information therein given, the recommendation was made to the Rivers and Harbors Committee that the amount to be provided for the Delaware River below Philadelphia be raised to $2,500,000, which was done.
> Subsequent study of the data now available indicates that the amount of $2,500,000 will be more than can be advantageously expended in the next year and a half, and, taking all things into consideration, it is believed that $1,000,000 will be a sufficient amount to be carried in the pending bill.

Then, in accordance with that recommendation, we reduced the amount, which was $2,500,000, to $1,000,000 for that great harbor there at Philadelphia, following the engineer. Now, for the change between the passage of the bill in the House and the report on the bill in the Senate, surely I do not think anyone could impute any improper motive. We got more light on the subject, and, acting with all the light which we had, we followed his advice.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANSDELL. I should be delighted.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator recollect whether the original suggestion for the reduction of the item of which he now speaks came first from the engineers or from members of the committee?

Mr. RANSDELL. I rather think the suggestion came from the members of the committee. They asked him how much balance there was to his credit on that item, and whether or not the item could be reduced. I think the Senator states it correctly; but the Senator will also bear me out in saying that we asked him similar questions about a great many other projects, and he, in many instances, said, "No, Senators; we can not reduce it." Where he could reduce, he agreed to the reduction, and the reduction was made.

I must say in behalf of the engineers, they seem to me to be a very high grade body of men, and to be very, very fair. I suppose, like all human beings, they make mistakes, but I do not think they have made very many, and they are about as unprejudiced a band of men as you can find.

Now, then, one moment more in response to what the Senator from Utah has said. There have been very few items in the past in the river and harbor bills that have not received the full approval of the engineers. There was a little project in the State of Michigan, the pet project of Senator WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, known as Arcadia, that we have up every year, as the Senator will recall. It is not a very big matter, but it was very dear to the heart of the Senator, and it was very dear to a number of his constituents, who were fruit raisers and could not get their fruit out in any other way, very well, than by that harbor. In spite of the fact that the engineers opposed it, Congress, on the strong insistence of the Senator, put it in every year, but I should like to say that it was the exception that proved the rule. The rule was to do nothing until the project had been approved by the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Let me review very briefly how the engineers begin to make a survey. Congress passes a law authorizing a survey to be made of some specific project. Let us call it Arcadia, in the State of Michigan. That project is then surveyed by men being sent into the field—engineers—trained men. They make what is called a preliminary survey and a report. If they find that it is a pretty good thing, that it looks all right, that it can be made at a reasonable cost, that there is a fairly good commerce in prospect, they recommend it for a survey.

That preliminary report comes to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, sitting in this city. It is a board composed of seven men of high rank in the Engineer Corps. None are below the rank of major. They look into it as well as they can and determine whether or not on the preliminary showing a real survey should be made. They make their report to the Chief of Engineers, who decides whether or not a survey should be made, and if he decides in favor he orders a full and complete survey to be made. He then sends that back to the local or division engineer who has charge of the Arcadia district. That engineer makes an elaborate survey, renders his judgment as to whether or not it is worthy of improvement, makes an estimate of the cost, states fully about the commerce, gets all the facts that he can, and submits them in a very elaborate report to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, the same board which acted first upon the preliminary report.

That board frequently has hearings. It invites the friends of the project, if they wish to be heard, and the enemies of the project, if they wish to be heard, to come before it, and, in fact, it sits as a court to determine whether or not a favorable report should be found on that project. After a full and fair hearing, it decides adversely or favorably. If it decides favorably, the matter is sent then to the Chief of Engineers, who in turn recommends it to Congress. If it decides adversely, it stops right there. I say to Senators that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, if the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers decide adversely, that stops it. There have been exceptional cases, as I said before, when we overruled their adverse action. Now, I do not see how we can proceed much more cautiously than we do in those instances.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will be glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. SMOOT. Is it not true that when the river and harbor bills have been before the Senate, Senators have risen and offered amendments for a survey of this project, a survey of that project, and a survey of the other project, and it has been readily accepted upon the floor, and that then the survey is made, at whatever cost may be attached to it? Then after it is surveyed, of course, the rule has been to report favorably upon the project. Is not that true?

Mr. RANSDELL. I think there has been rather a liberal acceptance of the desire of Senators for surveys. Yes, I think the Senator from Utah states that correctly. There has been a disposition when a Senator asks for a survey to give him a survey, but when that was placed before the engineers the preliminary survey was made, and I am informed that about 60 per cent of the surveys are turned down on the preliminary survey by the local engineer; they never pass beyond the preliminary stage; he says they are unworthy, and the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors never order the regular survey. That is the process. Only a moderate percentage of the surveys ordered are ever passed upon favorably by the Board of Engineers and the Chief of Engineers, though, as the Senator has stated, we have been rather liberal in ordering them, knowing that it will be a very small expense to make the preliminary survey.

I will tell the Senator how that is done. A preliminary survey is ordered for some stretch of a river, say a hundred miles. The engineer rides over that stretch in an auto if he can, if there are roads alongside the river. He will go in a skiff if there be no boat, and ride up and down in a skiff. If there are boats running he will go up and down the stretch in a boat. A few hundred dollars at the outside is all that the preliminary survey costs. As the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] suggests to me, most of it is done from data which he has in his office.

Mr. SMOOT. I am rather surprised at the statement made by the Senator from Louisiana that 60 per cent of the surveys are turned down by the engineers.

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not give the exact figures, but that is my recollection. I will get the exact figures, if the Senator would like to have them, from the report of the Chief of Engineers, and put them in the RECORD. My recollection is that it is 60 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator's recollection is perhaps not any better than mine, and my recollection is, as I stated, that a great majority of the cases were approved.

Mr. RANSDELL. No, Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. But let that pass without any further discussion.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I have had some investigation made and my information is that 2,096 projects within a given period were investigated and 1,890 of them have been accepted.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course.

Mr. RANSDELL. Where did the Senator get that information, please?

Mr. KING. My secretary made the investigation.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would rather have, if you please, the report of the Chief of Engineers. Your secretary undoubtedly is correct, but did your secretary have before him all the orders for surveys? I will state that your secretary had before him only such projects as had appeared in the book, and those that are turned down never appear in the book.

Mr. KING. That may be true.

Mr. RANSDELL. I am right about that, Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not say whether there are 60 per cent or 70 per cent of them turned down, but I can say that I have understood that there was a majority of them that were approved, and I thought that the policy in the past of Senators getting up on the floor and moving that a certain project be surveyed, with no opposition whatever to it and no questions asked—and it was done just as long as a Senator requested that it be done—ought at least from now on to cease.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that a great many of the projects which have run the gauntlet of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and the Chief of Engineers, and received their absolute approval, have been pending for years and years here without ever having been approved by Congress. They were reported favorably, but we never have adopted them. Take the one before us now—Tenants Harbor. That was favorably reported in 1912, nearly seven years ago, but we are just now acting upon it. Many of these projects were reported favorably years and years ago, but we did not include them in the bill; we did not make provision for them.

Mr. SMOOT. I felt that when Congress orders a survey the engineers would take that as an expression of the desire of Congress that something should be done upon the project, and I felt that that more than likely has swayed the judgment of the engineers in many cases. I hope it has not, I will say to the Senator, but I am fearful that it has done so.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that that is only a preliminary survey. We have done that always with the understanding that there shall be first a preliminary survey. That is the policy of the statute and it is the practice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FLETCHER. May I interrupt the Senator with just a suggestion? The engineers would not venture to make a survey of any river or harbor or waterway unless it was requested to do so by Congress, and there would be no way at all of ever bringing the matter to their attention except through the action of Congress.

Take, for instance, a Senator who knows his own State, who knows the rivers and harbors there, the possibility of waterway development, and all of the advantages of transportation. Knowing those things the Senator says upon his responsibility here, "I know a certain river or waterway of my State, and I believe that it can be developed to the advantage of the commerce and the public. I want to have it investigated."

Now, why should we not accept the Senator's statement about his own State and the condition of a waterway in his own State to the extent of at least allowing him to have the engineers investigate that waterway? That is all the survey means. They investigate it. They can do that in their own office. They have plats and maps of all the rivers and harbors of a certain district. They can probably sit in their own office and tell exactly the depth of a stream, the width of it, the probable formation, whether it is rock or mud or sand underneath, and arrive at a pretty definite idea as to whether or not that project is worthy of improvement. Then they can, by correspondence from their office, obtain from the people along the waterway and in that vicinity a definite idea as to the amount of commerce that might pass over the stream or that would be developed by the improvement of the stream and furnish that information to Congress. I do not think it is unreasonable for us to take the statement of a Senator regarding a waterway in his State which he believes to be worthy of improvement and asks Congress to have an investigation made. That is all he does.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that what the Senator would call a preliminary survey?

Mr. FLETCHER. A preliminary survey.

Mr. SMOOT. Is that all the work that is done upon a preliminary survey?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is. Then, as the Senator from Louisiana has said, if the engineer reports favorably upon a preliminary survey and believes that there is merit in the project as a developed scheme he reports that to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and if they agree then they order him to make a further investigation and an estimate of the cost. In the first preliminary survey he has probably not made much of an estimate of cost, but then he goes into the field and makes soundings and makes an investigation on the ground and submits an estimate of the cost and ascertains what the commercial justification is and reports it to the Board of Engineers again, and they then in view of the expense of the project, in view of the conditions furnished by the data and the latest information, decide whether it is worthy of improvement or not, and so recommend to the Chief of Engineers. That is the process; and while we are liberal about these surveys we should consider that they merely call for an investigation, and the total amount carried in this bill for all these surveys throughout the country is, I think, $250,000.

Mr. KENYON. That was raised over the House amount.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was raised over the House amount because the Chief of Engineers advised us that he was doubtful whether he could get through with the surveys with $150,000, and that includes Hawaii and Porto Rico and every foreign possession.

Mr. KENYON. Were the surveys in the bill as it came from the House placed there in the way the Senator states by Members of the House asking for a survey?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the usual way there is the usual way here, that a Member will submit an amendment and have it referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and here a Senator will submit an amendment and have it referred to the Commerce Committee, and then they pass upon the question. The Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House reports upon the surveys.

Mr. KENYON. The Commerce Committee of the Senate allows any survey that any Senator may desire. That is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not say that that is absolutely true.

Mr. KENYON. Even though the river might be entirely within a State.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not say that.

Mr. KENYON. It is an unwritten law.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would not say that it would allow any survey that anybody might suggest, but if a Senator states that, in his opinion, a survey should be made, and upon his responsibility urges it, and gives the committee information such as to make them believe there is not a waste of time and money in the project, the committee would adopt it.

Mr. KENYON. Has there ever been any refusal?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think there have been some.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not recall one.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think our committee rejected a few of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. In a moment. The plan as suggested I have no doubt is what has been the practice for years and years. But when I consider that that practice brought forth the expenditure of public moneys upon such rivers as the Big Sandy in Kentucky, for instance, that cost the Government of the United States for floating a tug on it $350 more than the whole tug is worth anywhere in the world, I rather lose faith in the survey, and in the judgment of the engineers who would pass upon such a proposition.

I have nothing more to say on this question until I discuss the cost of transportation on the different rivers of the United States.

COURT-MARTIAL SENTENCES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I see some members of the Committee on Military Affairs present. I do not want to delay the pending bill, but I want to ask for information. It will take but a moment. In the report in this morning's Washington Post with reference to the facts which were disclosed yesterday as to court-martial proceedings, I find some statements which must be a surprise to all who may read them.

What I desire to ask of the members of the Military Affairs Committee—the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] I see is present—is whether or not the names of the men who assessed these unconscionable judgments against the delinquents are to be given, so that we may know who they are? We may possibly have reason to deal with them hereafter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the hearing yesterday before the Military Committee was on a bill introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to reform the present system now carried on by the Judge Advocate General's Department, in order to give that department wider powers of review.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Gen. Ansell, the Acting Judge Advocate General, appeared before the committee, recommending wider powers of review for the Judge Advocate General's office, and made some statements to the committee regarding a number of cases where he believed grave injustice had been done, but that, owing to the system, it was impossible for the Judge Advocate General to review, revise, or mitigate the sentences. The committee asked for the names of the soldiers who had been convicted, and it was decided by the committee that their names should be withheld from the record, but that they should be given to the chairman of the committee and that information be held by the committee for the information of the committee or of any Senator who might desire to know the names. The names of the officers of the court-martial who imposed the penalties were not asked. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that undoubtedly, if that information is desired, it can be procured from Gen. Ansell, who is the Acting Judge Advocate General.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I hope that the committee will ask for the names of these officers.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I say to the Senator from Idaho, in addition to what the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] has stated, that we have not yet finished with Gen. Ansell? We resume the hearing to-morrow. It is impossible to anticipate the questions which will be asked him, but it is our purpose to try to elicit that very information. I am very glad that the Senator from Idaho has suggested it.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. I was not asking the question by way of criticism. I merely suggested it so that the committee would know that some Members of the Senate who are not members of the committee have desired the information and would like to have it when the committee finally gets through.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not understand that the Senator from Idaho has indulged in any criticism. As a matter of fact, I am very glad to have any suggestions, and I know the members of the committee will be glad to have any suggestions from Members of the Senate as to the course that this investigation should pursue.

I think the Senator, when he reads the very able discussion of the legal side, the legal phases of the Articles of War, will be very much interested in Gen. Ansell's testimony. In the last analysis, one of the very great differences is a difference between lawyers as to the construction of a certain provision of the law. Gen. Ansell and those who agree with him insist that the Judge Advocate General's Department has power to revise and review the proceedings of courts-martial, while others in the same branch of the service still hold that the law does not give that power. It is the lack of proper construction, I think; and I am disposed to agree with Gen. Ansell's construction of it. The Senator from Idaho may agree with the other construction of it. It is the lack of putting the construction on the law that Gen. Ansell and those who agree with him have put on it that has led to these hardships.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am thoroughly in accord with the Senator's bill and the view which he takes in regard to revising the entire system of dealing with conditions such as are now dealt with under the old system.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. But, Mr. President, there is lying back of this another proposition in which I am interested. When a man assesses a punishment, such as has been assessed in numerous instances for the slightest dereliction of duty, it is not all due to the default of the law; there is a default in the man.

I have information, which comes to me direct, and from an authority in the War Department who examined the record and who knows whereof he speaks, such as this: A boy was ordered to peel potatoes, which he declined to do, and was sent to the penitentiary for 20 years by a court-martial. The man or men who assessed that punishment are dangerous members of society. They would commit murder if the place were secret enough so that the miserable cowards would not be intercepted in the deed. Militarism in the United States is just as objectionable to me when it is based upon such infamous practices as it is in Prussia.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. While the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] was on the subject, I wanted to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] or the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], both of whom are members of the Military Affairs Committee, whether the summary of the testimony given yesterday before that committee is correctly portrayed in the Washington Post of this morning?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should not like to say. I have not read the Post's account of the hearing; I have not had time to read any of the newspapers; but the Senator from Nebraska knows pretty well that in the main, when these hearings are had, the newspapers get a pretty general statement of the salient facts. They may sometimes bring out that which is most human and which attracts the most attention, and not bring out some little matter that would measurably explain it; but, as a general rule, they get the facts.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator will permit me, I should like also to help answer that question. I have thoroughly read the article in the Washington Post, and, of course, I heard the testimony as a member of the committee. I desire to say that this is one case where the newspaper has not exaggerated at all. Some of the worst specific cases referred to by Gen. Ansell are not even referred to by the Post.

I remember one case in particular, where, for the most trivial offense, a boy was given a 40-year sentence. Another case which I think was mentioned in the Post I shall not repeat; but I reassert the statement I made a moment ago, that there is no exaggeration in the newspaper account.

My own personal attitude in the committee was that these names should have been disclosed. These court-martial proceedings are matters of public record; any Senator can send to the War Department and get a copy of the record, which not only discloses the name of the soldier who is tried but the names of the officers who tried him. I can see no reason why such proceedings should not be produced before the committee, and I think that ultimately the committee would have taken that action, whether its attention had been called to the matter or not.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, since the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has stated that the report in the Washington Post of this morning is correct, or at least is not exaggerated, I think it would be very appropriate that what the Post said should be read in connection with his statement. So I desire to read a part of it.

Here are a few not isolated cases cited by Gen. Ansell as disclosing the system of punishment followed by the Army during the war.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. Doubtless there are some Senators present who have not had the advantage of reading the Washington Post this morning, and instead of having isolated cases picked out of the summary which is printed in the Post I ask that the entire article be read.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is a good suggestion. I will send a copy of the Post to the Secretary's desk and ask that the entire article be read. Some of it does not pertain to the punishments, but I had just as lief as not have it all read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I dislike to object to the reading of this article, but everyone here can read it as well as the Senator, and what is the use of taking up time in reading articles from newspapers?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. MOSES. Of course, it is much more important to improve rivers and harbors than it is to get our boys out of prison.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think if the Senator from Nebraska will read merely the part of the article which he desires to speak about that will be all that is necessary.

Mr. NORRIS. All I cared to read was a few of the cases mentioned in the Post; but if there is any question about it I am perfectly willing that the whole article shall be read.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, the Senator is willing that shall be done; but there is no use taking up the time to do it.

Mr. NORRIS. The fact is that, if this article is not read, the RECORD will not disclose just what these particular cases are, and a member of the committee has stated that the report in reference to them is not exaggerated.

Mr. FLETCHER. Well, go ahead.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reading of the article? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Just a word, Mr. President. I wish to make a suggestion and not an objection.

Mr. President, I think it is hardly fair to put one side of this controversy in the RECORD now and have the American people measurably prejudge the case. I really do not know what Gen. Crowder's attitude is in reference to the matter. He is the chief; and it seems to me, without siding with either side further than what I have stated as to my construction of the law, it would be fairer to wait at least until Gen. Crowder makes his statement.

Mr. KNOX. But, Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Just let me state in this connection that before I asked for the reading of the article I specifically inquired of members of the committee who heard the testimony as to whether or not the article was truthful. I would not have asked for its reading if it had not been substantiated in that way; but, being substantiated as it is by members of the committee, then it seems to me that it is perfectly proper to read it.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Incidentally I wish to say in reference to the last remark that I did not intend to indicate that everything in the article was correct. I said it was not exaggerated.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. KNOX. There may be some inaccuracies in the article, but testimony given is not in the article; so that, upon the average, it is a nonexaggerated article.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] to the fact that I do not regard the difference of opinion between Gen. Ansell and Gen. Crowder as to the appellate jurisdiction or the right to revise by the Judge Advocate General's office as at all involved in this matter. Gen. Crowder's construction of the law did not procure the excessive and barbarous sentences which were imposed upon our men in France and in this country. The whole question is whether those excessive sentences can be reviewed? That is purely and simply a question of law under the existing statute. The fact is that they were reviewed, and in all of the very extreme cases to which this paper has referred the sentences were very much reduced by the reviewing authority.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the article shows that on its face.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that all the testimony in this hearing was taken down by stenographers, is now being revised by those who testified, and will soon be in print and available for every Senator's use. It may be more accurate to take out of the hearings, which will give accurately that testimony, such parts as would best illustrate the point the Senator wishes to make and spread them upon the RECORD, rather than to take a newspaper account which is not quite so accurately taken.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I repeat that I do not want to do anybody any injustice. I had read the article in the Post, but I did not ask for its reading at the desk until I had first obtained the testimony of Senators who were present in the committee and heard the testimony, and they are agreed, so far as I have been able to find out—and have so stated on the floor of the Senate—that at least this report is not an exaggerated story. When the testimony is all in, it will be in volumes. We could stop and read it all if we wanted to do so, but everybody knows we would not want to put that all in the RECORD. If, however, this testimony is correct—and Senators say it is not an exaggeration—then it ought to be in the RECORD in connection with the remarks that have been made by Senators on the subject.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. I thought the Senator had yielded the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I want the article read as part of my remarks.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply desire to make a brief statement. Like the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I was very much shocked at the account in the Post this morning, and I confess I was a little disappointed when the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] arose and said that it was not an exaggeration. I had hoped, for the sake of the Army, that it would prove to be an exaggeration.

Mr. NORRIS. So did I.

Mr. POMERENE. But in view of the statement that has been made this early in the consideration of this subject, I want to indulge the hope that the men who assessed those severe penalties will be dismissed from the service.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The hearings are not as yet completed; there are many other witnesses to be called. I think the point that the Senator from Nebraska makes is whether the names of the officers constituting the courts-martial will be included in the RECORD, and whether they will be available.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I did not make that point; that is not included in what I am trying to get at. This article in the Post does not give any names except the name of the witness who was testifying; that is the only name given in connection, at least, with the punishments inflicted. I thought, since the matter was up in the Senate and we had a story in the Post that is correct, that the newspaper report itself ought at least to be printed in connection with the remarks that have been made. I therefore ask that the Secretary read the article in the Post.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reading of the article? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ARMY SYSTEM CRUEL—SENATORS AMAZED AT STORIES OF COURT-MARTIAL BARBARITIES—DEATH FOR MINOR OFFENSES—DISPUTE OVER PACKAGE OF CIGARETTES BRINGS 40-YEAR SENTENCE—PETTY OFFICER BRANDED "DAMN FOOL" BY SENATOR THOMAS—EXECUTION FOR MAN WHO VISITED DYING FATHER—FIFTEEN YEARS FOR GOING TO SEE SICK BABY—GEN. ANSELL BITTERLY COMPLAINS OF ABUSE OF POWER.

Amazing revelations of barbarous injustice done to American soldiers by courts-martial as a result of strict adherence to an obsolete and faulty system of "red tape" condemned by the United States Supreme Court were made yesterday by Gen. Samuel T. Ansell, Acting Judge Advocate General of the Army, testifying before the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

Urging prompt action on Senator CHAMBERLAIN'S bill to revise the procedure of courts-martial, Gen. Ansell arraigned the methods practiced during the war as "shocking" and "intolerable." The committee became fairly ablaze with indignation and disgust as the general recited case after case of inhuman penalties inflicted upon soldiers for the most trivial offenses.

DEATH FOR REFUSING TO DRILL.

Here are a few, not isolated, cases cited by Gen. Ansell as disclosing the system of punishment followed by the Army during the war:

The death penalty was imposed upon an American soldier in France who pleaded guilty to a charge of refusing to obey an order to drill. The soldier insisted he was ill and physically unable to obey. The military authorities in France demanded execution of the man, but he was saved by Executive clemency.

A court-martial sitting in this country ordered the death penalty inflicted upon a soldier who went to the bedside of his dying father without leave. He returned to duty as soon as his father died. The man was saved by interference from Washington.

FORTY YEARS OVER CIGARETTES.

A sentence of 40 years was imposed upon a young soldier in the Army only a few days ago because he refused to give up a package of cigarettes to his superior officer, a second lieutenant. "A company row" was the way Gen. Ansell characterized the incident, blaming the officer practically as much as the soldier.

A soldier convicted of having a pass in his possession was sentenced to dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of pay, and imprisonment for 10 years. This was later reduced to three years. The soldier has already served two months, and Gen. Ansell recommended the suspension of the remainder of his sentence.

Dishonorable discharge, forfeiture of pay, and 40 years' imprisonment, afterwards reduced to 10 years, was the sentence pronounced upon a man for absenting himself without leave.

15 YEARS FOR SEEING SICK BABY.

A private who went home without leave to see his wife and sick baby, in destitute circumstances, was sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment. This was later reduced to three years.

While the Secretary of War was insisting upon a strict adherence to the system which made such sentences possible, according to Senator FRELINGHUYSEN, of New Jersey, a policy of the utmost leniency was being applied to "conscientious objectors" who refused to fight.

Senator FRELINGHUYSEN told the committee he was receiving large numbers of letters from troops in the camps complaining that the conscientious objectors were being dealt with lightly; that they were being discharged and sent home with "a new suit of clothes and a bouquet in their buttonhole."

WANT BAKER TO EXPLAIN.

"What has been the policy of the War Department toward the conscientious objectors?" asked Senator FRELINGHUYSEN.

"May I be excused from answering?" asked Gen. Ansell. "It would be embarrassing."

"The Secretary of War can tell us about it; we'll have him up here and ask him," Senator CHAMBERLAIN said.

"Maybe he'll have objections," commented Senator KNOX, of Pennsylvania.

"Conscientious, I suppose," observed Senator FRELINGHUYSEN.

Gen. Ansell's testimony brought to light a bitter feud which has been raging in the War Department for many months over the powers of the Judge Advocate General's office to review and modify the findings of courts-martial.

DISPUTE OVER AUTHORITY.

Gen. Ansell asserted that the cases of injustice became so numerous and flagrant during the war that he made a careful reexamination of the powers of his office and discovered an old law, passed in 1862, which he interpreted as giving him authority of revision and review.

Gen. Crowder, the regular Judge Advocate General, disagreed with him in this view, holding that the Judge Advocate General had no such authority, and the Secretary of War sustained the position of Gen. Crowder. Gen. Ansell presented several briefs to uphold his contention and admitted that he had found it necessary "to break away from the practice which the strict ruling of the Secretary would have required."

ACCUSES STAFF OF ABSOLUTISM.

In one of his briefs he charged the General Staff with "professional absolutism" and called the system of dispensing justice "an anachronism."

"That is rather broad language," the general said to the committee, "but justice required that I fully state my views."

What finally forced the issue in the War Department over the powers of the Judge Advocate General's office in courts-martial cases was the instance of 12 noncommissioned officers dishonorably discharged and sentenced to imprisonment of three to seven years each because of a minor dispute with a young lieutenant just out of West Point, the general explained. He declared the procedure in this case "unfair."

ANSELL SHOCKED BY SENTENCES.

The general told the committee that the Judge Advocate General's office was "full of strange inconsistences," and that its practices were "without thoughtful consideration of the law."

Gen. Ansell stated that he could recall several instances where his recommendations in courts-martial cases were turned down by the Genearl Staff and the Secretary of War. The courts-martial, he said were dominated by the commanding officer which convened them.

"Sentences have been imposed," said Gen. Ansell, "that have shocked my every sense of justtice. Some of them have reached the very height of injustice, bearing no reasonable relationship to the offense committed."

SYSTEM CREATES BOLSHEVISTS.

Gen. Ansell related the case of a young soldier, enlisted on October 28, who was tried by court-martial on November 23, less than 30 days after he had entered the Army. The soldier had been detailed to kitchen duty. A second lieutenant caught him smoking a cigarette, which is against the rules while a man is on kitchen duty. He ordered him to turn over the entire pack of cigarettes. The soldier demurred in rather vigorous language. He was tried by court-martial and sentenced to 40 years' imprisonment.

"Any system that will permit a thing like that is absolutely un-American," burst out Senator THOMAS. "It will make Bolshevists out of all that man's relatives."

OFFICER "DAMN FOOL," SAYS THOMAS.

Gen. Ansell held the officer largely to blame, "because he had not adjusted himself to the necessities of the situation." Senator THOMAS referred to the officer as a "damn fool."

"You do not want that to go into the record, do you?" inquired Senator CHAMBERLAIN.

"Yes; I do," said Senator THOMAS. "He was a damn fool."

Gen. Ansell said he hoped when the convening authority saw his recommendatiton in the case he would take some rather drastic action. But, he added, he knew of an equally flagrant case where the court refused to reduce below 10 years an original sentence of 40 years.

"I can well understand," commented Senator THOMAS, "why it is that in peace time we can not keep our Army complement up to requirements."

MEN EXECUTED WITHOUT APPEAL.

While the controversy was raging in the War Department over the extent of the Judge Advocate General's authority, men were actually being executed without the slightest opportunity for an appeal for clemency. As an instance of this, Gen. Ansell cited the case of the Houston riots. Negro troops were tried in several groups. The first group of 15 was tried and executed a few hours after sentence of death had been passed. No notice of the action of the court-martial was given to the Judge Advocate General's office.

The general was asked for a comparison between the American court-martial methods and those of the armies of other nations.

He declared they were much harsher than those of Great Britain and France; in fact, he said, they were harsher than any except the armies of Russia, Prussia, and Spain. He called the methods "intolerably severe."

Senator FRELINGHUYSEN asked the general about the advisability of a general amnesty to straighten out the injustice in the Army. Gen. Ansell didn't think this would be the proper course. The general also opposed any plan to delegate the reviewing authority to the President, inasmuch as the President, in turn, would have to delegate it to some subordinate. He thought the power should go to the Judge Advocate General's office. He wanted authority given so that action would be prompt and not delayed, as in the case of the Houston negroes, so that the finding of the court-martial was reviewed after the negroes were hung.

DEATH FOR VISITING DYING FATHER.

When Gen. Ansell gave his list of horrible examples of injustice in the findings of courts-martial, he was frequently interrupted by indignant outbursts from Senators. One convening officer, he told the committee, gave himself credit with great leniency, because he reduced from 40 to 10 years the sentence of a soldier convicted of being absent without leave for several days.

"Very tender-hearted gentleman," commented Senator THOMAS.

The general related in detail the case of a young soldier who went home without leave to see his dying father. He hurried back to camp as soon as his father died, and was sentenced to death. The sentence was not carried out, because of Executive clemency.

MOST INJUSTICES IN UNITED STATES.

"You should have court-martialed the court-martial," said Senator KNOX.

"The court-martial couldn't see the human facts behind that case," said Gen. Ansell.

"What ever became of that boy?" Gen. Ansell was asked. He didn't know.

"His mother probably has joined the Bolsheviki," said Senator THOMAS.

"And his father probably has, too—in another world," commented Senator FRELINGHUYSEN.

Most of the instances of injustice occurred in the United States, but the general cited some from France, too.

THIRSTED FOR MORE POWER.

He told the committee the American military authorities in France were dissatisfied with their powers in court-martial proceedings, and wanted the War Department to enlarge the number of cases under which the death penalty could be inflicted without reference to Washington.

Two men in France were tried for sleeping at the post of duty. They had been on duty all night for five consecutive nights, and could not sleep in daytime because wood was being chopped in their dugout for the commanding officer's quarters. They were sentenced to death, and were saved only by the narrowest margin, because of the insistence of the military authorities in France on carrying out the sentence.

DEATH SENTENCE ON OWN PLEA.

Two other men were sentenced to death because they refused to obey orders. One of them refused to obey an order to shoulder his rifle for drill. He declared he was physically unable to obey the order because of illness. The other man merely pleaded guilty and was sentenced to death on his own plea, the general stated.

The Judge Advocate General's office has examined between 18,000 and 20,000 court-martial cases. The committee is going to call upon the War Department for a complete list of cases and for a statement of the number of men now held prisoners in the Army. Gen. Ansell will resume his testimony to-day, and will be followed on the stand by Gen. Crowder and Secretary Baker.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the account published this morning has been read into the RECORD, I think it is desirable that I should call attention to just one or two statements which may be misleading.

The general account of yesterday's proceedings is correctly set forth, but reference is made by the writer of the article to what he terms the development of a bitter feud in the Judge Advocate General's office, or in the War Department, I do not recall which. I think that is stating it much too strongly. There is, of course, a serious difference between those who defend the present method of court-martial procedure and those who would modify it and make it more humane. It is, as far as the examination has gone, one of those natural differences which, when seriously advocated or defended, produce some little feeling; but I do not think it is correct to say that a bitter feud, or any feud, has developed in that department.

This is about the only comment I care to make in connection with the article.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in the discussion of this bill which has gone on this morning some criticism has been directed against the Board of Engineers of the War Department for what is claimed to be its very liberal attitude in making favorable reports upon projects that have been submitted, and criticism has been directed elsewhere against the Board of Engineers for this practice upon its part. As a general rule, I do not think that the Board of Engineers is properly subject to this criticism, although very often as we read reports upon proposed projects we may believe that the benefits that may grow out of the prospective commerce to be secured through the expenditure of a given amount of money are not commensurate with the cost.

But, Mr. President, the question of how much commerce will justify a certain amount of expenditure is very largely a matter of public policy, and that public policy has been determined by the Congress itself; and so long as we find Congress, year after year, appropriating money for maintenance upon some of our rivers where the cost to the Government is sometimes several dollars for every ton of commerce that is carried upon that river, we are not in a very good position to criticize a board of engineers if they, to a certain degree, adopt the policy that has been adopted by Congress.

I have in mind, Mr. President, one river where, according to the report of the Board of Engineers, the amount expended by the Government for maintenance upon a certain portion of that river where there was no improvement going on amounted to $8 for every ton of commerce that was carried over that stretch of the river. Now, as long as Congress goes on and says that expenditures are justified where the benefits are so little, the Board of Engineers ought not to be criticized if it is somewhat liberal in making favorable reports, for it is following the policy of Congress, which it is the duty of the Board of Engineers to do.

Another reason for this is that Congress itself, in river and harbor bill after river and harbor bill, has gone upon the theory that if an expenditure of public money upon a river or harbor will result in a reduction of railroad rates the expenditure is justified, although not a ton of commerce may be carried over that river or harbor.

That has always been, it seems to me, Mr. President, an incorrect public policy. Commerce ought to take the channel that is most economical. To say that we will expend money upon a river for the sole purpose of reducing railroad rates, where those who live in the interior will have to make up for the loss to the railroad by reason of it, can not be defended for a single moment, especially as we have the Interstate Commerce Commission, a body created by law for the purpose of seeing to it that we have fair, just, and reasonable rates. It is true that the expenditure of money upon rivers and harbors has resulted in a reduction of railroad rates, and we thereby destroyed or prevented the commerce that otherwise would have come through improvements which we have made. But that ought not to be permitted. I think it will not be permitted in the future, in so far as the waterways of this country are concerned. Where naturally the cheapest way is for those waterways to be utilized for commercial purposes the railroads ought not to be permitted, through reducing their rates to less than the cost of transportation, to prevent the utilization of those waterways.

But, here again, that is the policy which has been adopted by Congress, and in the report of the Board of Engineers upon every project in every one of these hundreds or more of projects we have a paragraph as to the effect upon railroad rates by reason of the improvement. When it is found that the expenditure of public money upon a river or harbor has resulted in a reduction of railroad rates, it is then taken for granted that therefore the improvement stands justified.

The Board of Engineers of the War Department is not to blame for that. Congress itself is to blame for that policy which has been undertaken. So I do not believe, as a general rule, criticism of the Board of Engineers is proper. The fault lies with us, and has always been with us, for inaugurating and continuing any such public policy.

So far as the present bill is concerned, I do not believe it will be possible, Mr. President, nor do I believe it an opportune time to attempt to reorganize this system and adopt a different and what seems to me a correct public policy.

So far as new projects are concerned in the bill, so far as improvements under existing projects are concerned, we have before us the problem of unemployment just as we had the other day upon the good-roads bill. I believe it is proper and right for the Government at this time to undertake desirable although not absolutely necessary public improvements, so as to furnish a reservoir for the unemployment that is upon us and which in all probability will increase. That reservoir, however, ought not to be such a reservoir as will furnish the most attractive employment in the land. It ought not to be such a reservoir as will attract men from private industry to Government work of this character. It ought to be just the reverse. We ought to furnish this reservoir; we ought to go on with these public improvements, but they ought to be so managed that, so far as unemployment is concerned, they will go from this public employment to private employment just as rapidly as it can be secured.

Later on, when we have concluded the committee amendments, Mr. President, I shall offer an amendment providing that no work shall be undertaken upon any new project appropriated for in the bill unless at the time of undertaking such work the Secretary of War shall be of the opinion that, based upon the then cost of doing the work, the project can be completed at a cost not greater than 40 per cent in excess of the original estimate of cost made in the report.

I shall do that because it is very clear that with the $45,000,000 of balance unexpended, and the $30,000,000 or more appropriated in the bill, we will have more Government work going on this next summer than contractors can well and easily take care of.

There are provisions in the bill which no doubt will be discussed later on for the construction of a certain number of Government dredges, a provision I am heartily in favor of. But it is a matter of some importance that members of the Dredge Owners' Protective Association after these amendments had been adopted came before the Committee on Commerce and asked for a change in these provisions, so that the department would not be compelled to construct those dredges. They stated as their reason that as to a particular project for which the dredges are proposed to be constructed, they could do it cheaper than the Government. I do not doubt for a moment that to prevent the construction of Government dredges to prevent coming into competition with the Dredge Owners' Protective Association they would complete the given project at a very much less cost than it would otherwise be constructed for, if thereby they could defeat the construction of Government dredges which would hold their prices down to a reasonable basis.

Unless we have some limitation upon the cost of these new improvements in the bill, we are going to find many contractors in the country continuing war profits out of the Government in the doing of this public work. It ought to be a matter of some interest that excessive profits should be prevented, and when we say that we will permit these projects to go on at a cost not greater than 40 per cent in excess of the estimates we have allowed, it seems to me to be a very reasonable and generous margin.

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] a week or two ago made some statements coming under his own personal experience and observation as to the additional cost of building and construction now as compared with prewar times. He stated, as I recollect, that cement which prior to the war cost $1 per barrel now is selling for $3 per barrel. A great many thousand barrels of cement will be used in the construction of the dams and locks provided for in the bill. Will anyone say that the Government should encourage an increase of 300 per cent in the price of cement? What is the result if the Government shall do that? Are we going to encourage private building by keeping up these prices where there must be an enormous and outrageous profit to the makers of cement that enters so largely in building?

What is true of cement is true of many, many other materials. If we put a limitation such as I have suggested, of 40 per cent, it will not mean that the work will not go on; it will mean that some men will be cut down to a reasonable profit; that is all.

It is estimated by the Board of Engineers, Mr. President, that the labor cost in this river and harbor work, generally speaking, is about 50 per cent of the total cost. This 40 per cent estimate of increase would allow the payment of wages at the going rate. It would mean that the cost of material where excessive profits are being made will have to come down, and it ought to come down. It would mean that the profits of contractors taking these contracts from the Government will come down and ought to come down in many, many instances.

Mr. FLETCHER. What effect would that have on the wages of labor? How would they be affected?

Mr. LENROOT. As to that, I stated a little while ago that I would not go on with unnecessary public work, although desirable, unless it can be secured at a reasonable cost. I would not go on with this amount of public work, paying the high wages we are paying in our shipyards, for instance, because that can not be justified. I would go on with work paying a good living wage, treating it rather as a minimum wage than as a maximum wage, but such a wage that men just as soon as they can will go into private industry.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. CALDER. The Senator has not touched upon another matter, which I think is important in this connection, the efficiency of labor. The high basis of wages during the war has tended to decrease the amount of labor that men perform, particularly in war work, I regret to say. It is my judgment that with the war over competition in business will tend to increase the efficiency of labor and make up more than the difference between the 40 or 50 or 60 per cent, whatever the additional cost will be.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that is true.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the Senator permit me an inquiry about the 40 per cent increase to be proposed under his amendment? As I understand it, he would allow an increase of 40 per cent, but not at the present prices.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. FLETCHER. Where would that begin? Upon what would the Senator base the 40 per cent increase?

Mr. LENROOT. It would vary in just this way. The reports upon some of these projects go back as far as 1912; I do not know but some of them go further back than that. As to those projects, of course, the estimate of cost would be lower than those coming later on after the European war began. It may be that as to those projects they could not go on with some of them with the limitation which I have suggested. But if a project reported on eight or nine years ago has not been adopted by Congress in a subsequent river and harbor bill, and is waiting until this time to be adopted, presumably such projects are not extremely necessary or essential from the public standpoint. As to the later projects that are more essential, 40 per cent would more than cover many of them, and especially those which have been reported since the beginning of the European war.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Does not the Senator think it would really be wiser on the part of Congress, with reference to the projects that were reported upon 10 or 12 years ago, if we think that probably they should be taken up at this time, that a resurvey should be made and another recommendation should come in from the engineers as to whether or not, in view of changed conditions, it would be wise to continue or to begin the improvements?

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly would agree with the Senator if we are going on to build them irrespective of what it may now cost.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I mean.

Mr. LENROOT. I heartily agree with what the Senator says.

Mr. President, having in mind the financial condition of this Government, having in mind the condition of the Treasury, I would not be in favor of going on with these new projects proposed in the bill, except for the purpose of furnishing employment to the unemployed and furnishing an example to the country to go on with public improvements and with building. But with the condition of the Treasury we are not justified in going on with the improvements at an excessive cost. I will state, as I did a little while ago, that if we shall place this limitation of 40 per cent upon these new projects, and we will go on with this work, the result will be that contractors will be satisfied with a reasonable profit upon their contracts, whereas if there be no limitation contractors will expect and will be able to get profits at the hands of the Government upon unnecessary public works equal to the profits that war contractors have been making during the past year or two.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator, as I understand from his remarks, under certain circumstances justifies the embarkation upon new projects.

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that with the $45,000,000 now on hand, and the appropriations which the bill carries, less the new projects, the new projects amounting to approximately eight or ten million dollars, as I recall, there would be sufficient to keep the department or the River and Harbor Commission busily occupied during the coming year? Does not the Senator think that is about all that could be efficiently and properly performed and at the same time give employment to a large number of men who may be out of employment?

Mr. LENROOT. I will state in reply to the Senator that the question was very carefully gone into by the committee as to whether or not the Board of Engineers could take care in a proper way of the expenditure that is proposed by the bill, together with the available balance, and we were assured that with their organization they could take care of this expenditure. So it will simply mean that if we appropriate this additional amount of money that we can furnish that much more employment to men who are unemployed. That I am willing to do, provided it is not at too great and excessive a cost to the Government.

With reference to what I have said concerning furnishing a reservoir for unemployment, I do not wish, Mr. President, to be understood that I for a moment think the Government should be in the position of bearing down or attempting to reduce the cost of labor or the wishes of laboring men in this country. If Congress should in its wisdom impose such a limitation as I have suggested, it would not be fair to so construe as that Congress is attempting to do any such thing. If we go on with these new projects for the purpose primarily of taking care of unemployment and at the same time secure a reasonable return to the Government under the circumstances, it will not be the lowering of the price of labor in this country. If labor can not find employment, it will give that labor something to do at a moderate wage until employment can be found in private industry.

We can not safely go on and assume that all the expenditures we may make for good roads, for public buildings, for rivers and harbors, are necessary public improvements, and that we must pay the very highest wages that are being paid in this country, because if labor is well employed at good wages we ought not to undertake these improvements at all, and it is only for taking care of unemployment until labor can find better employment that we would be justified in going ahead with them at all.

Now, just one other word. I said this limitation which I propose would be confined to new projects. I propose to so confine it for this reason. We can not well apply it to projects that are now going on, because to make such a limitation upon projects that are now going on might mean a distinct loss to the Government. For instance, on the Ohio River we may have a dam and lock that are half completed. If we suspend work entirely upon that lock and dam, to take it up again a year or two from now would cost more than to complete it now, even at the higher cost. So I think that if this limitation is made it should be confined to the new projects that are named in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. KENYON. What is the pending amendment?

The SECRETARY. Page 2, line 4, strike out "$12,500" and insert "$18,750."

Mr. KENYON. I raise no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 11, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $2,000; completing," and in line 18, after the words "in all," to strike out "$244,500" and insert "$246,500," so as to make the clause read:

Gloucester, Beverly, Salem, Lynn, Plymouth, and Provincetown Harbors, Mystic, Malden, Weymouth Fore, and Weymouth Back Rivers, and Dorchester Bay and Neponset River, Mass.: For maintenance, $2,000; completing improvement of Weymouth Fore River, $183,000; for improvement of Beverly Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 220, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document as modified in the report printed in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 8, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $61,500; in all, $246,500.

Mr. KENYON. Will the chairman explain this item to us?

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment just reported was inserted by the committee because, as the bill came from the House, the Senator will observe that these different projects were all named, but there was nothing following the project. It was an omission, it strikes us, in the bill as passed by the House. What was meant to do was to provide for the maintenance of these projects, and the committee added the words "for maintenance, $2,000," which may be used by the engineers for any of this work.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator if there is an appropriation in any other form to the maintenance of this project?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; none at all. There are some available balances for the maintenance of these projects already on hand. The engineers recommended that $2,000 would be all that would be needed to take care of all of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Then there is a fund they can draw from, the unexpended balance for maintenance.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; for these projects, that is true; but $2,000 was recommended by the engineers for maintenance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 2, before the word "improvement," to strike out "Completing" and insert "For maintenance, $1,500; for"; in line 4, after the words "first session," to strike out "$61,440" and insert "$91,160"; in line 8, after the words "second session," to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$52,500"; and in the same line, after the words "in all," to strike out "$96,440" and insert "$145,160," so as to make the clause read:

Providence River and Harbor, Pawtucket River, Newport Harbor, harbors of refuge at Point Judith and Block Island, entrance to Point Judith Pond, and Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R. I.: For maintenance, $1,500; for improvement of Pawtucket River in accordance with report submitted in House Document No. 1283, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, $91,160; completing improvement of Point Judith harbor of refuge in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 2001, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, $52,500; in all, $145,160.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the same situation as the one on page 2.

Mr. SMOOT. There is a difference, however, in this amendment from that on page 2.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am speaking with reference to the $1,500 for maintenance. That was inserted for the same reason that we observe with reference to the item on page 2. We propose to strike out the word "completing" and insert "for maintenance, $1,500; for," because the amount estimated for that project was sent in some time ago, and there was a question as to whether that would be sufficient for completion.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator will notice that not only have the committee stricken out the word "completing," but now they have added for improvements of the Pawtucket River, but increased the amount the House passed from $61,440 to $91,160. In other words, the House thought that with $61,440 the project could be completed, but it is proposed that the Senate shall say now that $91,160 shall be appropriated for improvement, which is an increase of 50 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator is correct. That is a mistake. The word "for," in line 2, ought to be changed to "completing," so as to read "completing improvement of Pawtucket River," because we intended to make the amount sufficient to complete, which is more than the amount for continuing the improvement.

I am quite sure the Senator is correct, and I move to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the word "for," in line 2 and inserting "completing" so that the total appropriation will be for the completion of this project. That is really a mistake in the print.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, will the Senator explain why this increase of $30,000 is asked?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is asked because, as I said, it is in accordance with the report which was submitted some time ago, and the engineers in reviewing it and considering the conditions to-day say the project can not be completed for $61,440, but it will be necessary to make the appropriation $91,160. With the $1,500 for maintenance, it would be $89,660. They considered that necessary to complete the improvements. The question was whether the committee would leave the bill with only $61,440 for continuing the improvements or whether we would appropriate enough to complete it.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the House thought $61,440 would complete it. Has an estimate come in since, I will ask the Senator?

Mr. FLETCHER. Some data have come in since, and I think there is no question but that the House committee was not convinced that that would be enough to complete the work; but they considered that it might possibly do so; and if it did not, of course, the work would not be completed; that is all. But clearly we should have to do one thing or the other according to the facts in the case, on the data in hand; we must either make it merely an improvement proposition or a completion of the improvement. If we make it completion, we shall have to increase the amount.

Mr. SMOOT. What I was thinking was that, if this estimate had been made, for instance, before 1914, the cost of material, the cost of labor, and the cost of everything that goes into the completion of the project, would have greatly advanced; but this estimate contained in House Document No. 1283 was made in the Sixty-fourth Congress—that was the last Congress—and I can not see how the increase will amount to 50 per cent, as shown by the additional appropriation asked for. If the Senator has a statement from the engineers to the effect that that is the fact, I think the best way to do would be to make the full appropriation for the completion of the projects, and to get them out of the way. I really think that would be the proper policy to follow.

Mr. FLETCHER. That was the statement made by Gen. Taylor, and the action of our committee was taken after a very thorough inquiry into it. Gen. Taylor appeared before the committee, and we inquired specifically, "Will this sum complete that project?" and he said, "It could not be completed at that figure to-day." We then asked him to give us the figures necessary to complete it, and this is his statement. This, of course, is based upon that statement.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. Are there any elements which enter into this increase in the amount recommended by the Senate committee other than labor and materials? In other words, when this matter was before the House $61,440 was deemed adequate for the completion of this project. Now, within a few months the recommendation comes, if I understand the Senator, for $91,160. What elements were taken into account to swell that appropriation so enormously?

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Senator will allow me, I think I am justified in stating that when the House considered the item they simply took the estimate as it appeared in the document; they did not inquire of the engineers whether or not that estimate would hold good to-day. When the bill came to us we made inquiry as to that. I am not going too far, I am sure, when I say that the House did not inquire into that; they simply took the figures from the report and put the item in the bill in that way. When it came to us we inquired in order to ascertain whether that would be sufficient to complete the project, and whether we should change the word "for" to "completing," so that it would read "completing improvement" instead of "for improvement." That brought up the question as to how much would be necessary to complete it. So the engineer made a study of it and reported to us upon inquiry that he was sure the amount necessary to complete it would be the amount which we are providing.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator advise us whether the testimony, if there was testimony, was reported and is available?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that we had no formal hearings, we had no reporter, and did not have Gen. Taylor's statement taken down. We went over the bill item by item in his presence, however, before the committee. I have no report of his testimony, but I am sure every member of the committee will bear me out in my statement. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], I see, is present, and probably he remembers that we made the inquiry as to the amount that was necessary to complete this project and whether we should provide for completing it or merely for continuing the improvement. I am speaking with reference to the item on page 3, I will say to the Senator. We made no report of Gen. Taylor's testimony before the committee. Therefore I am not able to produce his statement, and I am saying to the Senator from Utah that upon the recommendation of Gen. Taylor and his statement that it was necessary to increase the amount carried by the House bill to the amount provided for in our bill in order to complete that improvement the committee acted.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry? Is it a coincidence or is it a matter of calculation that, at least in many of these increases over the House bill, the percentage of increase is substantially uniform, being about 50 per cent? For instance, on page 2 the appropriation is increased from $12,500 to $18,750. The item which is under consideration now is increased from $61,440 to $91,160. On the next page I find substantially the same, and so on through, a substantial increase of 50 per cent.

Mr. FLETCHER. The item in line 8 is increased from $35,000 to $52,500.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator to say with respect to the item on page 2, increasing the appropriation from $12,500 to $18,750, that the elements which were taken into account and which led to that increase were the increased prices of labor and of material.

Mr. FLETCHER. Those, I think, are the principal items.

Mr. KING. Then, as to the item under consideration, the Senator would say the same elements, and only those elements, led to the increase?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think that is quite true.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me, if this bill is based upon that theory, that we shall swell the House appropriations 50 per cent because of the increase in materials and in labor, this increase is entirely too much and would be very unwise and improper.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that that has not been done generally. I doubt if there are any other items in the bill—there may be, but I do not recall any, and I do not for the present lay my eye on any other items of the bill—where we substitute the word "completing" for the word "for" or where we have actually changed the cost so as to complete the project. We have other items in the bill where we change the word "completing" to the word "for," but we have not changed the appropriation. Upon page 4 we substitute the word "for" for "completing," but we have kept the amount of the appropriation the same. I think those are about the only items where we have undertaken to complete the project instead of continuing the improvement. I do not recall any other; but, at any rate, the estimate of the Chief of Engineers was that, on account of the prices of labor and material to-day, they would have to increase the estimate which they formerly made and as shown in their report in order to complete these projects.

Mr. JOHNSON of California and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I thought the Senator from Florida had concluded. I do not wish to interrupt him.

Mr. FLETCHER. I had asked the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] to confirm my statement with reference to the recommendation of the engineers if his recollection accords with mine.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was examining the league of nations constitution while the Senator from Florida was speaking about the item to which he now refers, and so did not catch what he said.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not notice that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] was present at that time. Perhaps he will remember as to Gen. Taylor's statement.

Mr. LENROOT. My recollection accords with that of the Senator from Florida, that where amendments are made in the bill by the Senate committee, changing the word "completing" to the word "for," it was not expected that the appropriation would complete the improvement, but that there should be that much money spent upon it; and where the bill provides for completion, 50 per cent was added, as a general rule, to the old estimate; but there were, I think, some two or three provisions of the bill where the estimates were very recent and where that addition was not made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that my recollection is—and the Senator from Florida may have referred to it, though I do not know—that the engineers stated that they got the supplemental estimates or reports from their division or district officers after the bill was passed by the other House——

Mr. FLETCHER. That is true, but——

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that those supplemental reports showed that the amount which they had submitted to the House was not sufficient. It was upon the showing that they made with reference to that matter that we increased some of these items. We did not increase all of them, as the engineers requested. Where they thought there might be some doubt about the amount of money being sufficient to complete the project, and yet did not make a showing that warranted us in increasing the amount, we left the amount the same, but changed the word "completing" to "improving"; so that if they felt warranted in going on with the work they could do so. I remember that I asked the engineers representing the department with reference to several of these matters. They said they found it to be true that the expenditure of money, even if it would not complete the project, would do substantial good and make substantial improvement, and even though it did not complete it the money would not at all be wasted; on the contrary, it would serve a good purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Then the Senator agrees with my amendment striking out the word "for," on page 3, line 2, and inserting the word "completing." He will notice that the figures "$61,440" have been increased to "$91,160"; in other words, wherever the word "completing" has been substituted there has been an increase in the amount appropriated by the House. In each such case there is a 50 per cent raise.

For "completing improvement of Point Judith harbor of refuge in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 2001, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session," the appropriation has been increased from $35,000 to $52,500, which is an increase of just 50 per cent.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am inclined to think that where we have raised the amount it is for "completion" instead of for "improvement."

Mr. SMOOT. With that change, striking out the word "for" and inserting the word "completing," the bill would be made harmonious so far as the increases are concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is what was intended. The word "for" there is really, I think, a misprint.

AMERICAN TROOPS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I move that the pending measure be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 411.

Mr. FLETCHER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Jones, Wash.	New	Smith, S. C.
Calder	Kenyon	Norris	Smoot
Colt	King	Page	Spencer
Fernald	Knox	Pittman	Sutherland

Mr. SPENCER. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. NUGENT], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] are absent on official business of the Senate in attendance on the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call discloses that 45 Senators are present, not a quorum. The Secretary——

Mr. LEWIS. Let me suggest a call of the absent Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. KIRBY, Mr. NUGENT, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. TOWNSEND, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. KENDRICK, Mr. CULBERSON, Mr. CURTIS, Mr. MCNARY, Mr. CUMMINS, and Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. MCNARY. My colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], is absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate resolution 411, on which the yeas and nays are requested.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, before the motion is put I wish to submit some observations.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think it is in order to debate the motion at this time.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will submit my observations on the river and harbor bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. The motion is debatable.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think a motion to take up another matter at this time is debatable.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 411), as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the soldiers of the United States as soon as practicable should be withdrawn from Russia.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, if it were in the morning hour I understand that then no debate would be in order; but the pending motion, made after 2 o'clock, is to lay aside temporarily the bill under consideration and to take up the resolution of the Senator from California.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida raise the point of order that no debate is in order?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have the ruling of the Chair on that question. I am not sure that the point of order is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that his memory of the rule and of the ruling of the Vice President is that after 2 o'clock a motion to take up for consideration another measure is debatable.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I think there is no doubt about that. I should be glad to see the resolution disposed of without debate; but I do not think there is a doubt about the fact that the rule makes such a motion debatable after 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If no point of order is raised, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] necessarily brings up the merits of the resolution, and I, therefore, do not need to apologize for not addressing myself to the bill which is the regular course of business before the Senate.

It has been remarked here a number of times that we are not at war with Russia. No formal declaration has ever been made declaring war or that a state of war existed; and, according to the relations that subsist between independent nations, there is in international law no state of war; but the Senator from California was quite correct, I think, yesterday when he said that actual war does exist. War is not always a question of diplomacy or passage of resolutions; it is not made on parchment; it is made by arms; and the ordinary methods of waging war prevail now in certain portions of northern Russia, where our military forces are found acting with certain forces of the allies, so that we are actually at war. Whatever may be said of the diplomatic relations that exist between this and other countries, there are several nations that we would be justified in dealing with quite as harshly as we are with Russia.

We have been asked a number of times why we did not prevent the massacres in Armenia. The reply always is that we are not at war with Turkey and we have no occasion, therefore, to enter Turkish territory or Turkish waters with our Army and Navy for the purpose of preventing the slaughter of those helpless people.

We are told that no war exists with Mexico. That, too, is true; but still for several years no American and no American property have been safe in Mexico.

I am in sympathy with the resolution or the initiatory stages of the movement made by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] leading to the acquisition of Lower California. I think we had just as well have that point of danger, and I am perfectly willing to enter into negotiations, so far as I have a voice in the matter, for the purpose of acquiring that strip of land with its marginal waters, not because we need it for the purposes of emigration, but it is a matter of safety; and we ought to have it to defend our coast. It is a place always where lodgments may be made, and harbors, coaling stations, or ports acquired that would be inimical to the peace and safety of the United States.

Several times in years past a question has arisen whether the leases of certain property there were not ultimately for the benefit of an independent nation, an oriental country. We have had to exercise sometimes rather strenuous diplomacy to defeat it. Therefore, the best way to safeguard ourselves would be, if it can be done peaceably, to acquire from Mexico, by negotiating with such Government as we are recognizing—the Carranza Government at present—to the end that we may acquire this territory.

We are not at war with Mexico. We would not be justified in seizing this territory. It is not the policy of the United States to seize territory anywhere. If we are to take it, we must acquire it by some treaty of an amicable character, exchanging value for value, and with the acquiescence of the people concerned.

On the 8th of January, 1915, the President, referring to conditions that prevailed in Mexico, in an address at Indianapolis, Ind., and at other places, announcing the same doctrine, said that any people had a right to frame such government as it saw fit; that it was no concern of the United States to undertake to thrust upon another people any form of government. I insert here a paragraph from President Wilson's Indianapolis speech:

I hold it as a fundamental principle, and so do you, that every people has the right to determine its own form of government, and until this recent revolution in Mexico, until the end of the Diaz reign, 80 per cent of the people of Mexico never had a "look in" in determining who should be their governor or what their government should be. Now, I am for the 80 per cent. It is none of my business, and it is none of your business, how long they take in determining it. It is none of my business, and it is none of yours, how they go about the business. The country is theirs. The Government is theirs. The liberty, if they can get it, and godspeed them in getting it, is theirs. And so far as my influence goes, while I am President, nobody shall interfere with them. * * * Have not European nations taken as long as they wanted and spilt as much blood as they pleased in settling their affairs, and shall we deny that to Mexico because she is weak? No, I say. (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Jan. 9, 1915, pp. 1281–1282.)

If the Government, whatever it may be, should interfere with us, either in our domestic or our foreign relations, it is time enough then for us to defend ourselves, either diplomatically or by war, against the nation so interfering. We have not yet reached that point either with Mexico or with Russia.

Mexico has adopted a constitution of a peculiar character. Rumor says that it was written in New York City by some very distinguished economists. Whether it was or not I need not stop to inquire, but a provision in the constitution that has worked considerable havoc in our country in substance takes from the owners, whether domestic or alien, all of the lands and everything connected with the lands, on the surface, in its mountains, beneath the surface in the mines, or oils. It reinvests the title in the Government, supposing the Government to have been the original source of title. It provides thereafter that neither mines, oils, nor lands shall be worked except upon a license from the Government. It returns to the days of the Norman feudal tenure. The license necessarily is revocable. It amounts to the leasehold or the occupancy of the Norman tenure in the hands of military chieftains.

The President or the Government of Mexico can lease out, on any terms it pleases, under licenses, the right to take oil or mineral from the soil or under the soil of Mexico. All of the mineral rights that have been acquired by aliens from this or any other country are thereby forfeited and vested in the Republic of Mexico. All the oils in that prolific region in and about Tampico and other parts of Mexico are taken from the private owners and reinvested in the Republic of Mexico. The interests of oil men in the United States are confiscated. The great holdings of the Pearson syndicate, an English concern, are vitally affected. A large part of the fuel oil burned upon the shipping of England and some of our own shipping has been drawn from Mexican sources; so that it became very material to this country, as well as to England, to know whether the oil lands were to be confiscated and were to be operated only by a license from the Carranza Government of Mexico.

That has brought up the question referred to in the resolution offered by my colleague [Mr. LEWIS], seeking to make an inquiry as to whether this property has been destroyed, in substance, and whether life is no longer safe to those who seek to take care of their property in that country.

These are matters of the gravest concern; and still, they do not justify war with Mexico—neither a declaration of war under a resolution of Congress, nor actual war by sending our Army and Navy to her waters or her territory.

The Armenian outrages have continued for many years. Almost from the time that the oldest man in this Chamber can remember there has been the slaughter of these helpless people. If anything would appeal to the sense of humanity, to the common sympathy of those in authority in our country, it would be to stop such outrages. They are perpetrated with the avowed intention of literally exterminating the Armenian people. Men, women, and children have been the helpless victims of brutal massacres for years. I care not, for purposes of comparison, what the vices of the Bolshevist government in Russia may be; they never, in their most brutal moments, have excelled the ferocity and cruelty of the Turk in his treatment of his Armenian subjects. We have remained at peace with Turkey, although she has been at war with our allies, during all these years. If it be a question of a reprehensible government, that of the Turk, for many centuries in fact, has been the most despotic and bloody known to human history.

For my part, I have neither apologies nor defense to make for the Bolshevist government in Russia. Like the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I may be misunderstood. I must assume whatever risk there is in that course. Senators who have been on the floor of this Chamber when the matter has been discussed could not assert, and would not intimate for a moment that I have any sympathy with the Bolshevist government, with their infamous creed, with their practices sought to be enforced on womankind, either by districts or by localities, or in the general government of Russia, or in their relations with the outside world. I consider it one of the worst possible forms. It is a libel on the name of government. I have no sympathy whatever with it. I believe it to be a menace.

I do not think, however, because the Bolshevist government is a menace, and ought to have no place nor law in any civilized people, that we are justified in sending our Army and Navy into Russia for the purpose of suppressing such an outrage upon the name of government, or for the purpose of setting up any other government in that country. It occupies a large part of Europe. It contains something like 200,000,000 people. It is unfortunate. It is unfortunate for the allies, who are nearer the scene of the conflagration than we are. It concerns, it is true, the whole civilized world.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. The Senator did not mean to state that the Bolshevists controlled in Russia 200,000,000 of people, did he? because the fact is that the Bolshevists are only in control of a strip of Russian territory from 300 to 500 miles northerly and southerly, and 1,000 miles or a little more easterly and westerly; that they dominate perhaps 40,000,000 of the Russian population; but that northern Russia, southern Russia, and other parts of Russia, and Siberian Russia are not under the control of Lenine and Trotzky and their government.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator is entirely correct in that. I was referring both to the territory and to the population of all Russia, without regard to that under the influence of the Bolshevists and otherwise. The Bolshevists, I think, control a very decided minority, and even a minority of the territory over which theoretically they have extended their dominion. I think it is a reign of terror, and not a reign of government.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOSES. With reference to the statement just made by the Senator from Utah, I discover that two distinguished authorities are, apparently, in conflict, inasmuch as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, yesterday, in discussing this question, said:

From Vladivostok to the Ural Mountains—5,000 miles, inhabited by millions of people, and through which runs the great railroad of Russia—comparative peace and quiet prevail under the government of the Russian Soviets to-day, and they are at peace with the few soldiers of the United States and associated nations that are there.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator certainly does not want to do the Senator from Nebraska an injustice. The Senator from Nebraska in that statement did not mean to assert, and does not assert, that the territory east of the Ural Mountains is under the control of Lenine and Trotzky. There is an embryonic soviet east of the Ural Mountains, but it is not under the control of Lenine and Trotzky.

Mr. MOSES. Then, we are to believe that the embryonic soviet is more potential than the fully developed soviet?

Mr. KING. Well, the Senator can determine that for himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, a soviet can appear anywhere. It can appear either as a concerted outbreak or it can be entirely sporadic. There has almost been a soviet in Seattle, Wash., during the strike in that country. It has been dispersed by the action of the Government, which, I think, is entirely justified. The most effective and the most righteous action this Government ever took was when it collected 58 of these disturbers, who would make a soviet in any country where they landed, and took them across the continent and started them back to the respective countries of their origin. Such alien vagrants and disturbers, advocating violence, have no place in our country. I hope the immigration authorities and the Federal Government will continue that course until the germs of any possible soviet government in this country shall have been deported to the land where they belong. I can not refrain from reminding the Senate here that the greater part of the persons deported would be able to pass any educational test required in the recently enacted immigration laws. The educated firebrand is the most malevolent and dangerous of all.

In Russia, no doubt, a soviet government could break out in any locality. It confines itself, so far as it has the semblance of a government, to the immediate territory where, by force of arms or by terrorism, it subjugates the minds and the bodies of the Russian population.

In the Ukraine country there seems to be no element that could be worthy of the name of a soviet government. There is none in Siberia. I think this Government and others acted properly in giving support to the Czecho-Slovak forces that set up there an independent country. Russia, however, in its entirety, territorially, is a very large part of Europe. The Russian people, speaking generally of that country, are approximately 200,000,000 in number. This part of Europe is in a state of tumult where there is any activity on public questions at all. How far in the interior the average person, the peasant, is interested in these questions no one here could accurately say; but for the soviet government or the government of the Bolshevist I have the utmost abhorrence. I regard it as an enemy to every civilized form of government. A part of its creed is that it shall carry its doctrines around the world, and subjugate, by fair means or foul, every other government to its creed.

I have continually—as other Senators have, no doubt—coming to me the documentary claims of this government. They claim that they propose a revolution in our country. I have no doubt that the Government authorities here are in possession of accurate evidence showing that a systematic crusade to that end is now in progress. Their entire system of government, taking it as written, upon its merits, has no justification for existing, according to my lights; but if the people of Russia see fit to adopt it, to tolerate it; if they do not rise in open rebellion and destroy it, that is their concern and not mine. It is not even socialistic. It is far worse. The domestic relations are invaded.

The rights of property are destroyed. The right of free speech long ago ended. There is no such thing under the Bolshevist government. Under it the last vestige of civil liberty has disappeared. Without going into the details of it, which, of course, I think every good citizen in this country would reprobate if he were called on to pass upon the question on its merits of whether we would set up such a government, or permit others to advocate setting up such a government here, we need not, however, decide that question now. The immediate purpose of this resolution is to withdraw our forces from such parts of Russia as they now occupy.

How did they happen to be sent to that far northern region, fairly under the Arctic Circle? I heard the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. HITCHCOCK] explain why, in the first instance, they were dispatched to that quarter of the globe. I admit that his explanation made a most satisfactory impression upon my mind. In substance, it was that during the war, before the armistice, especially after there was difficulty in sending out submarines from a German port in the North Sea, they had taken some territory by force of arms in and about the White Sea in the vicinity of Archangel, on the Murman coast, and were there making preparations to fit out submarines to prey upon the shipping of their enemies, and our forces, joining with the allies, were dispatched to that point to prevent it.

That would be, possibly, a legitimate object in war. I mean actual war, not theoretical war, such as the condition we are now living under. It justifies us, likely, before the armistice in defending our rights there against German aggressions. It is a most unusual procedure, however, and something for which we criticize Germany, for a nation to dispatch its fleets and its armies to the territory or waters of a country with which it is not at war, even for the purpose of protecting itself because some of the people there join with Germany. On the ground of the law of necessity I can understand it.

It was the law of necessity that Germany invoked when she invaded Belgium. On the 3d day of August, 1914, when her armies crossed the Belgian frontier, when she was arraigned at the bar of international public opinion as to why she had done so, she replied that she had done so to reach her enemy, France, in the shortest possible time; that it was justified not by international law, not by the rules that prevailed among peaceable nations, but by the rule of warfare as she administered it—the law of necessity.

If it were the law of necessity that induced us to send our forces into Russia during actual war with the central powers, then we are reduced to the difficulty of claiming our right to act upon the same low, ignoble basis that Germany claimed it in 1914.

I can not justify my country by any such reason. It can not be justified in the law of nations, I fear, after an armistice otherwise than by that of supreme military force. So, taking it for granted, then, that as a matter of actual warfare we dispatched the forces joining with the allies for the purpose of preventing the Germans from establishing a submarine base on those coasts and to protect our supplies. It is questionable——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KING. Of course the Senator does not want to attack his country, I am sure, because he is too great a patriot for that; and he does not want to condemn his own country, when she was at war with the most formidable military powers in the world, for pursuing a course justified under the laws of war.

The Senator, if he will reflect a moment, will recall that at that time the northern part of Russia was under the control of Russians who still were true to the allies, and who were warring, so far as they could, against Germany. That part of Russia was being invaded by Germany and by a revolutionary body in Russia under the control of Lenine and Trotzky. It was not a government; it was a movement chiefly engaged in destroying the allies, and among them the United States. It conspired and confederated with our enemies, Austria and Germany; it joined with Germany in an effort to subjugate Russia, the part of Russia true to the allies, the part of Russia that was fighting for liberty. Our Government and the allies, at the request of Russians—not the revolutionary Lenine-Trotzky party—attempted to secure cooperation with those Russians, and at the same time to prevent supplies which had been sent to the northern coast by the allies, and which belonged in part to the Russian people, from falling into the hands of our enemies, and at the same time to prevent the German Government from making that part of the territory just described by the Senator a naval base for military operations and submarine operations against the allied Governments.

So that in going to Russia we were not invading territory. We were there by invitation of loyal Russians who were fighting for liberty, fighting against the central powers, the same as we were. It was not an invasion of territory at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator states the facts accurately, so far as he has covered them. We, however, are in this condition, or were at that time, and the status has not been changed since: The regular Government of Russia, that was an ally of this country and an ally of the other entente powers at the time the war broke out and afterwards, had been overthrown. The Czar and his government toppled to their fall in a very short time.

Immediately there sprang into being a variety of powers. They were all revolutionary in character. They succeeded the brief reign of Kerensky. Following his overthrow came Lenine and Trotzky. As opposed to the latter there were the sympathizers with the Kerensky government, those who were identified with what the Bolshevists called the middle, or bourgeoise, class. Against them the present Bolshevist power made war. It was civil, internal commotion. It was one faction of the Russian people struggling with yet another faction for supremacy in domestic affairs.

At one time Huerta was dictator or governor of Mexico. He had shot Madero, through his agents, while he was trying to escape. That is a mere euphemism in that country. It is an ornamental gentleman's way of saying, "I assassinated my enemy." But immediately civil commotion in Mexico reached its climax. This country refused, it is said, because we had no concern in the affairs of Mexico, to recognize either the one faction or the other. Huerta's representative was denied recognition; and while this domestic struggle was in progress this country refused to recognize any of the elements, leaving it to that country to set up their power with an army and a navy and a capital and an established government, having all the organism of a government, and then they might send to us their representative, and we would decide whether we would recognize that government. This was done, although Americans by scores were murdered by some of the factions in that country. We did not intervene in our neighboring Republic across the Rio Grande River.

In Russia, after the succession of troubles had come and gone, there were two elements at last struggling for mastery. The Lenine-Trotzky revolutionary government made war upon their enemies. The allies and ourselves recognized the enemies of the Bolshevist government as our allies. That was in effect repudiating the doctrine laid down in Mexico.

The only way we could have lawfully been, according to the rules of international law, upon the territory of Russia was to have recognized a government in Russia, which I understand was never done, and then having recognized it joined with them as their ally, and we would have lawfully been upon the soil of Russia according to the established rules not only of war but of diplomacy. We never recognized the Kerensky government nor any other in Russia. We joined—and perhaps there ought to be some liberality of judgment in the stress of war—with the enemies of the Bolshevist government for the purposes the Senator from Utah has stated. Since the armistice we have continued military operations there without right. If we were fighting Germany there, we might have some ground,

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHAFROTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator recognizes our right to be upon Russian soil with our friends in Russia while we were still engaged in a war. I think the Senator would also recognize our right to be upon Russian soil for the purpose of fighting our enemies who were upon Russian soil. I would like to know then, inasmuch as the Senator has declared so emphatically that Lenine and Trotsky and their Bolshevist followers are not only enemies of the entente powers and enemies of the United States but friends of Germany in our war, and who betrayed Russia and the Russian armies for German gold, to state why we were not there lawfully and properly for the purpose of destroying them—the enemies of our country and the friend and abettors of our enemy. Inasmuch as the war has not yet actually ceased, why are we not justified in still making war against those enemies, and especially while they are committing the worst atrocities ever known in the history of the world, while they have got their grip upon the throats of our real friends in Russia, whom we had agreed again and again and assured again and again we would assist in this great struggle to establish and maintain a real Russian government?

Why are we not justified even to-day in protecting not only them but also the band of noble Czecho-Slovaks, that little army that refused to surrender to Germany, that dared the long trip across the Siberian plains that they might still fight for this world's cause, and who are even to-day endangered and their lives threatened by the Lenine and Trotzky organization if they ever get control of all Russia.

I want to ask the Senator whether he does not think that there is a duty still imposed upon us to defend our friends and those who fought with us in that battle against those enemies who treacherously surrendered our cause?

I state it sincerely because I know the deep patriotism of the Senator and I know his own fighting qualities; I know his belief in standing by our allies and standing firmly. It does seem to me when we, by any kind of a resolution, declare that we should get our soldiers out of Russia just as soon as it is possible or practicable to do so, we ought to question ourselves whether there is any moral duty upon the part of this Government to sustain that part of Russia which is still fighting though not strong enough to release the strangle grasp of these robbers and murderers upon its throat.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota whether he has observed that the Russians who are not members of the Bolshevik organization are declining to support the American troops?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, they have no way of supporting the American troops. They are not declining; they merely can not do it, simply because they are bound hand and foot by the Bolshevist element now in control. I believe if they had the means, if they had the ammunition, if they had any capacity for organization, they would do so.

Mr. BORAH. But those, Mr. President, who have been called into service, who were actually organized, and who had been furnished with means by the American soldiers, refused to abide by the orders of the commanding general and refused to support the American forces even after they were given an opportunity by arms, ammunition, and means, and so forth, to do so.

Not only do those particular people who have been gathered up and organized and placed in a position where they could act refuse to do so, but the Russian people generally, whether Bolshevists or not, resent the fact that we are there.

Has the Senator heard of any uprising or any flocking to the American forces or any great support of the American forces? Has the Senator heard or read of any demonstration upon the part of the Russian people indorsing our presence there? On the other hand, he has read the very opposite if he has read what the Senator from Idaho has read.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Senator means by that statement to say that the Russians are not supporting the allied troops who are in Russia, with due deference to the superior knowledge of my friend from Idaho, I want to dissent from that position. On the contrary, the northern part of Russia, in Archangel and vicinity, about one-third of the troops there—or a considerable number, at least—are Russians, and there would be more, but there are not sufficient arms for them.

Mr. BORAH. I observed in the press dispatches day before yesterday that a portion of those who are associated with our troops had actually been punished by the forces for refusing to take part in the service.

Mr. KING. And the Senator will recall that the governor of that territory, of the part of Russia to which I am referring, and who is also associated with the Omsk government, has been in constant liaison with the American troops and aiding in every possible way. Of course, on the eastern front we have no troops in Russia nearer than the eastern part of Siberia, but it is a matter of common knowledge that the Russians aided the allied troops who were with the Czecho-Slovaks in every possible way. We did not furnish them guns or munitions, and the Czecho-Slovaks for months fought with their bare hands until they wrested guns from the Bolsheviks, whom they defeated, and contrary to the promises which were made by the allied government to give military aid and financial aid to the Czecho-Slovaks they have not done so. They are there now devoid of arms, without munitions, without sufficient resources to prosecute the war. If we had furnished them arms and munitions and money, as the allies ought to have done, there would have been no bolshevism now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course I do not know from what sources the Senator gets his information. I may be wholly in error, but I do know that the press dispatches carried the news, I do know that people who have come from Russia carried the fact that the Russian people are not supporting the allied expedition, and that does not apply to Bolshevists, but it applies to the Russian people generally. They feel that the allies are not sufficiently definite as to their purposes in Russia as to what they propose to do. Suspicion accompanies the expedition. Therefore the Russian people, according to my information, are not supporting the allied troops. I may be in error and the Senator may be correct. I am simply stating what I hear and what I read. That is the only way we get information these days.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will agree with the Senator from Idaho that we ought to be more definite. I agreed on the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that the Government should say why we are there, what we purpose to do, and what we purpose not to do in Russia. I agree with that resolution, which has never come out of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

But, Mr. President, the very fact that we have but a few thousand soldiers in a land of 200,000,000 souls, that those soldiers are able to take care of themselves, and wherever they have come into conflict or contact with the Bolshevists have defeated them, is of itself evidence to me that there is surrounding our soldiers a friendly feeling in Russia; that while they have not the arms, while they have not the munitions, and while they have not the organization to assist them in any way, and while it may be true that they suspect our motives, or do not know whether we will stand by them if they do the organizing, it is evident to me that generally those people who do not belong to the organized Bolsheviki are friends of the allies and friends of this Government.

I not only would not take away those soldiers to-day, but I would put an army of one hundred or two hundred or five hundred thousand there if necessary, and I would soon put an end to the rule of Lenine and Trotsky and their brutalities and then give the Russian people, the real people of Russia, an opportunity at least to demonstrate whether they could organize a government when we have relieved them from the assassins who now hold them in subjection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there was a time when Lenine and Trotsky were not in power. Suppose that we should drive them from power, and suppose the Russian people should not organize a government, would we leave them in utter chaos, or would we establish a government there, and would we stay there and see that that government was properly stabilized and kept in existence? Where will we end in this matter if we start in to drive out the only form of government that there is, assuming it is as bad as it can be? When will our duty end? When will our task be finished?

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator call the Bolshevist control a form of government? I would like to read from papers here a few of the acts committed under the form of government they are administering and have the Senator say whether he believes that is any kind of government or whether it is simple anarchy or an organized mob to destroy every semblance of civilization.

Mr. BORAH. Now, let us assume that it is anarchy or an organized mob to destroy civilization. The Senator goes into Russia with his 500,000 soldiers and kills the two leaders who represent it. He does not do anything to establish a government in the place of those, whether they are anarchists or whatever they are; what will be the condition when he comes out?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have got to lose my faith in humanity entirely before I believe that the whole Russian people are of the type of anarchists that we are reading about to-day in the press of the country concerning these Bolshevist beasts. I do still believe that there is enough good, enough character in the great mass of the Russian people to-day, that ignorant as they are, easily duped as they are, if you can protect them even a few months until they can organize a government by the law-abiding class in Russia they could then hold the upper hand, and it would not be necessary for us to keep an army there for an unlimited length of time.

Mr. BORAH. The government which the Bolshevist displaced, which represented what was called the liberal democrats of Russia, were in power and were displaced by Lenine and Trotzky. What right have we to assume that if we go there and destroy two individuals the people who are in sympathy with them will not replace them by some one else?

Mr. McCUMBER. We have the right to assume, Mr. President, that there are a sufficient number of law-abiding and patriotic people in the territory of Russia to constitute a government. Of course, if we are mistaken in that, if we must learn sometime hereafter that that is an impossibility, then it would seem to me our duty would be to use our influence for an autocratic government to govern Russia the same as we would put a superintendent over a madhouse. I do not believe the whole nation has gone mad.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely what the Russian people are afraid of. They are afraid that it is going to lead to the re-establishment of an autocratic, bureaucratic government, such as they had for the last 300 years.

There is no doubt, Mr. President, but what the best information that comes from Russia carries the news that the Russian people as a whole are entirely suspicious of the ultimate object which the allies have in view in regard to this intervention. Hundreds of thousands of Russians who are not in sympathy with the Bolsheviks at all have great fear that there is ultimately to be established an autocratic form of government and that the Romanoffs are to be called back into power.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we could disillusion them in a week if we sent an army to Petrograd to take care of these archbeasts who are controlling Russia to-day and then give the Russian people an opportunity to elect a congress to control. They had a congress there before Lenine and Trotzky took possession. That congress was dissolved, or, more accurately, forcibly dispersed, in order that these archfiends might have a better opportunity to work out their devilish ideas of government, one of which is illustrated by their order apportioning young girds between 16 and 20 years of age and turning them over as the property of a soldiery, whose savage brutalities have been a hundredfold more atrocious than any crimes committed against the peoples of Belgium or France or Armenia.

I do not believe that the Russian people as a people are satisfied with that kind of a rule in Petrograd. That city, which contained more than 2,000,000 inhabitants, is now left with less than 800,000 to-day. I can not believe, as between the danger that they might feel from the United States military control and the atrocities that they are suffering every day from Lenine and Trotzky and their soldiery, that they would have any difficulty in deciding that if there was a danger in submitting to the rule of the allies for a moment they would choose that rule, rather than stand by and see their own children murdered and their daughters ravaged by this gang of brutes.

Mr. BORAH. The thing I do not understand about the Senator's position, if there are a vast majority of people in Russia in favor of his program, is why they do not proceed to put it into execution.

Mr. McCUMBER. Because, as I tried to answer the Senator, they are helpless.

Mr. BORAH. No; Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the first reason; secondly, because they have not the capacity, without some assistance and some defense, to organize a government. My opinion is that if we would defend them and call upon them to elect a Congress they would be capable of doing it and would be able to establish a real government in Russia.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator really contend that America should go to Russia with some 250,000 to 500,000 troops and stay there until the Russian people demonstrate that they are capable of organizing and maintaining a sane form of government such as the Senator would believe in?

Mr. McCUMBER. No; Mr. President, I am really doubtful if they would ever maintain a government of the character I would believe in, but I would go there and stay long enough to get rid of Lenine and Trotsky.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that; but——

Mr. McCUMBER. And I would then allow the people of that nation to at least attempt self-government. I would give them the opportunity under the protection of the United States and the allied powers.

Mr. BORAH. This is really then a posse comitatus to arrest and try and execute Lenine and Trotsky?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can consider it in any light he sees fit. If it were to try and execute Lenine and Trotsky I would say that we had done a mighty service in Russia. And these murderers deserve it a thousand times over, if we were capable of inflicting it upon them. We should relieve Russia from that control to-day. Then, if she can not control herself that is for her.

I want to beg the pardon of the Senator from Illinois for having taken so much of his time.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is all right.

Mr. President, to resume, the atmosphere about the allies and our own forces in Russia, I think, is accurately described by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], whom I thank for the facts given. There is not that amicable feeling that ordinarily ought to prevail between the friendly people or forces of one country and another.

Let me recur to what I think is elemental in the question raised by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. In substance, it is that our friends in Russia were in a struggle against the Bolsheviki government; that we, joining with our Russian friends, originally had a right to go there, were justified both in international law and in morals; and having gone there properly we may properly stay there until such time as another government is established satisfactory to us or until we are willing to withdraw.

I have not stated, and I wish particularly the Senator to keep this in mind, that we properly had ever gone, according to our own practices and creed, to northern Russia. I said, as the transcript will show, that in the exigencies of war we ought liberally to judge the conduct of our own country in sending its forces there in a time of emergency. The submarine warfare referred to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and myself as well, with other urgent demands, justified, it is thought, the allies and ourselves in sending our forces to that point.

But, Mr. President, what authority do we have to send our forces into the territory or waters of any independent nation unless we have recognized a government there and have joined with that government as our ally, and gone there by their consent? If the Germans, through the connivance of part of the Russian people, menaced us there, we ought to have declared war by Congress. The President had no power to invade Russia. It will not be claimed, I think, by any Senator that our friends in northern Russia had there set up a government; that they had a capital, an army, a navy, a department of government answering to an executive or legislative body; that all the political organs of a government were existent and that we recognize our friends in northern Russia as a government. If we had done so, then we properly could have joined with the government of the friendly nation that we have recognized there and gone upon their soil.

That is why we were right in sending troops into Siberia. The Czecho-Slovaks have organized a separate government; they with their fellow countrymen in Hungary and Bohemia, in more westerly Europe, have joined with the captives taken in war, returning to their original hope of self-government and have set up one. They have a capital. They seized the Siberian Railway. They had their communication with Hungarians and Slovaks in more western Europe. They not only had a capital, but they had an army. They established a legislative department. They had all the vital organs of an independent nation. The great Bohemian representatives were on our shore, and sojourning in our city was Dr. Masaryk, the great moving mind of this combination. It was in his care and under his protection that these formalities, if they be called formalities, were attended to, the details of erecting an independent empire out of the people in the territories concerned.

When this was done we recognized that far-distant point of Siberia as an independent government. They have their friendly representatives in this Government. We hesitated because of Japan's interest in the Orient, but finally with her consent we sent our forces to the help of that independent country.

They had seized the Siberian Railway. They had kept the Bolsheviki government from entering this part of Asia. They had stopped the shipment of supplies and military forces. Not only that, they had gone further. They had equipped troops, they had fought battles, they had won victories, they had established their right to exist and be recognized among the independent nations of the earth.

When we sent our troops into Siberia we sent them there with the consent of the new government. They were our allies. We violated none of the proprieties or laws existing between nations. We observed the rules of diplomacy. We followed the international law that governs between nation and nation.

In northern Russia, Mr. President, we observed none of these necessary incidents. Instead of setting up an independent goverment our friends only expressed their detestation and horror at the atrocities of the Bolsheviki government. With those expressions we sympathize. They did not or could not set up an independent government. When our forces went into northern Russia they went upon the soil of a country that was neither our ally nor our enemy. The President sent our military forces upon the soil of a country against which Congress had never declared war. The President had not even asked Congress to declare war. He assumed a power not belonging to the Executive.

Why did Germany say, in justifying her course in Belgium, that it was because the Belgians were friends of the French people and they could no longer trust them? I believe the claim was false, but it was urged. We know the Bolshevist government was friends to Germany, and without declaring war we invaded Russia for that help or sympathy given our enemy, the same ground on which Germany tried to justify her invasion of Belgium.

Why are we now in northern Russia? It is because the Bolshevists are the friends of Germany and we can no longer trust them. That is the argument. Even our country must be consistent in such instances and it must be right. I do not subscribe, save in war, to the Decatur doctrine, that I am with "my country, right or wrong." I am, without question, with her when she is at war, but in time of peace I will not follow public authority if I think it wrong. Since the armistice we have no reason to be there, even if we admit it before the armistice. I will endeavor to correct the errors of my country before it advances far in that course. So, Mr. President, if it is an argument for the German in Belgium it is an argument even for the hated Bolshevists in northern Russia to say that we have reduced our international conduct to the low level of the brute force of the Hun. We have ignored our own creed.

There is no escaping the verdict of history. We may declaim for months; we may issue proclamations by the score; communiques may come from the peace conference; stately phrases may emanate from the absent Executive; but history, with unerring verdict and with impartial pen, will write the record for the future years.

If we remain in Russia under present conditions, without a new government being set up there, with all the characteristics that belong to civil government, and we do not recognize such a government, and enter or remain there by its consent, we have no business in northern Russia under the rule of international right. We can justify it only by brute force; by the law of necessity, that admits there is no other law, we can invoke in our defense. So there is a distinction ever to be kept in mind.

I do not say, save by the law of necessity, that we are rightfully or ever were rightfully in northern Russia. We went there with our allies by the exigencies of war for the purpose of preventing the Bolshevist government from either submitting or voluntarily consenting to the establishment of a submarine base in the neighborhood of Archangel and to protect our allies' military supplies. The Germans would have seized such supplies; it would have been a military loss. So the forces were dispatched there to protect them. Those are two good military reasons, but they savor too much of the Hun.

If we declare war against the Bolshevist government it can be done only by Congress. Let a resolution be introduced here; let it pass both bodies upon a hearing; and if Congress declares a state of war existing, then it is the act of the established authorities of this country. There is no power in the Executive to declare war. It is an act of Executive usurpation for him to send troops into northern Russia. It was as complete an assumption of dictatorial power as that of Napoleon when he was first consul and seized the reins of authority. It must, therefore, I say to the Senator, be kept in mind that, before we can lawfully be upon Russian soil or in Russian waters, we must have recognized the Government there, declared war by an act of Congress, and have joined with them to fight our enemies on their own soil. That we have not done; it will not be pretended that he have done so.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator states that there was no government there; but the Senator will admit that there was an enemy there, and that the enemy was assisting our enemy.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is precisely what Germany said as to Belgium; that the Belgians would not resist French movements, French influence, and because of that she was justified in putting the iron heel upon that country and destroying it. I detest such a doctrine. I deny the German claim. I abhor the German course in Belgium.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator claim that the conditions existing between Germany and Belgium furnish a parallel case with those existing between our allies and ourselves and Lenine and Trotzky?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not a parallel case in fact and cruelty, but a parallel case in principle. The atrocity or mere degree of evils does not change the application of the basic principles, and the fact that the German was greater and more comprehensive in his cruelty and in his power than the Bolshevist in northern Russia in treating his own domestic enemies does not change the application of the principle in the least.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Will the Senator permit me to call attention to a paragraph in the Chicago Daily Tribune of February 11 with reference to the subject matter to which I called attention a few moments ago in the colloquy with the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will.

Mr. BORAH. This article is by Frazier Hunt, the correspondent of the Chicago Daily Tribune, who is now or has been for weeks in Russia, and who is writing uncensored articles to the Chicago Tribune. An uncensored article in these days is worth listening to.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator will yield for an instant, permit me to say that Mr. Frazier Hunt was sent to this particular territory at Archangel by the Chicago Tribune for the purpose of making investigations concerning our situation there and concerning what was transpiring with regard to the Russians and ourselves. The first of his articles appearing yesterday I read and put in the RECORD. The second, I think, is the one that is now in the hands of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I read a paragraph or two from this article, as follows:

> The things expected of the expedition failed. It was believed that great masses of Russian volunteers would flock to the colors. Instead, the few who responded to the call came to be clothed and rationed.
> CONSTANT CAUSE OF TROUBLE.
> The Russian troops in north Russia have been constantly in hot water. They have refused to go to the front and fight. They have been hotbeds of the spirit of unrest. A few weeks ago a revolt occurred in one unit which was ordered to go to the front, and was not settled until a number of the leaders were taken out and executed.
>
> The local peasant volunteers will fight to regain their own villages; but that is all.
>
> The whole of the anti-Bolshevik army system in north Russia is being told about how the great all-Russian armies will kick down the Moscow government if only given a chance.
>
> In the Archangel district, under the allied domination, there is 300,000 population, but only a couple of thousand actual fighting troops can be recruited.
> WHERE THE FAULT LIES.
> Deeper than anything else has been the failure of the foreign troops and the public to understand the real spirit of political unrest that has spread over Russia. Here are 180,000,000 persons who have been crushed for generations by the iron heel of a stupid and cruel autocracy. Suddenly this heel is lifted and every restraint, every old bond that has held them, is broken. They have done the natural thing, which has been to swing to the other extreme.
> This other end has been a spirit of dangerous radicalism which expressed itself in bolshevism.

That is all with reference to the particular point that I had in mind when I called attention a few moments ago to the fact that the allied troops were not being supported by the anti-Bolshevik people of Russia.

Mr. SHERMAN. That seems, I regret, to be such information as comes to us from various parts of the district affected.

There is another difficulty in addition to the one that the Senator from Idaho properly mentions, and which I have been endeavoring to urge upon the Senate. It is that with from 180,000,000 to 200,000,000 people in Russia, if we persist in obtruding ourselves with the allies and our Army and Navy into their waters and country, we shall finally evolve in Russia a disturbing or dangerous condition. It is already dangerous. The infamous cult that calls itself a government there is a menace to the whole civilized world. I have no defense or apology or anything but words of reprobation for them; but that is not the question before this Senate.

If we persist, I repeat, in obtruding ourselves into Russia without the invitation or consent of some established government there, we shall do what all the rest of Europe did with the French in the early days of their revolution. Far removed, as we are, from that troublous period, it is difficult now to understand why Napoleon and his legions fought all Europe so long before he was overwhelmed. The greater part of France, beginning in 1788 or 1789, up to the days when Napoleon found himself emperor, was in a state of continual civil commotion. Practically the rebellious Frenchmen organized by Napoleon fought all Europe during those years, because Napoleon declared and they believed other European nations sought to thrust upon them a government dictated from outside France. Their answer was Napoleon. They won some of the greatest victories known, save of the present war. That was because of the avowed purpose of the rest of Europe to invade France, and to impose upon her a form of government not framed or consented to by the French people. Let us be forewarned and forearmed here, that we do not finally mold the Russian people into a homogeneous nation, armed against all Europe and ourselves.

Ever on their western border lingers the wreck of the central empires; ever there remains in Europe the Hun and his spirit to join with Russia if she shall find her power and organizes it under some great military leader. Some time an Alexander I; some time a Metternich; some time a Talleyrand; some time another captain of artillery will appear, and some great military forces will be molded in Russia that will really become, with the assistance of the Germans, a menace to all Europe, ourselves on this side of the ocean included.

I believe it is not only correct in principle and as a matter of right, but that it is acting with the highest degree of prudence to withdraw our forces from Russia and let the Russians establish the kind of government they will. Whether we shall recognize it and establish diplomatic relations is not now the question.

It is said that that government is extremely obnoxious and that their creed is one of destruction and one of systematic crusade against every government in the world. That is so. I detest such an atrocious criminal system; but to a former monarchist, to a head that used to wear a diadem, it may be thought that republican principles of free government are a menace to all the monarchies of the world. So they are regarded; so some of the governments that opposed Napolean regarded it. It was the death knell of despotism. The kings knew that their thrones were upon unstable foundations if he prevailed. Whether his reasons were good or bad, we need not stop to inquire, but we must avoid that danger. The Russian people must not be misled. It is an ever-present menace to be dealt with, and to be dealt with with prudence and discretion.

Mr. President, if we are to inquire into the virtues or the vices of governments, I have read the Mexican constitution from which I quoted a while ago some obnoxious features, and I now read one from the Russian Bolshevist constitution.

DIVISION 1.

ARTICLE 1. All property rights in the land, treasures of the earth, waters, forests, and fundamental natural resources within the boundaries of the Russian Federated Soviet Republic are abolished.

ART. 2. The land passes over to the use of the entire laboring population without any compensation, open or secret, to the former owners.

ART. 3. The right to use the land belongs to those who till it by their own labor, with the exception of special cases covered by this decree.

* * * * * * *

ART. 5. The subsurface deposits, the forests, waters, and fundamental natural resources are at the disposition (according to their character) of the county, provincial, regional, and federal soviet powers, and are under the control of the latter. The method of disposition and utilization of the subsurface deposits, waters, and fundamental natural resources will be dealt with by a special decree.

Another portion of this document relating to credits and personal property repudiates the entire national debt of Russia under all former governments. There could not be a more wholesale destruction of private property. A section, which I will not stop to read, treats all personal property, live stock, and values of a personal character in the same way; in substance, it confiscates them; takes them from the hands of the present owners, as the land is taken from the present owners. No one can be surprised that famine resulted. The constitution confiscates and distributes, but holds out no incentive to production.

This, in substance, is no worse a condition than is found in Mexico. It has been operated in Mexico by a form of license that that Government now permits, under which mining and oil rights are regulated. No one can operate or use his own property under such a plan. In practice it became confiscation. Why not declare war on Mexico? Why not make practical war on Mexico for the same thing? Our Executive and Great Britain both notified Carranza to modify his practices that interfered with fuel oil. Their brutalities in some instances are equal to those of the Bolshevists, and the confiscation is practically the same. Carranza suspended his plan of operating the Mexican constitution on such notices. There is, therefore, no reason why we should make war on a country because we do not agree with her form of constitution or with her methods of administering it or with the conduct of civil government in their domestic affairs.

I have heard as another argument why we should remain in Russia—and heard it quite potently advanced in some editorials and by certain gentlemen in conversation—that German influence is paramount in northern Russia and that it will be extremely dangerous if we remove our forces from Russia, because that part of the country will immediately fall under the influence of Germany; that all the resources and the population will be used against us in building up a hostile influence there. If that is to be our creed in the peace conference, then we must bar Germany from all parts of the earth. I candidly confess I wish she were. I am perfectly willing, for my part, that she stay out of all the rest of the world except where it suits us; but I am not willing to announce that doctrine as a matter of international law or of military occupation. Whatever we may think or wish, there is no way of doing so. That is a matter to be worked out by moral influences and not by military force.

The whole peace congress and the peace league have now reached a condition where there is no longer left anything but a mixture of moral suasion and economic pressure. It abrogates vital articles of our Constitution. It takes from Congress the power to declare war and raise and support armies. Those powers pass to Europe. We supposed here when the President started on his distinguished services abroad that we would voluntarily contribute to an international police force, that we would be concerned, if we willed it, in every difficulty in Europe, and that, if a disturbance broke out there, domestic or foreign, we would land our forces to quell the insurrection. Where is it to-day? It is vested in nations in Europe. Our sovereignty in honor and national integrity leaves us the accident of foreign ambitions.

There is now nothing in it, I repeat, Mr. President, but moral suasion and economic pressure, save our embarrassing entanglements and loss of independence. Close our ports, deny their rights to trade with us, boycott their merchandise, close their exchanges for the transfer of credits and money, bar them from the market—that is economic pressure. Moral suasion! Send them what George Creel says he sent the Hun. In a copy of a magazine extant and found upon the news stands our beloved friend Creel tells us it was a mistake about the military forces of the allies and ourselves conquering Germany; that it was his own fountain pen and ever-present typewriter that did it. Mr. Creel sent propaganda of the most devastating character to the Germans. He dropped it, or was instrumental in having it dropped, from aircraft; he shot it out of guns; he threw it from the trenches; he sent it by spies, afoot and on horseback, and in every way on the earth, through the air, and on and under the water he transmitted moral suasion to the Hun, until finally the morale of the Hun was so sapped by George Creel that he could not stand it any longer, and between surrender and the presence of the moral suasion of Creel he quit!

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRANCE. I should like to ask the Senator if he would consider that to be a cruel and inhuman form of warfare?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do. I consider it an inhuman form of warfare, for the same reason that I consider the reading of his article, "Around the Clock with Baker," something that exceeded all human punishment heretofore devised. To anybody with any sensitiveness or with any feeling of fitness or standards about the literary character of anything, his article was of the type prohibited by the Constitution as being "unusual and cruel punishment" if a person were compelled to read it in Congress or solitary confinement. Even the German, inured to brutality and trained butcher as he was, dropped his poison gas and gun and cried "Kamerad" to escape the torture.

He tells us, in substance, that he defeated the Hun by his literary assaults. I have not the article here, but I intend at some time—possibly not at this session, as the time is short—to take up, analyze, and present to this Chamber what I think is the most remarkable article of any of the various ones appearing in the press, sensational or otherwise, in the lifetime of our country.

The German influence, however, in northern Russia may be friendly to the Bolshevists. Concede it. I think it is. Why, I do not know. I know of no court before which we can cite nations to prove mercenary motives, but I think that Mr. Trotzky and his outfit were bought by good German gold. There are a number of authentic documents, the genuineness of which is not disputed up to this time, to show that Germany's crusade in Russia was backed up by her money. Trotzky was in San Francisco when he lived in this country and was actively engaged in trying to bolshevise the United States. If his trail be gone over from beginning to end, it will be found that he is as agile a hunter for the coin of the realm as any sordid grafter in the world. Wherever Trotzky goes or stops you may there expect to find somebody's funds.

It is said that he sent an emissary or a representative to this country, who abode for a time in New York, and who sought to obtain recognition for the Bolsheviki government. He was met by a sturdy refusal. That is a matter for this country to determine through its constituted authorities. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to acquiesce in what the authorities did around the executive department in that instance and likely to approve it. Possibly our distinguished fellow citizen from Chicago, Raymond Robins, came here armed as minister plenipotentiary from the Bolsheviki government to secure recognition. That, too, was a matter of discretion. I understand that our President did not see him. Whether he was forewarned of his mission and desired to avoid what would be an embarrassing scene, or whether he was otherwise engaged, history saith not. At any rate, I am sure that the Senator from California is well within the truth when he says that Mr. Robins did not see the President.

Let it be granted that he was here for the purpose of opening friendly relations between the Bolshevist government and this country, the fact remains that we have not recognized the Bolshevist government, nor have we recognized any other government in northern Russia, or any part of Russia outside of Siberia. There we have done so; there we have sent some of our forces; and there can be no criticism by the future impartial historian of our course in that respect. The mere fact that the Russian may be disposed to be friendly to the Germans could not of itself be a reason for us to send our forces into northern Russia and undertake to subjugate the Bolshevist government. Much less could we be at war there since the armistice. When the Bolshevist government undertakes to interfere with our lawful rights, then I believe in fighting, but our lawful rights no longer lie in Russia. We can not justify ourselves longer to remain there.

I understand, through some press reports at least coming by way of London, that the English are willing to withdraw their forces. It is a peculiar comment upon our domestic situation that most of the accurate information we have of our foreign relations must come by way of cable from the capital of Great Britain. If I am to learn anything that is authentic, I wait until Mr. Balfour speaks; I wait until a cable has been sent to us from London. I do not seek information in the Capital of our country, much as I love it; I do not ask for information from those in authority in the executive department, much as they have, for I know I would not get it. I read the cablegrams that come from England in order to inform myself what my country is doing in Europe. It is possible that the Committee on Foreign Relations are treated with greater confidence; I hope they are; they deserve it; they are men eminent in their professions and occupations and entirely worthy of any confidence that may be reposed in them by the Executive; but unless conditions have changed since the last cloakroom gossip that I heard, they themselves have no advance information that would lead them seriously to question much of what the Senator from California has said or what I will say or have said on the floor of this Chamber.

I now, in order to show the condition in which we find ourselves, shall refer to the $100,000,000 appropriation to feed starving Europe, which passed this body—a most gracious act. Of course we have money to throw away. With about $18,000,000,000 of bonded indebtedness, with $18,000,000,000 or $20,000,000,000 of appropriations, and how much more in the future we know not, we go blithely along. Pay day is yet many, many years away apparently. We are thinking about the limit of the first 3½ per cent loan that falls due under an option in 1932, and by that time many things may happen, so a little matter of $100,000,000 was a mere bagatelle, and we passed it almost without a question. Some few niggardly souls, it is true, objected to this $100,000,000 appropriation and thought it was not necessary, thereby earning the hearty contempt of many distinguished persons. The credit has been established, and some of it no doubt by this time has been cabled to various points for relief. We are engaged in distributing food, some of it possibly in Russia, some in Belgium, some in part of the Polish Provinces, Lithuania, the Balkan countries, and at times it seems some in the territory that the Germans have under occupation. Some of our money is going in there out of this $100,000,000, I believe.

Here is a cablegram dated at Warsaw, Poland, February 11. It shows how thankful the Hun is. It leads me to entertain a lurking suspicion that if the Hun had ample supplies of food, if he had stores of sausage and many gallons of beer, if he had an abundance of arms hidden away, he would again be the Hun as in 1914. Hindenburg is not dead. He is not even sleeping. The Kaiser is not dead, although sundry efforts to work up sympathy for him are proved by cablegrams from Holland almost every day. He is described as being tottering in form, gray haired, starting at every sound. Every time he sees anybody coming he anticipates trouble. For him, it is said, the ghost walks continually day and night, and that he has been punished beyond all human deserts. Let it be so, but he has six uninjured sons, every one of them a lusty representative of the House of Hohenzollern. Not one of them has abdicated; not one of them has been wounded; not one of them has suffered any privations during the war. They traveled in state. They protected their precious persons in steel-clad limousines all the time when they were upon the scene of battle.

When the storehouses of Potsdam, after the Kaiser took leg bail, were distributed there were found vast stores of sausages and preserved meats and canned foods and pickles and cereals and breads and all forms of nourishment dear to the Hun heart; and porter—to continue the inventory that I had, and examined with great pleasure—and wines and sauerkraut galore. They were furnished for a siege; so these six uninjured sons are thrifty and forehanded. Hindenburg lives. He has 600,000 men now under arms. The delegates at the peace conference in Paris have not disarmed the German people or the German Army. They are calling for volunteers. Notices are posted in Berlin and in Frankfort for volunteers for the Hindenburg army, ostensibly to protect the eastern borders of Germany. It does not make any difference why an army is mustered into the field. We know very well if the German has an army what he will do with it. It is no wonder that at the peace conference already it is anticipated that when the treaty shall be prepared in its tentative form and submitted to the German he proposes again to reenact the saber rattling as of old; that he intends to fight because its terms do not suit him; and still we, a race of good Samaritans, have been sending food to these gentlemen. Sometime we will regret the armistice as a substitute for unconditional surrender when the German faced at last some of the hardships of war in his own country.

When will we ever learn anything? It seems that we ought to have had enough experience by this time to have learned the character of the nation with which we have been dealing. Go up in northern Russia and fight? What good would it do? Our continued presence there, I fear under present conditions, only increases the danger of welding the Russian people into a solid mass, of turning their sympathies toward Germany—Germany, with yet her resources for infinite trouble in her hands.

Now, in connection with this $100,000,000, this cablegram says:

> The Germans gave another exhibition of high-handedness last Thursday by refusing for a second time the passage of allied officers into Lithuanian districts held by them. This time the officers were American, and though acting in behalf of that very food commission which elsewhere is provisioning Germany, and though their object was to discover the needs of the population in the district around Grodno, they were none the less stopped by German sentries.
>
> They were conducted before a junior German officer in the village of Baciuty, and Lieut. Col. Grove, the senior of the two American officers, with great self-restraint and courtesy, insisted on his right of passage, and explained anew the nature of his mission. The German officer telephoned to Bialystok and gave Col. Grove's message.
>
> An answer came from Capt. von Schroder, of the Hussaren Regiment in Bialystok, who, speaking in behalf of the German command, declared all he had to say was that the American officers were to go back to Poland. When asked for his reason, he blankly refused to give any. This is the second time allied missions have been treated with similar insolence. If the Spa council does not rapidly punish these impertinences, such impressions as exists in these parts of the allies having won the war will quite fade away.
> Even if prestige is not considered of any importance, there is ample reason for action because of the manner in which the Germans are withdrawing large quantities of supplies into east Prussia from Lithuania, thus evading the armistice. It is undoubtedly in order that their sleight of hand should remain unrevealed that they have prevented the American and British officers from penetrating among them on two occasions.

These people, it is said, have a predominant influence in northern Russia. They will continue to have that influence in parts of southern Russia so long as they are able to reach and deceive the people concerned. We can not by war break up or destroy that influence. If we undertake to do that, we must renew the war on Germany and include in that the whole Bolshevist government. I do not anticipate that that is even contemplated at this time.

Governments, therefore, in a country must be set up by the people concerned. It is a domestic problem. It is not one in which we can impose our will upon any of the peoples of the world, however barbaric or cruel they are. Therefore, Mr. President, I think the resolution of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] ought to be adopted. I believe our forces ought to be withdrawn from northern Russia. Either that or we ought to recognize and support an opposition government there and send a force strong enough to destroy bolshevism and support a fit Russian substitute. I have no sympathy whatever with any of those who are opposed to our forces there. I repeat this: I have the utmost abhorrence of bolshevism and its creed anywhere in the world, but that does not blind me to the fact that we are in northern Russia with our forces utterly without right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the yeas are 33 and the nays are 33. The Chair votes "yea," and the motion is laid on the table.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of a bill (H. R. 13462) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 3, line 4, to strike out "$61,440" and insert "$91,160."

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire of the chairman if he has made any explanation of that item. If he has done so I shall not ask him to explain it again.

Mr. FLETCHER. The explanation is that the Chief of Engineers stated that $61,440 would not complete the improvement and that the required amount would be $91,160.

Mr. KENYON. Does that complete the improvement?

Mr. FLETCHER. That completes the improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, to strike out "$35,000" and insert "$52,500."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. I have made some little examination of the records in this case, and I do not think the improvement itself warrants any expenditure. The tonnage is wholly inadequate to warrant an appropriation for this project. It occurs to me that the proper motion would be to strike out the item entirely, but that motion perhaps would not be in order at the present time. I sincerely hope that the Senate will not agree to this amendment.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, after the words "in all," to strike out "$96,440" and insert "$145,160."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 2, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," and in line 11, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Duck Island, Branford, New Haven, Milford, Bridgeport, Southport, Norwalk, Five Mile River, Stamford and Greenwich Harbors, Westport, Harbor and Saugatuck River, breakwaters at New Haven, and Housatonic River, Conn.: For maintenance, $23,000; for improvement of Bridgeport Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 898, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $111,300; for improvemtnt of Norwalk Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1143, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $88,000: Provided, That no part of the latter amount shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall have received satisfactory assurances that local interests will construct such public wharfage facilities as, in his opinion, are required in the interest of commerce; for improvement of Stamford Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 1130, Sixty-third Congress, second session, $183,000: Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any lands required for the purpose of this improvement: Provided further, That no part of the latter amount shall be expended until the Secretary of War shall have received satisfactory assurances that local interests will construct a suitable public wharf; for improvement of Greenwich Harbor in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 289, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $35,000; in all, $440,300.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why this amendment has been submitted. The House, evidently after investigation, considered that the sum of $183,000 was sufficient for the completion of the project. The Senate committee evidently deemed it insufficient, and gives the same amount merely for improvements. The House must have had ample evidence before it to justify the conclusion which finds expression in the appropriation which they recommended.

Mr. FLETCHER. The reason for the amendment is that in inserting the items the House adopted the estimate as originally made and as shown by the original document. We are not certain that that will enable the engineers to complete the project, and in order not to mislead at all we recommend to change the word "completing" to the word "for," so that if it should not be completed within that figure the improvement could be made so far as it will go. We would not do that except in cases where the engineers tell us that beyond question money can be advantageously spent, whether it completes the project or leaves some of it yet to be attended to later on.

As I said, the House simply took the original estimate. It is possible it will require some further appropriation to complete the project. We are not certain about that. At any rate we feel sure that $183,000 will not complete it, and therefore we have asked to change the word "completing" to the word "for," so we will be in good faith with Congress and at the same time carry out the work on the project as far as possible. We have done the same thing as to the item in line 11, and for the same reason.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator if he deems it a wise policy for the Government of the United States to enter upon these projects without acquiring the land that may be necessary for the consummation of the improvement, because I find in a part of the item these words:

Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any land required for the purpose of this improvement.

It is obvious that the United States must acquire land for the purposes of this improvement. My recollection is that the record shows some expenditure has already been made, apparently without having made provision to acquire the needed land.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator will see that we do not go on with the work until the lands are provided and without expense to the Government.

Mr. KING. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if it would not be a wiser policy for the Government, if the project is deemed necessary, to acquire the land before authorizing this expenditure?

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the project need not wait until the land is acquired. They are required to do that, but they can go on with the work. That is a matter of detail which will be taken care of by the time they get ready to call for bids and make arrangements for letting contracts for doing the work, as they may see fit. At any rate, there is no expense on the part of the Government in acquiring the land.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, this project is not new. My recollection is that considerable money has been expended upon the project. I remember reading in one of the reports referring to this project that the entire tonnage was only about 200,000 per annum, and that it consists of a little coal and a little lumber hauled upon barges. If it is a new project, the stream is being utilized already for commerce. If it is not a new project, then the Government has been proceeding without having acquired the land, a very dangerous and a very unwise policy.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not think the Government is taking any chances on that. The Senator is right in saying that it is not a new project. This is for the purpose of continuing the improvement.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to say, if the Senator will permit me, that the engineers' report shows, on page 225, that the commerce of the Stamford Harbor for 1917 was 315,159 short tons, valued at $19,258,529. So it is a pretty considerable harbor with a very valuable commerce. This is a modification, I would say, of an existing project.

Mr. KING. I have before me the report of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors dated June 30, 1914, in which it is stated that the commerce in recent years has ranged from 165,000 to 175,000 tons in the east branch and from 67,000 to 95,000 tons in the west branch, making a total of from 260,000 to 300,000 tons, having a total value of about $12,000,000 to $15,000,000.

Further on the report says that "coal is the principal item of commerce, and the larger coal barges," and so forth. It goes on to describe them, and says they are utilized for carrying coal. So evidently that is an old project, upon which the Government entered without having acquired the necessary land.

Mr. RANSDELL. Not at all. It is an old project, of which the Government is going to make a modification. If you will let me have that report I will find it and show it to you. I have not the project before me.

Mr. KING. It will be necessary to acquire additional land in order that the project may be carried out according to the terms contemplated in the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is the modification that we recommend. It will be necessary to get further land.

Mr. FLETCHER. That was all made clear in the report.

Mr. RANSDELL. The report shows that the Chief of Engineers recommends:

After due consideration of the above report, I concur with the views of the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and therefore report that further improvement by the United States of Stamford Harbor, Conn., is deemed advisable to the extent of providing an entrance channel 12 feet deep at mean low water and 200 feet wide, channel in the east branch 12 feet deep at mean low water and from 85 to 125 feet wide, and a channel in the west branch 9 feet deep at mean low water and 100 feet wide, following the new alignment, with a basin at the head of the same depth and 200 feet wide, approximately as shown on the accompanying map. Total cost, $183,000 for first construction and $5,000 annually for maintenance, provided that no expense shall be incurred by the United States for acquiring any land required for the purpose of this improvement.

It is an old project, as stated. It has been in existence for many years; but the new project proposes to extend it and enlarge it, and in the enlargement and extension it will be necessary to acquire some additional lands, and the engineers recommend that those additional lands be not acquired by the Government. In other words, the local people must furnish the lands or else the money will not be expended by the National Government.

I will state to the Senator that that frequently is done, and the local community is sufficiently interested to contribute in someway a dumping ground. Frequently you have to do a great deal of dredging. It is necessary to have ground on which to place the dredged material. If you have not got that ground, you have to haul the material out to sea at a very considerable expense, and the very point of furnishing a dumping ground for the dredged material is often a material item. I imagine it is something of that kind here.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would also draw the attention of the Senator to the statement of the commerce. It is a very considerable harbor. The original project of Stamford Harbor was adopted away back in 1886, and then the present project was adopted in 1892. This is now a recommendation for a modification of the project so as to give greater depth and width of channel.

The commerce is shown by the report. In 1913, for instance, the tonnage was 332,576 short tons, value $15,984,034; in 1915, 356,768 short tons, value $17,843,810; in 1916, 401,359 short tons, value $22,708,426; and in 1917, 315,159 short tons, valued at $19,258,529. That is a pretty considerable commerce and seems to be a very worthy project. I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 3, before the word "improvement," to strike out "completing" and insert "for," so as to make the clause read:

Newark Bay, N. J.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 2110, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $105,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 16, to insert:

Hackensack River, N. J.: For improvement in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 728, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, $88,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, some of us would like to get a little information about this item. I notice House Document No. 728, to which reference is made in the bill. I am not quite clear whether there are two distinct propositions as to this river or not. On page 2 of the report is the following:

This stretch of the river is about 4½ miles long, and a draft of about 2 feet at mean low water can now be carried to New Milford. The improvement desired for local interests is a channel 12 feet deep and 50 feet wide. The district engineer states that the commerce is confined to vessels of very light draft, and the benefits from an improvement would be limited to pleasure boats and the shipment of coal and building materials. He believes that the desired improvement would not result in adequate benefits, and therefore expresses the opinion that it is not advisable for the United States to undertake the improvement of this part of the river at the present time. The division engineer concurs in this view.

The query that arises in my mind is whether this is the proposition for which we are appropriating.

Again, on page 4 of the report of the Board of Engineers——

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state to the Senator that paragraph 3, to which he refers, is not the project intended to be covered by this bill.

Mr. KENYON. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. FLETCHER (reading)—

This stretch of river is 1 mile long and connects the 20-foot channel in Newark Bay with deep water in the Hackensack River above the Central Railroad bridge.

Mr. KENYON. That is the part that is agreed to—paragraph 4, on page 2.

Mr. FLETCHER. Paragraph 4, on page 2, and paragraph 7, on page 3.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KENYON. If the Senator will wait for just a moment, I will yield.

This is for the deepening of a channel to 16 feet, with a width of 300 feet, at an estimated cost of $88,341.

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. I was trying to get fixed just what this improvement is. Is this correct? It is the deepening of a channel for 1 mile to 16 feet, with a width of 300 feet, at an estimated cost of $88,341. Is that what this proposition is?

Mr. FLETCHER. The project is the further improvement by the United States at Hackensack River, New Jersey, with a view of obtaining a depth of 16 feet up to the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey bridge. It is stated in the report that—

The improvement is deemed advisable to the extent of providing a channel 16 feet deep at mean low water and 300 feet wide from the Passaic River Channel to deep water above the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey bridge, as shown on accompanying map.

That is the project that is covered by this item.

Mr. KENYON. What is the pressing necessity of the project? Perhaps the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is familiar with it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from New Jersey is more familiar with the details, and I shall be glad to have him explain the matter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, as I understand, at the present time there is a bar, or hump, as they call it, near the Central Railroad bridge along this 1-mile stretch, which connects the 20-foot channel in Newark Bay. On the inside of that channel along the Hackensack River there are a large number of industries, including the Federal Shipbuilding Co., the Seaboard By-Products Co., and several others that have considerable traffic along this channel. The report of the engineers states that—

The deepening of this part of the channel to 16 feet is now desired in order to permit barges and other vessels carrying coal, ore, and lumber to discharge their cargoes at their docks above the bridge without lightering. Estimates are submitted by the district engineer for channels 16 feet deep and 200, 300, 400, and 500 feet wide. He states that 696,391 short tons of commerce, valued at $3,731,867, were carried over the river during 1916 in vessels drawing up to about 15 feet, and that about 72 per cent of this originated in the stretch directly affected by the proposed improvement. He believes that the demands of existing commerce justify the deepening of this part of the channel to 16 feet, with a width of 300 feet, at an estimated cost of $88,341, with $5,019 annually for maintenance. The division engineer concurs in this opinion.

6. These reports have been referred, as required by law, to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, and attention is invited to its report herewith, dated September 25, 1917, concurring in the views of the district engineer and the division engineer.

As I understand, this matter was considered when the bill was pending in the House, but it was not included. Mr. Sweet, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, has said that that was a mistake; that this was a project which was extremely necessary, and which should have been included in the bill. The Committee on Commerce, after hearing that and considering the matter, decided to insert the item in the bill, and they approved the amendment. I wish to read to the Senate a letter from the Federal Shipbuilding Co. in regard to this improvement. It is as follows:

DEEPENING OF HACKENSACK CHANNEL.

FEDERAL SHIPBUILDING CO.,
Kearny, N. J., January 30, 1919.

Hon. JOSEPH FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR FRELINGHUYSEN: We note with pleasure your deep interest in the above improvement, which we consider absolutely essential for the development of this part of New Jersey. The Federal Shipbuilding Co. are building for the United States Government 30 steamers of 9,600 tons dead-weight capacity, 5 of which have been delivered to date. This plant occupies about 190 acres, and is one of the largest permanent plants in the country and represents a very heavy investment. We also own property on the east side of the Hackensack River opposite our present works, which will be utilized in the near future for the construction of dry docks and repair facilities.

At the present time we employ about 9,000 men, and when the dry docks are completed will have at least 15,000 men on the pay roll.

The present channel of the Hackensack River, which is only 12 feet at low water, has proved a serious handicap in delivering the completed steamers, causing delay as well as great risk, as we have to wait until the very top of high water. Although 16 feet at low water will be of assistance to us, we strongly feel that both the Passaic and Hackensack Rivers ought to have a channel to the open sea at least 30 feet deep, as Newark Bay in this vicinity is the natural place for development, with the view of accommodating the already overcrowded conditions of the maritime industry in the port of New York.

Although we can manage under great difficulty to deliver new vessels built at the yard, the dry-dock business is much different, and any draft of water below 25 feet at mean low tide would cut us out of a large part of our business.

Thanking you for your strong efforts in this matter, I am,
Very sincerely, yours,

ROBERT MCGREGOR,
Vice President and General Manager.

I have several other letters here from industries along there which will be affected by this improvement, which I will read if the Senator from Iowa desires me to do so.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey how this shipbuilding business has been carried on without this improvement—by lighters?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As was stated in the letter, it was with extreme difficulty that the ships which have been launched have been carried across the bar.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no doubt this bill will pass, as all river and harbor bills since I have been here have passed, but I have been so constantly in opposition to them that I propose, as concisely as I can, to give the reasons why I shall not vote for this bill, and then give way to the roll call, as usual.

For the first time in my life I can commend this bill in one respect, when compared with other bills making appropriations from the Public Treasury for local expenditure—it is extremely modest and moderate. There was a time when it occupied unenviable prominence as the "pork-barrel" bill of Congress, but that was before the war. Since then it has become of nominal consequence; indeed, it may be said that any bill whose aggregate appropriations are less than $50,000,000 in these degenerate days is a minor proposition, and Congress perhaps should weigh the value of its time against the amount of the appropriation when its total sum is less than $50,000,000; but in other respects the bill is just as objectionable to me as it ever was.

Of course, the appropriations which it carries are spread pretty generally over the various States of the Union which are fortunate enough to have waterways of sufficient importance to give respectability to an application for money from the National Treasury for their improvement. It has, therefore, the support, collectively, of a majority of the Members of both Houses, obtained by pooling their issues, so to speak, and, upon the old principle of "you pat my back and I will pat yours," the common purpose is accomplished, the money is obtained, the hearts of our constituents are made joyous, and the prospect of a circulation of Federal money in the various sections of the country becomes an assurance.

Mr. President, I venture the prediction that 100 years from now 95 per cent of the projects and schemes which are included in this bill will be as unused to transportation and to vessels as they are now, however great the aggregate appropriations made for their improvement between now and then may be. It is a remarkable fact, but one that can not be too often reiterated, that the more money we spend in improving our rivers the less freight is carried over them. There seems to be a constant relation between the process of improvement and the decadence of transportation, with here and there an exception. Last year the Department of Commerce published an itemized statement, which I have been unable to find even a reference to in these voluminous books upon the subject, which showed a startling decrease in the business upon the waterways of the country between that year and the preceding one. If my recollection serves me right, it was more than 50 per cent.

It would seem that an object lesson of that sort would be sufficiently serious to bring some realizing sense of the futility of these appropriations to those who administer the finances of the country. They may do it at some time, but I am unable at present to perceive any prospect in that direction. It is said that the old ship captain who was trying to navigate a boat which had an 8-inch whistle and a 6-inch boiler, and which stopped every time the whistle blew, finally perceived that he could not make much progress and abandoned his craft. We do not seem to act in the matter of river and harbor appropriations with as much wisdom as his experiences brought to that old seaman. So we are going on with these appropriations, and also authorizing the investigation of new schemes, which in due course will in all probability fasten themselves upon the Public Treasury and become barnacles forever thereafter.

There are many good appropriations in this bill, Mr. President, small, relatively speaking, but unquestionably beneficial. I refer to those appropriations which are made for the maintenance and the improvement of harbors and of rivers which are actually used in transporting the commerce of the country. If they stood alone, I could support them cheerfully; but I presume it is as impossible to secure a substantial appropriation for the harbor of New York or the harbor of Boston or the harbor of New Orleans as a separate measure, standing entirely upon its merits, as it would be to pass a general appropriation bill in these days without amending it by riders carrying sums which upon their own merits would never be considered at all, or at least would not be considered favorably. That—and I do not think I speak extravagantly—is one of the curses of national legislation. No measure of merit and importance can become effective in legislation unless it becomes the vehicle or agency for a large quantity of legislation that is not desirable. I remember when a young man reading about the appearance of omnibus bills in the Senate and the House. They were so unusual as to figure in the scare heads of the press dispatches. They were not the rule but the occasional exception. Now a bill that is not an omnibus bill stands a chance of being considered as no bill at all. They are all omnibus bills, and they are all appropriation bills. Massachusetts and South Carolina, the ancient rivals in our Government, but more recently united in the bonds of antisuffrage sentiment, join hands when the subject of appropriations for local purposes is considered, and so do Colorado and Florida, California and Wisconsin, Texas and Minnesota. You scratch my back and I will scratch yours; and, while the scratching process is agreeable, nobody is hurt except the taxpayers of the country.

Now, Mr. President, is it wise at this time, or wise at any time, to continue this needless, unnecessary, and impracticable scheme of financial expenditure? Does the country get a substantial improvement from it? Are the reasons substantial upon which the legislation is based?

It is said that when the waterways, properly improved and deepened and furnished with landings and the other conveniences essential to transportation, shall have been developed into a system, the returning benefit to all the people will be measureless in its value. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to-day punctured the fallacies of these and other claims; notably, that which depends for its success upon the consideration of the effect of potential competition upon railroad rates. I merely wish to emphasize the unanswerable character of his assertion by directing attention for a moment to the recent history of the Erie Canal.

That canal, constructed about 100 years ago from the city of Buffalo to the Hudson River, virtually gave to New York City a commercial and economic advantage which has made her not only the metropolis of the United States but the great financial center of the world. The value of that canal in days past is beyond controversy. It was so manifest until the days of railroad competition, and the falling off of business after that so great, as to justify the State of New York in expending over one hundred millions on its own account for the deepening and reconstruction, in many parts, of that great canal. The idea was that by deepening and widening the channel, by decreasing the number of its locks, by making it available for larger boats, and by the utilization of improved agencies of power, the glory of the canal could be reestablished; that it would again become indeed a great artery of commerce, and would not only potentially but actually affect the rates of railway transportation.

A writer in the Saturday Evening Post two or three months ago, under the heading "Do the People Want Canals?" directed public attention to the fact that although the canal had been improved, and the improvements completed at a cost of nearly $130,000,000, as I remember, the business, the transportation, was decreasing so rapidly that it virtually amounted to nothing; that instead of inviting and stimulating a great business, the investment was about to prove a completely disastrous one, leaving the people to pay the interest upon its bonded indebtedness contracted for that purpose, to keep up the canal itself out of funds from the public treasury, and practically to write off the whole enterprise to profit and loss. In other words, Mr. President, after the State of New York had made this expenditure of money on its own account—because it did not come here asking the Government of the United States to subscribe money for that purpose, which would have been quite as proper and, I think, more desirable than many of these schemes—the strange fact is developed that the people still prefer to use the ordinary methods of communication for their freight; and that great ditch, costing nearly half as much as the Panama Canal, is not utilized for the purpose for which it was designed.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It might be well for the Senate to understand one phase of the subject which is now under discussion, the New York Barge Canal. The canal was opened for traffic last summer. The State of New York, through its properly constituted authorities, in a spirit of the utmost patriotism, offered the use of the canal to the Federal Government. The Federal Government, acting through the Railway Administration, accepted the offer of the State of New York, and then proceeded to charge railway freight rates for canal traffic, and, of course, there was hardly any traffic upon the canal.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator attribute the falling off of the traffic to that fact? The article to which I refer did not do so. It did not even mention it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but it is exceedingly important that it be mentioned.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I concede that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This action coincided in point of time with the opening of the canal. The citizens of New York therefore have thus far had no opportunity, under the peculiar conditions now surrounding the operation of the canal, to try it out; for the Railway Administration, being in control of all freight consignments, could upon its orders send all freight that it desired to send over the railways, and for whatever it sent over the canal on boats operated under the supervision of the Railway Administration it charged railway rates. The purpose of the people of New York when they dug that canal and spent the $130,000,000 was to make it free of toll. The Federal Government, as soon as it takes it over, imposes a toll in the shape of a freight rate.

If the Senator will permit two or three sentences more in the way of interruption, because it is rather interesting——

Mr. THOMAS. Surely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have not complete confidence in the future myself; but it can not be said that this thing has yet been tried out sufficiently for us to reach a conclusion. So long as the Federal Government has that degree of supervision over traffic through the New York Barge Canal, no citizen of New York or any other State will ever build a barge; and, as my information goes, not one barge—or scarcely any barges, I will say, to be a little safer—has as yet been laid down by private citizens or private corporations. The Government is now engaged in building barges for the New York Barge Canal on its own account, and is going to tow them through the canal, charging the rates which it is now charging, I assume, although it is now in negotiation with the Superintendent of Canals of the State of New York, the superintendent, I assume, taking the ground that the people of the State can never use that canal, can never build barges to operate on the canal, so long as the Government behaves in that way.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield for a question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Colorado permit me to ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state that I am under the impression that the arrangements in regard to the Erie Canal have been modified very recently. The Railroad Administration has been putting boats on the Mississippi River from St. Louis to New Orleans, and I understand that the rates there are somewhat less than the railroad rates; if I mistake not, about 20 per cent less. My impression is that the rates on the New York Barge Canal have been made the same as those on the Mississippi River. I believe it was done very recently, but I am not absolutely certain that it has been done. I know there was considerable complaint, as stated by the Senator from New York. It was said that the rates fixed by the Railroad Administration, exactly the same that the railroads themselves charged, were preventing any traffic from using the barge canal; but it was thought that that was only a temporary arrangement, that it would be corrected, and that a very considerable commerce would pass through the canal.

I should like to ask the Senator if he does not believe that if traffic were permitted, under the ordinary laws of supply and demand, to use that canal freely, as it did in the past prior to the time when you undertook to enlarge it, a very considerable commerce would be carried on it; and would not that commerce, in all probability, be carried very much cheaper than it is carried by rail?

Mr. WADSWORTH. My own opinion is that there will be considerable traffic on the barge canal as soon as the Federal Government takes its hands off, but not while the Federal Government has anything to do with it under the present arrangement. The rates charged on the canal were the same rates that were charged on the railways prior to the recent gigantic advances in railway rates; but even under those circumstances the average shipper preferred to ship by rail rather than pay the old freight rates by water, and no one will build a barge so long as the Federal Government stands there and says, "We are about to build one." Neither the Senator from Louisiana nor myself will ever compete with our own Government.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I know nothing of a personal character about the New York Barge Canal. The facts set forth by this writer in the article to which I referred were so startling in their nature as to surprise me beyond measure. If my recollection is not at fault, the writer also stated that during the construction of the new canal very little activity was observed in the construction of barges to be operated as soon as it was completed. In other words, there seemed to be no preliminary activity evidencing a spirit of enterprise and having reference to the use of the canal subsequent to its completion. I can readily understand—and I think that will be the case—that without the cooperation of the lines of railway with the management of the canal it will not be used to any considerable extent. I have contended, and I do not believe the proposition can be successfully disputed, that until some such coordination is brought about between the railway system and the waterway system of this country as prevailed in Germany prior to the war you may spend all the money that can be wrung from the people upon river and harbor improvements and you will get no return from it.

In Germany the two systems are so correlated and the character of the freight carried by each is so distributed and the connection between the waterways and the railways is so perfect and so thoroughly adapted to the transfer of freight from one system of transportation to the other that the improvement of the streams of the empire was undoubtedly of great benefit and value to its economic interests and conditions.

It goes without saying, however, that if a railroad company has lines extending from the Missouri River to New York and from the Lakes to New Orleans it is not to its interest nor to the public interest to break freight and send part of its business to its destination by water and the remainder by rail. On the other hand, the harmony of interests and consequent sympathetic cooperation between the two necessarily takes to the waterways the heavy freight, which does not require rapid transportation and which is sent in enormous bulk, while the railways take the remainder.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, is the Senator referring to the Rhine?

Mr. THOMAS. Not to the Rhine particularly, but to the entire waterway system of Germany.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course the Senator is well aware that the only way they can keep the freight on the rivers is to compel the railroads to make a higher rate than the river rate.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I am aware of that. I am aware, also, that the Government there, being in control of both systems of transportation, can very easily so operate both as to make each pay. That is what we lack here. That is what we will continue to lack here until we reach the point where public opinion will sustain the view that through some sort of public control the same system of interchange of freights over the country will be inaugurated.

In the meantime we pour money like pouring water into rat holes into these various systems, and hug to our breasts the delusion that we are creating a great waterway system which will soon bless the people with a vastly increased system of transportation at a vastly decreased expense to the consumers of the country.

Mr. President, I have expressed these views heretofore. I shall not now elaborate them. I have not had occasion to change them; I do not suppose I ever will. I may be wrong, but I do not think that a dispassionate consideration of the subject will do otherwise than justify those conclusions. I wish, however, before taking my seat, to direct attention to two or three items in the bill. I will first refer to one on page 7:

> Inland waterway from Delaware River to Chesapeake Bay, Del. and Md.: For improvement to a depth of 12 feet at mean low water, in accordance with the report submitted in House Document No. 196, Sixty-third Congress, first session, $3,000,000: Provided, That of the foregoing amount so much as shall be necessary, not to exceed $2,514.289.70, may be paid for the existing Chesapeake & Delaware Canal and all the property, rights of property, franchises, and appurtenances used or acquired for use in connection therewith or appertaining thereto.

In other words, there is an appropriation for the purchase of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal by the Government of the United States. Mr. President, that project has been knocking at the doors of the Treasury for years, and finally it has secured recognition in the pending river and harbor bill. I do not know that any report has been made from the engineers on this subject. I have only had a chance to superficially examine the three immense volumes of this report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will permit me to inform him, here [exhibiting] are a few of the reports, which I have had bound together.

Mr. THOMAS. I had reference to the printed report, which consists of three volumes. I know the Senator has been one of the proponents of this measure. Let me ask him who owns the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal now?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Chesapeake & Delaware Canal Co.

Mr. THOMAS. Who owns the stock of the company?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have a complete certified list of the stockholders of this company here, which was obtained by me in an investigation of this very question a few years ago. It has been printed as a public document and it can be obtained by the Senator. Here is the original list obtained by me and put in this record under sworn testimony.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a fact that the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal has been practically put out of business by the railroads?

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is not the fact at all, Mr. President. The Chesapeake & Delaware Canal is now paying out of its net earnings 4 per cent on a bonded indebtedness of $2,600,000, and has ever since 1887, for example. Before that it made a great deal of money.

Mr. THOMAS. What have the stockholders received?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Nothing.

Mr. THOMAS. Why does the company want to sell it to the Government?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The company does not want to sell it to the Government, and I have had a great deal of trouble in trying to get the company and Government in accord on this very question. It was not until the last river and harbor bill I obtained the insertion of a power of condemnation by the Government that they came anywhere near reaching an agreement.

Mr. THOMAS. Why does the Government need it?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall be very glad to furnish the Senator, if he will do me the honor to read them, with copies of a number of speeches I have made on it and with a great number of reports made by the engineers to the Government, these reports running from I know as long ago as the early eighties. I can give the Senator the exact date. I have the document here.

Mr. THOMAS. I listened, I think, to two speeches of the Senator, or two arguments——

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may have been unfortunate in not being able——

Mr. THOMAS. And my recollection of the dominant note in the argument was that the acquisition of the canal was desirable that it might form a part of an inland waterway reaching, I think, from New England to somewhere in the cotton States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator is entirely wrong on that point.

Mr. THOMAS. I may be mistaken about it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator is wrong. If the Senator will permit me, on the 8th day of October, 1914, the Senate adopted a resolution directing the Secretary of War to furnish all information and all recommendations of military authorities regarding the acquisition of this canal and its use to the Government. On the 11th day of March, 1915, in response to that resolution, he transmitted to the Senate the report which was made. There is collected in it a great deal from the various reports that had been made on this subject, and all, I may say, to the Senator, favorable to the acquisition of the canal by the Government. This report was signed by the chief of the War College Division, Gen. Macomb; by Gen. Bliss, who was the Acting Chief of Staff; and by the Secretary of War. If the Senator has not seen that report, he will find that it is a very valuable contribution to knowledge on the subject.

Mr. THOMAS. I will be very glad to read it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will be glad to give the Senator a copy.

Mr. THOMAS. If I draw the correct inference—and if I do not the Senator will set me right—the acquisition of the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal seems to be a military proposition, judging from——

Mr. SAULSBURY. No. If the Senator will permit me to make a suggestion, I began the examination of this subject practically from a purely commercial side. I supplied myself with the facts in the case, looked over the ground and found out everything I could about it, and I became very thoroughly convinced that it would be a great work of public utility and of national importance.

Commercially, I may say to the Senator that I think the report of the engineers will show on the matter of traffic through that canal and the prospect of it that it will pay somewhere from 15 to 20 per cent on the cost of its acquisition and enlargement to the people of this country in the saving of freight. It will save, incidentally, lives lost on the outside course. It will shorten the distance between Baltimore and New York 180 miles. It will shorten the water distance between Baltimore and Philadelphia, over the outside route for ships of good size, something like 300 miles.

Mr. THOMAS. Then it must be either in itself an inland waterway which the Government is to acquire or part of a larger contemplated inland waterway.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I say to the Senator, as I have said in some of the addresses which unfortunately have not come under the Senator's observation, my belief is that the acquisition by the Government and the completion of this canal as a deep, sea-level canal will absolutely demonstrate the utility and great advantage of the further extension of a waterway system between the upper Delaware above Philadelphia and New York Bay. The great military value is due to the easy and quick transportation of military supplies and munitions through this system of waterways and as a defense against an attack by foreign forces.

Its great naval value is demonstrated by the ease with which our fleets could be assembled anywhere between Narragansett Bay and the Virginia Capes, which would multiply many times the efficiency of that fleet.

Its commercial value is practically demonstrated by the reports which have been many times made upon it and as to the commercial value of the canal very recently by a report made by the Secretary of Commerce.

All these facts really have been so familiar to me and have been reiterated so many times I feel that I am imposing on the Senate when I make this statement. But the Senator will find that practically every fact has been proven as near as it could be proven that it should be made a deep, sea-level canal and ships taken through it in procession, which will be the case. For example, let me tell the Senator there are 50,000,000 tons of commerce on Delaware Bay annually and 50,000,000 tons on the Chesapeake Bay. A little 14-mile stretch separates that great commerce, and the only boats you can get through are little barges drawing 9 feet of water, with only 23 feet beam and 220 feet length.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator spoke about using it for the passage of our naval vessels. Will the Senator tell me how much that canal will have to be enlarged and deepened in order to permit such a use?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Absolutely, I think I can. It has all been demonstrated in the reports which the engineers have from time to time made.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I rise to a question of order. This is a very important matter, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I must submit to that, but if I had known that was the Senator's purpose I would not have yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gay	Lodge	Pittman
Beckham	Henderson	McKellar	Pollock
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Martin, Ky.	Pomerene
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Ransdell
Fletcher	King	Nugent	Saulsbury
France	Lenroot	Overman	Shafroth
Frelinghuysen	Lewis	Penrose	Sheppard
Smith, Ariz.	Spencer	Wadsworth	Wolcott
Smith, Ga.	Swanson	Warren
Smith, S. C.	Thomas	Weeks
Smoot	Trammell	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, and Mr. STERLING answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-four Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the presence of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the order of the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. SWANSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. MARTIN of Virginia] is detained from the Senate on account of sickness. I will let this announcement stand for the night.

Mr. MYERS, Mr. GORE, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. ROBINSON entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall defer further comment upon the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal section of this bill to another occasion, perhaps to-morrow. I want now to direct the attention of the Senate for a moment to the last amendment of the committee, which reads:

SEC. 7. That the International Joint Commission created by the treaty between the United States and Great Britain relating to boundary waters between the United States and Canada, signed at Washington January 11, 1909, under the provisions of article 9 of said treaty, is requested to investigate what further improvement of the St. Lawrence River between Montreal and Lake Ontario is necessary to make the same navigable for ocean-going vessels, together with the estimated cost thereof, and report to the Government of the Dominion of Canada and to the Congress of the United States, with its recommendations for cooperation by the United States with the Dominion of Canada in the improvement of said river.

So far as the immediate purpose of that section is concerned, it is, perhaps, not particularly objectionable; but every man who has even the most superficial acquaintance with the St. Lawrence River knows that to make it navigable between Montreal and Lake Ontario is to undertake a task the magnitude of which is, perhaps, not more than equaled by any other waterway improvement, plan, or scheme that can be imagined.

Mr. LODGE. Would it not involve the construction of an enormous canal to go around the Lachine Rapids?

Mr. THOMAS. It would involve either an enormous canal or a system of locks which would perhaps cost as much, if not more. If we embark upon that enterprise, which I presume is contemplated because of the report—otherwise it would be useless—the expense that would be entailed upon the Government of the United States, in my judgment, can not now be conceived.

Mr. LODGE. And, then, the improvement when built would be wholly beyond our control.

Mr. THOMAS. That would depend upon which side of the river it was constructed. Of course, this is an international river, which forms part of the boundary between the United States and Canada.

Mr. LODGE. For only a comparatively short distance is it an international boundary.

Mr. THOMAS. It is an international river only for a comparatively short distance. The remainder of it is entirely within the geographical boundaries of the Dominion of Canada.

I imagine, Mr. President, that the cost will, of course, be divided, that it must be divided, between the Canadian Government and our own. The matter of joint control would be essential even if it were constructed upon the American side of the river, but I think, so far as we are concerned—and when I say "we" I mean the people of the United States—it would be far better to double the capacity of the present New York Barge Canal and divert the commerce of the Lakes to the Hudson River, instead of diverting it to a longer river route, but perhaps a shorter route, to Great Britain and to Europe. I am apprehensive that as a consequence of the improvement of this river, if it were made effectual for navigation by modern vessels—and they are growing larger all the time—the effect upon the commerce and the business of our Atlantic ports might be extremely serious; in other words, we might be expending untold millions of American money for the purpose of constructing a water highway to the ocean, with a disastrous result or a serious result to the commerce of the great cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Charleston, Savannah, and Norfolk.

If we are going to make these expenditures upon a continuously large scale, let us make them in the United States, provided the expenditures can be made within our own boundaries with equal success; and I feel very sure that, if the State of New York can construct a barge canal of the dimensions of the present one, the Government of the United States, by lending its powerful aid, can very easily make that navigable for ocean-going vessels, keep our commerce from the interior to the ocean within our boundaries, and add to the prosperity, the wealth, and the welfare of our own people. But, if that were not so, I again protest that this is not the time for such an experiment as is here contemplated.

I observe that this is a Senate committee amendment. Of course, I presume it is susceptible of intelligent explanation and that there may be some good reason for going ahead with the work that I am unable to perceive; but I certainly hope that the Senate will not, without a full consideration of the consequences of such an enterprise, vote to retain the amendment in this bill.

I know, Mr. President, that if I should talk all the evening I could subtract nothing from the bill or change a single vote upon it. I reserve the right to further discuss the Chesapeake & Delaware Canal project; but I shall not, beyond that, offer any further opposition to a vote upon this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. Those in favor of the amendment will say "aye."

Mr. LODGE. I should like to have the amendment stated.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just a moment, Mr. President.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is the Hackensack River item.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Several Senators here would like information as to what they are voting on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the committee amendment, the Chair will say, and the Senator from New York is recognized.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York does not want recognition to speak; he wants to know what we are voting on; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment is that on page 5, after line 16.

Mr. RANSDELL. Including lines 17 to 19, on page 5.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Things are done so suddenly that one has to be quick to ascertain what is going on.

Mr. FLETCHER. The amendment has been before the Senate for about an hour and a half now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this item of $88,000 for the Hackensack River, N. J., as I understand, was presented to the House and was thoroughly discussed there before the committee. The House did not feel justified in putting it into the bill upon the report that was made by the engineers, and I should like to ask the Senator if there has been any additional report received by the Senate committee upon this item beyond what the House committee had?

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say to the Senator that I am not advised as to any full hearings on the subject before the House committee. I know that the members of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House, after the bill was reported over there, felt that this item ought to have been included in the bill. So the matter was taken up by the Commerce Committee, and Gen. Taylor, representing the Chief of Engineers before our committee, recommended this improvement. A number of people interested in the improvement came before us, and we reached the conclusion that it was a very meritorious project, and that the improvement ought to be made. The one development there has been the shipbuilding industry, and there is need for this 16-foot channel.

There were three investigations made; that is, investigations for the same depth, but one for a channel 200 feet wide, another for a channel 300 feet wide, another for a channel 400 feet wide, and the last for a channel 500 feet wide. The engineers recommend this project for a channel 16 feet deep and 300 feet wide, to cost $88,341 and $5,000 per annum for maintenance. The local interests wanted the 400-foot project, but the committee did not feel justified in recommending that. That would cost $125,873 and $7,152 annually for maintenance. The 500-foot project would cost $178,845, and the annual maintenance charge would be $10,161. The engineers recommended the 300-foot channel, and it is considered by the committee as quite an important improvement in the interest of commerce and one that is needed especially by reason of the shipping interests and the development of shipyards which require this depth of water.

The Senator from New Jersey is thoroughly familiar with the details in connection with the project, and I am sure that if the Senator from Utah will examine the report carefully he will be satisfied that it is a worthy project. The item is for the improvement of the Hackensack River, N. J., with a view of obtaining a depth of 16 feet up to the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey bridge at mean low water, and 300 feet wide from the Passaic River channel to deep water above the Central Railroad Co. bridge. The estimated cost is $88,000, and is appropriated in one item in order to complete the project. It is not a continuing project, but this appropriation finishes the entire improvement.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I should like to add to what the chairman has said that there is a pretty considerable commerce now on the river. The report shows that in 1916 it was 503,984 tons, valued at $1,992,000, practically $2,000,000. The river was only 12 feet deep, and the channel was 200 feet wide. The project is to make it 16 feet deep by 300 feet wide; and it certainly seems justified, in my judgment, by the value and importance of the commerce, and, as the chairman has said, by the shipping interests connected with it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, does the Senator know how much money the Government has already spent upon this river?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not tell the Senator. Perhaps I can find it in this report.

Mr. SMOOT. I have looked in the report, and unless it is found in some other part of the report than Part I, there is no estimate given.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will look and see if I can find it for the Senator. I do not recall.

Mr. SMOOT. It may be in one of the other parts of the report.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator will find it in House Document 728.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that if he will look on the top of page 347, Part I, I think he will find what he is asking for.

Mr. SMOOT. I was just reading that.

Mr. RANSDELL. According to the first paragraph there, the total amount expended for new work was $81,066.68, and for maintenance $10,612.16, a total of $91,678.84. I think that is what the Senator was asking.

Mr. SMOOT. It says, under the head of "Condition at end of fiscal year":

> The project was completed in 1914, except for obstructions in the draw of the highway bridge at Little Ferry. The controlling depth on June 30, 1918, was 12 feet up to the highway bridge at Little Ferry, where shoals in the draws of this bridge limit the navigable depths to between 8 and 9 feet. The total amount expended was $81,066.68 for new work, and $10,612.16 for maintenance, a total of $91,678.84.

What I was wondering was this: This appropriation of $88,000 is more than was expended on the project when the engineers reported it completed. In other words, this appropriation asks for $88,000, and the appropriations heretofore made were $81,066.68.

Mr. RANSDELL. As I understand the matter, this is a very considerable modification of and addition to the existing project. It will make it 16 feet in depth instead of the former depth, and will make it about 300 feet wide, making it a very much more valuable waterway. The report which I have before me says that—

> The further improvement by the United States of Hackensack River, N. J., with a view of obtaining a depth of 16 feet up to the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey bridge is deemed advisable to the extent of providing a channel 16 feet deep at mean low water, and 300 feet wide.

As the Senator will see, that is more than double the former capacity.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the Senator reading from House Document 728?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am reading from House Document 728, on page 3.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not have that document before me.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is the latest. It is dated January 2, 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] if he has stated to the Senate why the widening of this river, and deepening it from 9 feet to 16 feet, is required? What has happened there that we should expend that amount of money?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have an hour's speech on this subject.

Mr. LEWIS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I will not yield. I have the floor, and I will not yield for an hour's speech.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I appreciate the suggestion. I thought I should be able to harmonize difficulties to the extent of getting a recess agreed to, so that Senators could get their dinners, if the able chairman of the committee should find it agreeable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is open to a proposition of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the Senator from New Jersey answer my question, at least, before we vote upon this item. The Senator may have made that statement before; but I was down at lunch for a few moments, and I suppose he made that statement when I was out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think the Senator was out of the Chamber when I explained this amendment. It contemplates dredging a bar at the mouth of Hackensack River, which is tributary to the Kill van Kull and the Newark Channel. The Federal Shipbuilding Co. is located above this sand bar, and there are being built there for the United States Government 30 vessels of approximately 6,000 tons each. Now, it is found that in order to float those hulls over this bar, in order to get the coal for that shipbuilding plant, and in order to get the coal for the public-service corporation, and the various other industries along the line of the Hackensack River, carrying a tonnage amounting in value, I think, to some three and a half million dollars a year, this project is absolutely necessary; and it was approved by Mr. Sweet, the Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me ask the Senator if this is a temporary shipyard or a permanent shipyard?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is a permanent shipyard; it is a Government shipyard; and not only that, but there are other shipyards and other projects along the bank of that river. Not only that, but the Hackensack River is practically tributary to the Kill Van Kull; and the Senator, with his vast experience in these measures, having studied them year after year and knowing them, knows that the Kill Van Kull is one of the very important highways for water-borne traffic along the New Jersey coast. The Hackensack and Passaic Rivers, fed by the industries of Newark and Passaic and Paterson, make this one of the most important waterways in my State.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I never yet have objected on the floor of the Senate to an appropriation that would in any way increase the commerce of this country, and that is my position now. If there is an appropriation, no matter whether it has been acted upon by the House or by the Senate, as to which it is shown that the expenditure of the money will return to the district through which the river runs sufficient compensation by increase of commerce, no one in the Senate will vote money for that purpose any quicker than I will. I understood, however, that this appropriation was refused by the House; and, being refused, I thought it ought to be discussed in the Senate now.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator, if he will permit me, that the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House was before us, and told us that if we took on any new projects at all, of all that the House rejected the Hackensack River was the best. He made that statement to us.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to that amendment being agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment——

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understood——

Mr. FLETCHER. I am going to ask for a recess, but let us finish this page.

Mr. SMOOT. I want the next item to go over. That is the Delaware River, Pa., N. J., and Del. I recognize the fact that that is reduced by the committee from $2,500,000 to $1,000,000, but upon reading the report I feel that I want a little more information. I will say to the Senator that it will not take long, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well, then, Mr. President. I will not ask the Senate to stay in session longer to-night. We have spent the whole day and have gotten through with nearly five pages of the bill, but we have made some progress.

Mr. SMOOT. In justification of the Senator from Illinois, I want to say that when the Russian question was up for discussion yesterday, when 2 o'clock came, and the unfinished business was put before the Senate, the Senator wanted to follow immediately at that time with the speech that he made to-day. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], having the unfinished business in charge, told me that he was not feeling well; that he was a sick man; that he wanted the report to be agreed to; and that the Senator from Illinois could make his speech upon the river and harbor bill, and that it would make no difference; and he asked me to see the Senator from Illinois and find out if he would not consent to do that. Upon that request I spoke to the Senator from Illinois, and he did not make his speech then; and the reason why it was made to-day was because it was distinctly understood yesterday that it could be made to-day.

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator from Utah means the junior Senator from Illinois, Mr. SHERMAN?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I should have said the junior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. FLETCHER. In answer to what the Senator says, I will say that if we have much further trouble with this bill I think I will get sick, and see if I can not secure the passage of the bill by that means. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to suggest that there are not more than 15 Senators on the floor now.

RECESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, February 15, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 14, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, we thank Thee for all the great, the generous, the pure, the noble, whose lives were for the uplift of humanity.

May we emulate their example, that the world may be a little better that we have lived and wrought; and Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Speaker, this is pension day in the House, but I have no thought of asking to displace the supply bill now before this body; but I do ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of debate on the Army bill this evening that we have 10 minutes to take up a pension bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that the Committee of the Whole is going to get through with the Army bill to-day?

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask this if they do. If not, I shall not ask it.

The SPEAKER. How many of these pension bills has the gentleman?

Mr. TILLMAN. We have only one; a very short one.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman can make that request this evening. The House may run late.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is pension day in the House, and I ask to be allowed 10 minutes at the conclusion of the consideration of the Army bill——

Mr. FOSTER. Take it up now.

Mr. TILLMAN. Well, I ask unanimous consent to take it up now.

Mr. MANN. Will there be any debate on it?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; I think not.

Mr. MANN. Why not make the request to take it up now?

PRINTING COPIES OF REVENUE ACT.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will permit, Mr. Speaker, day before yesterday I got unanimous consent of the House to print 14,000 copies in document form of the bill as reported by the conference committee, the revenue bill. I had the impression then that the Senate had passed the bill. Yesterday morning I found that they had not passed it, and by unanimous consent that order was rescinded, but I understand in the meantime before the order was rescinded they executed the order for printing at the Government Printing Office and already had printed the bill. So I ask unanimous consent that 15,000 copies of the bill reported by the conference committee be printed, 7,500 to go to the document room and 7,500 copies to the folding room. The first order was for 14,000.

Mr. MANN. This is within the limit that the House can print at a cost of not more than $500?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is. The first number was 14,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not make it 8,000 for the folding room?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is already put in.

Mr. STAFFORD. Seven thousand only, I thought, had been placed at the disposal of the document room.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; half has been placed at the disposal of the document room and half at the disposal of the folding room.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to have 15,000 copies of the conference report on the revenue bill printed, 7,500 for the folding room and 7,500 for the document room. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CORRECTION IN A REFERENCE.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. To correct the record and ask for a change of reference of a bill.

The SPEAKER. Correct the record first. Take one thing at a time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I filed a report yesterday from the Committee on the Irrigation of Arid Lands on a departmental bill (H. R. 4187) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to a man named Hiersche about 90 acres of land in exchange for some land he owns. It is a matter which I think ought to go on the Union Calendar, but it was referred to the Private Calendar, and I ask to have it transferred.

The SPEAKER. What is it about?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There is a man named Anton Hiersche who owns about 40 acres of land that the Reclamation Service wants for a part of the reservoir site of the North Platte irrigation project in Nebraska. The Interior Department does not want to incur the expense of condemning this land, but wants to exchange another piece of vacant land for it, and Hiersche is willing to make the exchange. This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to a definitely described tract of land to Hiersche in consideration of Hiersche deeding to the United States Government the land that is needed for this reservoir, No. 2 of that project.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is a private bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; I do not think so. This is not a private relief bill. Mr. Hiersche is not asking for anything. He owns the land that one of the Government's reservoirs is now situated upon. The Reclamation Service wants to flood that land, and the Interior Department wants by mutual consent to convey to him about 90 acres of public domain for his about 40 acres within the reservoir site. Now, it seems to me that is a bill of a public character directly appropriating public property belonging to the United States under Rule XIII of the rules of the House, section 720.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are plenty of bills on the Private Calendar providing for transfer to separate individuals. They are private bills, not public.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I beg to differ with the gentleman. My impression is that whenever a tract of public land—whether it is 90 acres or 90,000 acres—is to be conveyed by patent by act of Congress directing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to somebody for the land, it makes no difference whether the Government gets money or other land or something else or nothing in exchange for it, my impression is that is an appropriation of public property and should be put upon and considered on the Union Calendar. That is the way I understand the rule, and it seems to be supported by section 3115 of volume 4 of Hinds' Precedents.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is a statute which describes private bills which was called to the attention of the House by myself some weeks ago, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw the request until I can give that authority.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will withdraw the request temporarily, but it is a departmental measure that is very plain and simple and ought to be passed at this session.

Mr. STAFFORD. That does not make it a public bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Secretary Lane's letter transmitting a draft of the bill to me explains the situation and the importance of the bill as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 2, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: During the last session of Congress I requested Hon. W. R. SMITH, the former chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, to introduce a bill authorizing Anton Hiersche to select other land in lieu of lands now owned by him and required for reclamation purposes in connection with the North Platte project—Nebraska. The bill was introduced and became H. R. 17743. I am now advised by the Reclamation Service that the bill as then presented was not in strict accordance with conditions involved. I am therefore submitting another draft with the request that you introduce the same. Mr. Hiersche has agreed to the plan proposed by the bill.

Mr. Hiersche gives up his title to a tract of about 25 acres below the 6-foot contour now flooded and gives the United States a right to flood about 32 acres additional below the 11-foot contour to which 32 acres Mr. Hiersche retains title. In lieu thereof he is to be allowed 90 acres, of which about 67 acres will eventually be irrigable under the project.

While Mr. Hiersche is allowed to take a larger area than he gives up, there is practically no discrepancy in value, because a considerable part of the land taken is very apt to become seeped or partly so whenever irrigation is practiced on the adjoining ground. Besides, the agricultural quality of the land given up is better than the land to be taken, and there is a corresponding difference in market value.

I would therefore be pleased to have you introduce this bill in lieu of the other, as it will doubtless save the project a very large amount, because if it were necessary to purchase the lands and flowage rights from Mr. Hiersche a considerable cash outlay would be required.

Cordially, yours, FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Chairman Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands,
House of Representatives.

I have not the slightest personal interest in the bill. I am merely trying to handle it at the request of the Secretary of the Interior and the Reclamation Service. It is a Nebraska matter, and I feel that the bill should be placed where I think it belongs, on the Union Calendar, where it can be disposed of at this session of Congress, and not on the Private Calendar, where it will be chloroformed forever. However, I will withdraw the request for the present and confer with the gentleman and the House parliamentarian.

The SPEAKER. What is the other part that the gentleman wants?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. My other request is to correct an error in printing. The bill in the report is given as H. R. 187 instead of H. R. 4187. Moreover, the report shows that it is referred to the Committee of the Whole House, while the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, page 3457, shows it on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. In the RECORD?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is an error in printing the report. The RECORD is correct.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TILLMAN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN WAR CONTRACTS—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1057).

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 13274, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think the report is more informing than the statement.

Mr. FIELDS. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, and I make the point there is no quorum in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The SPEAKER. On this vote 286 Members—a quorum—answered to their names.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will report the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918, by any officer or agent acting under his authority, direction, or instruction, or that of the President, with any person, firm, or corporation for the acquisition of lands, or the use thereof, or for damages resulting from notice by the Government of its intention to acquire or use said lands, or for the production, manufacture, sale, acquisition, or control of equipment, materials, or supplies, or for services, or for facilities, or other purposes connected with the prosecution of the war, when such agreement has been performed in whole or in part, or expenditures have been made or obligations incurred upon the faith of the same by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918, and such agreement has not been executed in the manner prescribed by law: Provided, That in no case shall any award either by the Secretary of War or the Court of Claims include prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States and a reasonable remuneration for expenditures and obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order: Provided further, That this act shall not authorize payment to be made of any claim not presented before June 30, 1919: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall report to Congress at the beginning of its next session following June 30, 1919, a detailed statement showing the nature, terms, and conditions of every such agreement and the payment or adjustment thereof: And provided further, That no settlement of any claim arising under any such agreement shall bar the United States Government through any of its duly authorized agencies, or any committee of Congress hereafter duly appointed, from the right of review of such settlement, nor the right of recovery of any money paid by the Government to any party under any settlement entered into or payment made under the provisions of this act, if the Government has been defrauded, and the right of recovery in all such cases shall exist against the executors, administrators, heirs, successors, and assigns, of any party or parties: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to relieve any officer or agent of the United States from criminal prosecution under the provisions of any statute of the United States for any fraud or criminal conduct: And provided further, That this act shall in no way relieve or excuse any officer or his agent from such criminal prosecution because of any irregularity or illegality in the manner of the execution of such agreement: And provided further, That in all proceedings hereunder witnesses may be compelled to attend, appear, and testify, and produce books, papers, and letters, or other documents; and the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving the same shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in the trial of any criminal proceeding.

"SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims is hereby given jurisdiction on petition of any individual, firm, company, or corporation referred to in section 1 hereof, to find and award fair and just compensation in the cases specified in said section in the event that such individual, firm, company, or corporation shall not be willing to accept the adjustment, payment, or compensation offered by the Secretary of War as hereinbefore provided, or in the event that the Secretary of War shall fail or refuse to offer a satisfactory adjustment, payment, or compensation as provided for in said section.

"SEC. 3. That the Secretary of War, through such agency as he may designate or establish is empowered, upon such terms as he or it may determine to be in the interest of the United States, to make equitable and fair adjustments and agreements, upon the termination or in settlement or readjustment of agreements or arrangements entered into with any foreign government or governments or nationals thereof, prior to November 12, 1918, for the furnishing to the American Expeditionary Forces or otherwise for war purposes of supplies, materials, facilities, services or the use of property, or for the furnishing of any thereof by the United States to any foreign government or governments, whether or not such agreements or arrangements have been entered into in accordance with applicable statutory provisions; and the other provisions of this act shall not be applicable to such adjustments.

"SEC. 4. That whenever, under the provisions of this act, the Secretary of War shall make an award to any prime contractor with respect to any portion of his contract which he shall have sublet to any other person, firm, or corporation who has in good faith made expenditures, incurred obligations, rendered service, or furnished material, equipment, or supplies to such prime contractor, with the knowledge and approval of any agent of the Secretary of War duly authorized thereunto, before payment of said award the Secretary of War shall require such prime contractor to present satisfactory evidence of having paid said subcontractor or of the consent of said subcontractor to look for his compensation to said prime contractor only; and in the case of the failure of said prime contractor to present such evidence or such consent, the Secretary of War shall pay directly to said subcontractor the amount found to be due under said award; and in case of the insolvency of any prime contractor the subcontractor of said prime contractor shall have a lien upon the funds arising from said award prior and superior to the lien of any general creditor of said prime contractor.

"SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis the amount or amounts of money heretofore invested or contracted to be invested and obligations incurred in good faith by any and all persons, firms, or corporations for producing or in good faith acquiring property for producing, within the United States, for the purpose of supplying the urgent needs of the Nation during the war, any ores or mineral substances mentioned and enumerated in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply;" approved October 5, 1918, the production of which was requested or demanded by the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, the Emergency Fleet Corporation or the Department of the Interior and which has been performed in whole or in part by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918; and that said Secretary ascertain, determine, adjust, liquidate, and, out of the moneys provided and appropriated by said act, pay to the parties justly entitled thereto the amounts of such losses and damages as he, the said Secretary shall find and determine to have been sustained by reason of having made said investments for said purposes, and that in each case he shall make such determination, provision, settlement, advancement, or final payment, or by agreement with claimants take such other action as he shall find and determine to be just and equitable; that the decision and action of said Secretary in each case shall be conclusive and final; that all payments shall be made, and all expenses incurred by the said Secretary shall be paid from the funds appropriated by the said act of October 5, 1918, and that said funds and appropriations shall continue to be available for said purposes until such time as the said Secretary shall have fully exercised the authority hereby granted and performed and completed the duties hereby provided and imposed: Provided, however, That said Secretary shall consider, approve, and dispose of only such claims as shall be made hereunder and filed with the Department of the Interior within three months from and after the approval of this act.

That a report of all operations under this section, including receipts and disbursements, shall be made to Congress on or before the first Monday in December of each year.

That nothing in this section shall be construed to confer jurisdiction upon any court to entertain a suit against the United States.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to provide relief in cases of contracts connected with the prosecution of the war, and for other purposes."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

The conferees agreed upon the general language of the House bill, so far as section 1 is concerned, together with the provision adopted by the House requiring presentation of claims not later than June 30, 1919. The Secretary of War is required to report to Congress in detail a statement of the settlement made. No settlement shall bar the Government of the right of review and recovery for fraud, and no officer or agent of the Government shall be relieved of liability for fraud or criminal conduct. This section contains a provision that witnesses may be compelled to attend and testify.

Section 2 gives the Court of Claims jurisdiction in the event the settlement of the Secretary of War is not accepted.

Section 3 authorizes settlements with foreign Governments and their citizens upon the same terms and conditions as such Governments themselves settle their own contracts.

Section 4 authorizes the adjustment of the claims of subcontractors.

Section 5 provides for the settlement of mining contracts by the Secretary of the Interior.

W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, can some arrangement be made as to the time between those who favor and those who oppose the conference report?

Mr. FILEDS. Time will be given to those in opposition; and if I control the time on this side, I shall follow the policy of alternating between those opposed and those favoring, if that is desired, so that we can divide the time equally between the two sides.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the opposition have half of the time with those who favor the report?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, is a motion to recommit now in order?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. At the proper time I want to offer a motion to recommit if no one else does.

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to make the motion to recommit——

Mr. MANN. If you can get the floor.

The SPEAKER. Yes; if you can get the floor.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I would like to get the floor for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can we not have an agreement as to the time before the discussion begins?

Mr. FIELDS. As to the control of the time or as to the length of time?

Mr. HAMLIN Both.

Mr. FIELDS. This general proposition has been discussed in the House, and the particular item upon which the opposition here seems to be centered was discussed for over an hour, or an hour and a half, in the House.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; and the House rejected it 3 to 1.

Mr. FIELDS. Well, I differ with the gentleman.

Mr. GORDON. Well, it did.

Mr. FIELDS. I will say to the gentleman that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] and myself both asked to be sent to the conference uninstructed and voted against the instructions of the conferees.

Mr. MADDEN. A man on the conference goes into the conference to represent the House which sends him.

Mr. HAMLIN. The vote which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] refers to was not on the question of instructing the conferees. It was on the question of concurring in the Senate amendment.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I think an hour on each side would be sufficient.

Mr. GORDON. No; I would like to have a little time on this.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], who has charge of the conference report, may be allowed to proceed with the debate for an hour, and then there may be other gentlemen who wish to be heard pro and con on it, and then there will be time to extend it.

Mr. GORDON. I want to be heard on the "con" side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the opposition have half of the time, to be equally divided with those who favor the report?

Mr. FIELDS. I ask unanimous consent, then, Mr. Speaker, that the debate on this conference report be confined to one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and one-half to be controlled by myself, and at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] is recognized.

Mr. HAMLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, if I may. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, I would like to submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. FIELDS. If the gentleman will make his request briefly, I will yield.

Mr. HAMLIN. This is a very important matter. It involves millions of dollars. The proposition involved has never really been considered by the House, and I think the House can well afford to take two hours upon it.

Mr. FIELDS. I can not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. WINGO. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the regular order. The regular order is that if these gentlemen are going to debate this thing they had better start. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask that the debate be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], at the end of which time the previous question may be considered as ordered and a vote taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the debate on this conference report shall not exceed two hours, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. And at the end of that time the previous question is to be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Yes. And at the end of that time the previous question is to be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, is this being taken out of my time?

The SPEAKER. No. What is the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I would like to know if at the end the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] shall be recognized to make a preferential motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is entitled to be recognized.

The SPEAKER. No. The first man who gets up in opposition to the bill is entitled to it. The Chair has always given preference in making the motion to recommit to the Republican side of the House—the minority. Still, the rule is for the man who qualifies to oppose the bill to have that right. That is the end of it.

Mr. MANN. I do not care who is recognized to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma if he qualifies. Is the gentleman from Oklahoma opposed to this bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Yes; with this amendment in it, I am.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a proper qualification.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I am opposed to this conference report with this amendment in it.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will qualify without any limitation, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

The LONDON. What is before the House now is the conference report and not the bill?

The SPEAKER. Of course it is.

Mr. LONDON. And therefore the qualification goes to the conference report, and the question is, Is the gentleman opposed to the conference report?

The SPEAKER. Of course the qualification goes to the conference report. There is no trouble about that.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the regular order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] is recognized for an hour.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. Is the motion to recommit in order before the gentleman from Kentucky has his hour?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, under the rules the motion to recommit can be made only when a Member gets the floor, except where the previous question has been ordered, and then it is a matter of right to make the motion. Before the previous question is ordered the gentleman must be able to get the floor in his own right in order to make the motion.

The SPEAKER. Here is the situation: It is the habit of the House to consider the motion to adopt the conference report as pending. Now, another gentleman gets up and makes a preferential motion. The Chair does not see that it makes a particle of difference when the motion to recommit is made. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] will please proceed.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I have been waiting very patiently for this opportunity.

I wish to explain briefly the report, and I trust that I may not be interrupted until I have concluded my brief explanation.

The first section of the report vests in the Secretary of War authority to settle claims contracted by the War Department. The conferees used the House language as the basis of the bill.

Section 2 of the conference report confers upon the Court of Claims jurisdiction to consider the petition of the claimants if they are dissatisfied with the adjustment made by the Secretary of War.

Section 3 deals with foreign contracts. This amendment was put in by the Senate, and then, at the request of the War Department, was revised by the conferees, for the reason that it seemed proper to settle with foreign contractors in the same way that their governments were settling with them, and the provisions of the House bill would not permit such settlements.

Section 4 deals with subcontractors. It may be that there are five subcontractors in a particular case. Probably settlements can be had with four of them. This provision provides that payments may be made to those with whom settlements can be reached. It would be manifestly unfair to hold up a part of the subcontractors because, forsooth, an agreement had not been reached with one of them. It would also give that subcontractor a long lever if he believed that by holding out he might get the terms demanded because he had the whole situation blocked.

That is briefly the substance of the report down to section 5, which seems to be the basis of the controversy here.

Mr. Speaker, the obligations that were incurred by the Government in the production of war materials were not incurred by the War Department alone. Some men were called upon to furnish ores or minerals of different kinds. They were called upon by the Department of the Interior, by the Shipping Board, by the War Trade Board, by the War Industries Board, and by the Emergency Fleet Corporation. These men responded to the call and invested their money. I understand that many of them are bankrupt to-day. These materials were war materials. Though their production was not requested by the Secretary of War, it was requested for the same purpose and the same uses as were the materials the production of which was requested by the Secretary of War. The Senate amendment would have included production made upon request through the public press, through advertisements, or, in fact, would have covered every character of production of this kind. When we were discussing this question a few days ago I stated to the House that I was opposed to including claims based upon that sort of request. So the conferees agreed to confine these claims to production demanded or requested by the Department of the Interior, by the War Trade Board, by the Shipping Board, by the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and by the War Industries Board.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FIELDS. Let me conclude my statement first, please. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that when these agencies of the Government that were the chief organizations which were instrumental in promoting production for the prosecution of the war called citizens of this country to Washington or sent their agents to see them and requested them to engage in production for the prosecution of the war, the Government thereby incurred a moral obligation, whether there was any statute authorizing it or not. A bill passed this House some three months prior to October 5 which would have legalized all these claims had it passed the Senate in time, and I think it is fair to assume that these agencies of the Government, acting in anticipation of the enactment of that law, incurred these obligations.

Now, men put their money into these materials, and, as I said a moment ago, they are bankrupt in the event that the Government does not take care of them. I think it would be unfair to desert these men now. I think it matters not whether these requests were made through the Secretary of War, through the Department of the Interior, through the War Trade Board, through the Shipping Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation. They came from the Government of the United States, and whether there was a law upon the statute books at that time or not those agencies had the moral support of the people of the United States, and any individual who had refused to meet the request of one of these agencies would have been charged with being a slacker and almost a traitor.

But men did not refuse. They responded to the request of the legally constituted agencies of their Government, invested their money, and produced the goods, and I believe that the Government thereby incurred a moral obligation that it should now meet.

The question will be asked probably as to the amount of these claims. Mr. Manning, of the Department of the Interior, appeared before the conferees and stated that they would run from four and a half to eight million dollars. The bill provides that these claims must be filed within three months after the enactment of the law, which removes the fear that in years to come some man will come up under the provisions of this act and say that he engaged in industry for the support of the Government and has a just claim.

So I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of the United States should at this time, considering the way that the people of the country came to the support of the Government and considering the position that any man would have been placed in had he refused to comply with the requests of these agents—I say the Government should meet this moral obligation. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Before the gentleman yields the floor, will he yield for a question?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman has been talking about the moral obligation of the Government connected with these different claims. I want to ask him if it is not a fact that the administration, particularly the Secretary of Agriculture and many of his agents, not only requested the farmers of the country, but went out and talked to them, wrote to them, and urged them to plant wheat, and that previous to that time the Congress of the United States had passed a law guaranteeing the farmer the price of $2.26 a bushel?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes; guaranteed in advance.

Mr. McKENZIE. Under that request is it not possible that many of the farmers of the West went out and bought seed wheat, seed drills, and machinery, sowed his wheat, the drouth came and he lost his labor, he had the money invested in the machinery, and do you think that there is a moral obligation resting upon the Government to pay these men the $2.26 a bushel for whatever wheat they might produce, but that it should now pay them for the machinery and the efforts they made in planting wheat with the expectation of getting $2.26 a bushel, but where no grain was raised?

Mr. FIELDS. I will answer the gentleman's question by asking him one. If we had the right to guarantee to the farmer in advance the $2.26 for the production of wheat, is it morally right for the Government to bankrupt these gentlemen——

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield further? I would simply say to the gentleman from Kentucky that if a man actually in the mining proposition had produced any manganese or pyrites under the request of these agents of the Government that the Government would be under a moral obligation to pay these gentlemen for the products which they had produced.

Mr. GORDON. But they have not produced any.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. I want to say that the Secretary of Agriculture and every agency of the Secretary, and even the President of the United States, called upon the farmers of the country to produce foodstuffs, oats, rye, barley, pork, hogs, and they have done it in great abundance. We have more hogs in the country to-day than at any time in our history. More than that, the President called upon us, every agent called upon us, to buy liberty bonds, and they are selling at 94. Would the gentleman carry his theory so far as to ask the Government to pay these losses which were met in pursuance of a patriotic duty?

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, the gentleman can go on and on and on, but I am speaking of the investment and production of these gentlemen who were requested to make it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman, assuming his premises, which I do not agree to, why you should have thrown around section 6 of the conference report none of the safeguards you throw around other sections as to the contracts you were attempting to validate? In other words, why in one class it is wide open, with the decision of the Secretary of the Interior final, and in the other——

Mr. FIELDS. It gives to claimants under the Secretary of War a right that is not extended to these claimants, because if a claimant under the first provision does not care to accept the settlement of the Secretary of War he can appeal to the Court of Claims. But, under this provision, if the claimant does not accept the settlement of the Secretary of the Interior he can not go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SHERLEY. Why not let them in both cases go to the Court of Claims? Is not that proof that he has no standing even in a court of equity?

Mr. FIELDS. He has not the right extended to others in this bill. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GORDON. Before the gentleman yields the floor will he yield to me for a question?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield.

Mr. GORDON. Where does the gentleman get the authority for saying that there will only be $8,000,000 of these claims?

Mr. FIELDS. I stated where I got my authority; the Secretary of the Department of the Interior appeared before the conferees and made the statement.

Mr. GORDON. Under section 5 anybody who went out prospecting for manganese will have a claim against the Government.

Mr. FIELDS. I am glad the gentleman raised that question, because I overlooked it. They stated that the only claims would be on manganese, pyrites, chromium, and probably a little on phosphates.

Mr. GORDON. I know, but they are not all in yet; wait for the returns.

Mr. FIELDS. They know how much they requested and they based it on that. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it would be agreeable to me for the gentleman from Wisconsin to control one-half the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WINGO). Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kentucky to yield the floor?

Mr. FIELDS. No; Mr. Speaker, I am not yielding the floor.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to speak in opposition to this.

Mr. FIELDS. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD]. I do not yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky had yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin a part of his time.

Mr. FIELDS. I have not reached an agreement as to that, and I understood that the gentleman from Wisconsin wanted to debate the motion, but I did not agree to yield to him, nor do I yield to him to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was not endeavoring to take advantage of the gentleman under any circumstances. The gentleman stated in effect that he yielded the floor.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. HOWARD. I do if it is not taken out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time is running.

Mr. HOWARD. Then I refuse to yield.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, the House has had this matter under consideration now three or four times. It passed what was known as the war-contracts bill on a previous occasion by a very large majority. That bill itself as it left the House and went to the Senate and section 5 of the present conference report are in identical language. For instance, let me read two lines of each one of these sections to show that the same safeguards, the same limitations, the same care, the same judicial scrutiny are imposed upon the Secretary of the Interior under section 5 as are imposed upon the Secretary of War under the original bill:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis that has been entered into in good faith—

And so forth.

Now, let us see what section 5 provides.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. Just a moment. I want to get something in an intelligent, coherent way before the House, and you can not do it by answering questions every half minute. Therefore I shall have to refuse to yield. Let us see what section 5 says. Let us look this thing in the face as it exists. They are talking here about the farmers being induced to produce. Yes; they were induced to produce some, and they did produce, and they got the best prices that they ever got in the history of agriculture for what they did produce, and they had a general, stable market, whereas these men who were induced to produce had only one customer; and who was that customer? The Government of the United States. When the armistice was signed that customer ceased to exist, and what these men had produced had practically no intrinsic value for the purposes for which it was produced and under the conditions under which it was produced. Let us see about the safeguards and the limitations which are thrown around section 5 that gentlemen here are preparing to strike from this conference report by a rereference of it to the conferees. Section 5 provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis, the amount or amounts of moneys heretofore invested or contracted to be invested—

And so forth. That is exactly the same langunge.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. No, I will not. The gentleman can debate the matter in his own time. I have only five minutes. Let us see what you do by your vote when you vote to disagree to the conference report and strike section 5 from it. You make flesh of one and fowl of the other. You say that you repose the greatest confidence in the Secretary of War and you say by your vote in striking out section 5 that you do not repose the same confidence in the Secretary of the Interior—that you are willing to trust the Secretary of War in the adjudication of $1,680,000,000 worth of claims, but you are unwilling to place that same degree of confidence in the great Secretary of the Interior and permit him to settle four and a half million to eight million dollars' worth of claims upon undertakings that were entered into at the solicitation, at the suggestion, at the importunity of the Secretary of the Interior, and for what? What did he say to these men? Gentlemen here talk about running around and paying a lot of prospectors. You are not paying a lot of prospectors, you are paying a lot of patriotic citizens who invested their cold money at the earnest solicitation of the great Government of the United States, who had to have these deficits made up in the importation of pyrites to this country, in order that we might make munitions, to make up the deficit in the importation of chrome into this country with which to line our guns that won the battle on the western front. You are paying men who produced manganese to harden the steel in the guns that we used in the great victory that this country and our allies obtained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to give me two more minutes.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I desire first to submit a request for unanimous consent. I renew my request that the time be extended 30 minutes, making the time of debate in all one and one-half hours, one-half of that to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time be extended for 30 minutes——

Mr. FIELDS. And that at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Making the total debate one hour and a half, one half of that time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin, at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, do I understand that no opportunity will be given to offer a motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Wisconsin that after the previous question is ordered, as the present occupant of the chair understands, the right to offer a motion to recommit still exists.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that understanding I have no objection to the previous question being considered as ordered, but I should like to have it distinctly understood that we have the opportunity under the arrangement to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. The previous question being ordered, if it is by unanimous consent, at the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, when the time comes to move to recommit, does the previous question operate upon that motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes. The Chair would say that under the proposed agreement this is the situation—that the previous question having been ordered upon the report, then a motion to recommit comes, as the present occupant of the chair understands, under the rule as a matter of privilege; but it would not be debatable, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman embody in his request the right for a motion to recommit to be offered?

Mr. HEFLIN. Without debate.

Mr. CANNON. If it is a right, you do not have to agree.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is not the Speaker of the House, but the present occupant will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin the Speaker so advised the present occupant of the chair that that was the parliamentary law, and that was the opinion of the present occupant of the chair and the opinion of the parliamentary clerk.

Mr. STAFFORD. May we have an understanding that the motion to recommit may be offered?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate proceed to the extent of an hour and a half in all, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], at the end of which time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I understand, if that request is granted the hour and a half is to be from the time the discussion began?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is an extension of 30 minutes of the hour originally existing under the rule.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, about what time will that close debate?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will close it about 1.33, roughly estimating.

Mr. DYER. Now, another question——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky demands the regular order, and the regular order is: Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I object, if I can not ask a question and get some information.

Mr. FIELDS. I yield three minutes additional to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. JUUL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Georgia may proceed for two minutes further. He is making a statement, and I would like to hear the end of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. HOWARD. What particular portion of that statement does the gentleman wish to inquire about; there has been so much said——

Mr. JUUL. I want the gentleman to continue with his speech, and I would like the gentleman from Georgia to state where he finds the limitation upon the amount involved.

Mr. HOWARD. Now, let us see what the limitations are. We had some dollar-a-year statesmen down here in the War Department and in these other boards. I have in mind now contracts that they let in one instance—transport wagons—where they let a contract to one manufacturer that was a competitor of theirs before they went into the business at one price and let the contract to their old concern at another price. You place confidence in the Secretary of War to settle these claims; now let us see what the condition is in the country. The Labor Department is complaining all over the country that there is a great unemployment in this country. Why? Because the business men who want to receive what they have honestly earned from this Government and place it in reconstruction work are unable to do it, because they have got practically every dollar that is now due them by the Government of the United States liquidated in the great banking institutions of the country and are paying rates of interest that are equivalent to 6, 6½, and 7 per cent. Every day that you delay the payment of these claims there is assessed against the Government of the United States $300,000 in interest—and gentlemen sit around here and try to bring in the farmer. Oh, great God, the iniquities that are committed in legislation in the name of the farmer! Somebody wants to play the demagogue with the farmer all the time, and he is ridden from one year's end to the other by some fellow who does not know which end of a mule to hitch up. [Laughter.] You are talking about——

Mr. JUUL. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOWARD. In conclusion——

Mr. JUUL. I asked for the additional time for the gentleman in order to get him to answer a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time is in the control of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. HOWARD. Now, let us see what are the limitations—that is what the gentleman wants—put on section 5. I repeat what I said in the very outset, that the same limitations and restrictions legally are placed around the war-minerals section as are placed around the section by which you confer power upon the Secretary of War. Now, then, the question comes up, and my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], a great constitutional lawyer and a great lawyer and a great and good legislator, objects because the Supreme Court of the United States at one time passed upon this question. I got that decision and read it. The only difference between the gentleman from Ohio and the Supreme Court in that instance is that the Supreme Court held there and reversed the finding in the Cramp case and said that the amount due to the Cramp people was just and stated the amount that should be paid, and that was on a proposition that under the peculiar terms of that particular contract the Court of Claims had jurisdiction and they went there and got compensation; and the point involved in this case is that if these gentlemen are made to go through the Court of Claims and payment is delayed to them, it means absolute bankruptcy for every one of these men who responded to the call of their Government. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky kindly submit his unanimous-consent request again?

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 30 minutes, making one hour and a half in all; that one-half of that time be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin and one-half by myself, and at the expiration of that time that the previous question be considered as ordered.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Do I understand the time already consumed is chargeable on the respective sides?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair state the question. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the time be extended for 30 minutes, one half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the conference report. Is there objection?

Mr. LARSEN. Reserving the right to object, do I understand that this request for the extension of time confines the debate to the conference report?

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the rules of the House it must necessarily be confined to the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair so understands the rule.

Mr. LARSEN. If that is the understanding, I will not object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Does unanimous consent preclude the motion to recommit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Oh, no. The Chair will state for the information of the gentleman from Texas that in the opinion of the present occupant of the chair there is no way by which the motion to recommit can be prevented from being offered on this conference report.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Then the gentleman making the motion to recommit would have an hour?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the unanimous-consent agreement is agreed to, at the end of the hour and a half the previous question will be ordered, and a motion to recommit may be made, but no further discussion on the motion to recommit will be in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is the understanding of the Chair. Is there objection?

Mr. JUUL. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, and the regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] is recognized.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes of the time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will have six minutes left after the time yielded to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of eight minutes I wish the Chair to advise me.

Mr. Speaker, when this mining bill first passed the House it provided for an authorization to the Secretary of the Interior to fix a minimum price for all the minerals included in the bill. It passed the House as early as April, hibernated for five months over in the Senate, and then was revived into a different bill entirely, providing merely for the contract feature rather than for the minimum-price feature. That is disclosed by the report of the Senate, in which Senator HENDERSON uses the following language:

> The minimum-price principle had the approval of the House, but the attention of your committee was called to the possibility of the Government thereby incurring onerous obligations which might be avoided by an elaboration of the contract principle approved by the House, thus lessening the Government's liability. By the contract system the Government would know definitely just what the obligation would be, whereas the minimum-price feature might so stimulate production as to place it in a most embarrassing position.

The bill as it finally passed Congress also provided for the incorporation of a Government institution with a capital of $50,000,000 to go into the business of developing these minerals. The bill as it left the House provided for an appropriation of $10,000,000. As it came back from the Senate it provided an appropriation of $50,000,000. Under the bill as it was approved on October 5 no authority whatsoever was vested in anyone to fix the price. The President was only authorized from time to time to purchase such minerals. In fact, the Senate bill took away the authority from the Secretary of the Interior, because the opposition recognized it was too great a power to be lodged in a Cabinet officer, and vested the authority exclusively in the President. From October 5 to the signing of the armistice no authority was exercised whatsoever under this act.

Under this act it was required on the 25th of each month to file with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate reports of all expenditures and operations under it. I have called upon the Clerk of the House and find that not one report has been filed and no operation ever undertaken under this bill.

Now, what is proposed? Because persons, in anticipation of a rising market, went in and developed their mines it is now proposed to compensate them for the full investment. I know of many men in industrial lines who invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in the steel industry in anticipation of getting Government orders, and whose investments became a complete loss at the time of the armistice; and yet you intend to compensate these mine owners and refuse to compensate the men who took the same risk of business in anticipation of the war continuing. If you pass this conference report, it vests in the Secretary of the Interior full authority as to implied contracts——

Mr. GORDON. No contracts at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. No contracts at all, but implied contracts, to recompense them, and we will be burdened down if this report is adopted, not to the extent of four or five million dollars, but hundreds of millions of dollars. You will be obliged to compensate all, because long before this bill was introduced there were persons insistent that there should be some legislation passed, but if they did not receive the authorization of Congress they would go ahead with these investments. They went ahead, as any business man would go ahead, in anticipation of high prices for their products and that there would be sale for these products if the war continued.

Mr. FIELDS. It is limited to $50,000,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Even then, if there are claims presented of hundreds of millions, though the conference report says only $50,000,000 will be available, you will be obliged to pay the maximum of the claims that will be presented. There is no escape from that.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not. My time is limited.

This section 5 is different entirely from the other provisions of the conference report. The others relate to conditions where a contract really had been entered into but it was irregular as to form; but here you are going to grant compensation or remuneration to everyone who happens to have gone into mining development. Under the law as enacted October 5, the respective bureaus, the Shipping Board, the War Trade Board, and the like, were given no authority, as described in this section 5, to encourage development. They had no authority to encourage the development. Naturally they were anxious and interested in having further production. They were calling upon the mine owners to produce from the very beginning of the war, but they did not exercise any authority under the act as passed. The President refused to exercise the authority, and for good reasons. He knew, as we all know now, that when this bill was approved on October 5, 1918, the war was coming to a close, and he used his good judgment not to impose the obligation of $50,000,000 or $1,000,000 upon the Government. Prior to the passage of this act perhaps the War Industries Board had called upon mine owners to produce more. They naturally called upon steel manufacturers to produce more; they may have called upon bronze manufacturers to produce more; and they may have called upon other manufacturers to produce more. But if you pass this provision for settlement of claims, without any basis of legal obligation, then you should reward every manufacturer who has increased his plant and who has suffered a loss by reason of the change of price and the refusal of the Government to purchase the output which their enlarged plant was capable of producing. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, there will be only one more speech on this side.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAMLIN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], I think, was not entirely fair with the House when he made the statement that the provisions in section 5 were identical with the provisions in the first part of this bill, applicable to the so-called war-contract claims to be adjusted by the Secretary of War. He did not read all of the provisions of section 1. He only read this part:

> The Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to adjust, pay, or discharge any agreement, express or implied, upon a fair and equitable basis, that has been entered into in good faith during the present emergency and prior to November 12, 1918.

Then he read from a portion of section 5 which was identical, but the trouble was he did not read quite enough of section 1.

If he had read a little further he would have found this significant and important provision in section 1, which is not in section 5: The agreement mentioned in section 1 must have been entered into "by any officer or agent acting under the authority, direction, or instructions" of the Secretary of War "or the President of the United States." This specifically limits the settlement to only such claims as the President or Secretary of War had a right to make contracts for.

Now, that provision or anything like it is not in section 5. Why? Simply because they knew that the Secretary of the Interior or the President had no authority to make any agreements with these mineral producers, and therefore could not delegate authority to anybody else to make a contract. So the difference between the two classes of claims is apparent. They are in no sense identical.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], two members of the conference committee, told this House the other day that they wanted this matter to go back to conference so that it could be safeguarded. If I can understand language, instead of safeguarding the interest of the Government they have thrown open wider the gates to the Treasury. The provision which they report is not nearly so good and the interest of the Government is not nearly so well safeguarded under this conference agreement as under the original proposition.

Mr. FIELDS. That is a difference of opinion. I differ with the gentleman on that. I think it is much better.

Mr. HAMLIN. Well, let us see. Under the original proposition a man to sustain his claim had to show that he was personally solicited by the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, or the Interior Department. Under the provision brought in now——

Mr. FIELDS. By publicity or advertisement.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not yielded to the gentleman. Yes; both under that provision and this provision as you have brought it in now. But under the provision that is brought in here now, all you have got to show is that they were requested or demanded by advertisement in a newspaper or in any other way, not only by the War Industries Board, the Shipping Board, or the Department of the Interior, but they have added the War Trade Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation. I presume that they were afraid that some poor fellow might be left out under the other provision as written in by the Senate, so they extended the agencies of the Government in order to give all a chance to get in on the grand distribution of funds.

Now, there is another very radical difference between section 5 of this report and the balance of the bill. Let me call your attention to this proposition. Under the provision applying to the Secretary of War there is this safeguard written in:

That in no case shall any award, either by the Secretary of War or the Court of Claims, include prospective or possible profits—

And so forth.

Now, there is no such provision in section 5 applying to these mineral claims, and yet they tell us that the provision relating to the two classes of claims are identical. They tell us that the amount that can be expended is limited. Let us see if that is true. They say it is limited to $50,000,000. I tell you, as a lawyer, that there is great doubt in my mind as to whether that is true or not. It is true that there is a provision in section 5 that says that these claims and the expenses of this adjudication shall be paid out of the $50,000,000 appropriated by the act of October 5, 1918; but it does not say that the Secretary of the Interior, if this becomes a law, may not adjudicate claims and thereby legalize them and make them legal claims against the Government of the United States amounting to more than $50,000,000, and that Congress will then be forced to make such additional appropriation as shall be necessary to pay them.

So I say that while I think it was the intention of the conferees to limit it to $50,000,000, there is really a very serious doubt whether they have in fact so limited it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, there is no difference, I take it, in the desire of Members of the House; all of us want to do justice to the citizens of America, and men who have a real claim against the Government ought to have that claim liquidated by the Government.

But the problem that confronts a legislative body is not what it desires to do, but what it is doing when it proposes specific legislation; and notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], I submit that there is no comparison between the powers that are conferred in the section that relates to contracts made by the War Department and those that relate to matters to be adjusted by the Secretary of the Interior. Anyone reading the bill with care will see the distinction very plainly. The Secretary of War is expressly limited, as has just been suggested, from doing certain things. By the proviso he is prohibited from including "prospective or possible profits on any part of the contract beyond the goods and supplies delivered to and accepted by the United States"; and here is what he can affirmatively allow: "A reasonable remuneration for expenditures or obligations or liabilities necessarily incurred in performing or preparing to perform said contract or order."

Now, the Secretary of the Interior is given the right to make a final adjudication, with the power "to ascertain, determine, adjust, and liquidate, and out of the moneys provided and appropriated by said act pay" the amounts of such losses and damages as he, the said Secretary, "shall find and determine to have been sustained by reason of having made such investments for said purposes." Now, go back and see what "said purposes" are, because that is the important provision in this particular language. Said purposes are these:

For producing or in good faith acquiring property for producing within the United States, for the purpose—for the purpose of supplying the urgent needs of the Nation during the war, any ores or mineral substances mentioned and enumerated in the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply"; approved October 5, 1918, the production of which was requested or demanded by the War Industries Board, the War Trade Board, the Shipping Board, the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or the Department of the Interior, and which has been performed in whole or in part by any such person, firm, or corporation prior to November 12, 1918.

Now, the difference is this: The war contracts which the Secretary of War is going to deal with, whether made formally or informally, are contracts relating to the procurement of a given thing for a given purpose. What is attempted is to validate those contracts when they have been made informally. The matters that the Secretary of the Interior is to deal with are wherever a person, at the suggestion or the invitation, or, if you please, a general order of the enumerated Government agencies, has gone to work for the purpose of developing a given mineral with the idea of increasing the general supply that the Nation may have need for. In other words, if a man undertook to open up a mine, not for the purpose of supplying the Government with a given quantity of manganese but for the purpose of stimulating and increasing the general production of manganese because of a need that the Nation might have, that claim can be recognized without limitation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman one more minute.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, the difference between the two is very wide. I believe we ought to legislate to take care of some cases that may have arisen in connection with the bill that we passed in regard to the stimulating of mining; but it ought to be so narrowed as not simply to throw the matter wide open and to invite every man who can persuade the Secretary of the Interior—because he is made the final judge—that he has made an investment for the general purpose of increasing the production of a given mineral. I think that is very much further than the Congress can afford to go, and I again submit that if any lawyer in this House will take the two paragraphs and sit down by himself for 10 minutes and read them he will come to the conclusion that they are not identical or similar, and that they do not throw around the action of the Government the same restrictions in each case. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, how does the time stand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has 15 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky 6 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER].

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, my objection to this conference report is that it sets a precedent that will absolutely paralyze this Congress. In my question to the gentleman from Kentucky I called attention to the agricultural situation, where production had been stimulated, where prices are now falling, and I asked him if his theory went to the extent of taking care of that kind of a situation. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD], interesting, brilliant, sometimes right, sometimes wrong, thoroughly wrong on this, refers to that as demagogy and shakes his locks in the face of the House to prove it. Well,

I did not intend it as demagogy, and that is something about which I do not know very much. It may be demagogy, and I am willing to sit at the feet of the gentleman from Georgia when it comes to exercising that gentle art. I do not know much about it. [Laughter.]

But let us see the situation. It is a dangerous one. There is not an industry in the United States that has not responded to the patriotic appeal made to it and increased its production. I can speak more of agriculture, because I know more about it. The President in a proclamation, as I recall it, called upon the farmers of the United States to increase the food supply of the world. They did it. They did it with reference to corn, one of the greatest of agricultural products. They did it with reference to oats; they did it with reference to poultry; they did it with reference to hogs; they did it with reference to cattle; they did it with reference to rye; they did it with reference to barley; they did it with reference to everything. Corn had been selling at $1.45 a bushel, and yet within the last two or three weeks it has fallen 40 cents a bushel. They produced this enormous crop to feed the peoples of the world. They went to the expense of added machinery, of added tractors, of added horsepower, of added everything else that was necessary.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVER. I am sorry I can not. I have only four minutes. The principle of this bill, carried to its logical conclusion, would be to confer upon the Secretary of Agriculture the power to ascertain those losses and to make them good. If you pass this conference report in its present form, I say to you that, as the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, I would feel disposed when the wheat bill comes on the floor of this House to include in it a provision for taking care of the losses of the farmers of this country who, responding to patriotic impulses, increased their production and must thereby suffer for it. [Applause.] I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question now?

Mr. LEVER. If I have the time.

Mr. HARDY. Does not the gentleman recognize the vast difference between a general appeal and a straight agreement?

Mr. LEVER. I do not regard this as an agreement.

Mr. GORDON. There never was any agreement.

Mr. HAMLIN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] must concede that they could not make any agreement.

Mr. GORDON. They had no authority to do it.

Mr. HAMLIN. They had no authority, and they could not make an agreement.

Mr. HARDY. The difference is that there was an agreement, and the gentleman talks about a general appeal.

Mr. HAMLIN. There could not be an agreement.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, during the four minutes I ask not to be interrupted. Now, gentlemen, these two propositions are as wide apart as the poles. Under the national-defense act the President of the United States had the right to go out and buy munitions, had the right to go out and order munitions, had the right to go out and order munitions without limit, and he did so. Some of these contracts were not entered into as required by law and therefore they came to Congress with a proposition to authorize the Secretary of War to settle up certain claims which had arisen in the attempt to produce munitions under authority granted to the President, and by order of the President and his subordinates, and thereupon the bill goes over to the Senate and they tack on section 5, which proposes to make the Secretary of the Interior a distributing agency for paying a lot of mining prospectors who went into the business without authority from any person on the face of the earth. Of course, it would authorize them to pay if ordered by the Shipping Board, or the War Trade Board, or the Emergency Fleet Corporation, or all the different other agencies, not one of whom had any authority to authorize anybody to go out and prospect for manganese or pyrites. And furthermore the attempt to settle and adjust munitions contracts was to settle any just contract with the Government for supplies which the Government had authorized to be purchased, that they intended to purchase and in fact did purchase. These minerals were not to be provided for the Government. The Government never intended to acquire any minerals.

The bill that was introduced and authorized that sort of thing to be done was pulled and hauled around the Senate and the House, and when finally enacted into law on October 5, 1918, it limited and restricted the power necessary to provide the minerals to an actual shortage which must be found to exist and announced by proclamation of the President. The President had no authority to enter into a contract for mining unless he issued the proclamation, and there never was any proclamation issued by the President, because no shortage was found to exist, so that the President never had authority to make any contracts.

Mr. STEAGALL. Was there ever any agreement made by the Government under that bill?

Mr. GORDON. No.

Mr. STEAGALL. Did anyone ever have the power to make an agreement under that bill?

Mr. GORDON. No; no one had the power, not even the President of the United States, because he did not find any shortage, and, as a matter of fact, there was no shortage. They claim that they have a lot of these minerals that they can not sell, and that is the reason that the President never authorized these contracts.

Mr. ROSE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. If section 5 is of any value at all, does not the gentleman think that it should be unlimited?

Mr. GORDON. They talked about limiting this to $50,000,000. But if the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to favor any mining prospector who comes in, the blue sky will be the limit. [Laughter.] Of course, Congress is not going to pay $50,000,000 of these claims and then turn down other claims that are exactly as good. Why, all the fellows that did not go to war will have a claim. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in five minutes all one can do is to say I indorse—where you do indorse—what has been said. I indorse the statement of facts that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] has made, and I indorse his gesticulations. [Laughter.] I also indorse what the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS], the gentleman in charge of the conference report, has said—namely, that it was advertised in the newspapers and they were appealed to for months and months to do that and this and the other.

Mr. FIELDS. Will the gentleman yield? I know the gentleman does not want to misrepresent me.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly.

Mr. FIELDS. I stated that no provision based on such advertisements was provided for in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Where is it provided for by law? I have here the law of October 5, 1918. It does not confer power on any fleet corporation or any other commission or upon the Secretary of the Interior. The only paragraph conferring power is one conferring it on the President. Has the President ever given power to anybody? [Applause.]

It is not proclaimed that he has. There was no necessity for it. Why, you take the development of coal and everything that went with it—all kinds of things during this war—and it has been remarkable. It has come by leaps and bounds, to be paid for by the Government when the Government gets the coal, and by you and me when we want to keep warm.

Now, mind you, the first part of this bill up to section 5 of the conference report is guarded. There must be a contract by somebody who is authorized to make it. The statute provides for certain things to be done before the contract should be signed—that was in normal times; but under pressure the contract was made by wire or by letter. This bill only waives on proper proof the formal execution of the contract in writing.

Where the contract is established in point of fact, then the Secretary of War has the power to fix the amount, and if the party, after full investigation, does not accept that amount, he can go to the courts. The courts are utilized. You can bring suit in the Court of Claims if you choose. You would have to establish your contract if you did. But how about this? The Secretary of the Interior—a very excellent gentleman, and I have great admiration for him and for his great ability—will find himself up a stump when he comes to consider the fore part of this section 5 as agreed upon. There does not have to be any contract, but if a fellow has been encouraged——

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. Does not this provide that there should be an agreement? Is not that a contract?

Mr. CANNON. It does not provide that there shall be an agreement.

Mr. HARDY. It so reads.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, express or implied.

Mr. HARDY. That is still an agreement, is it not?

Mr. CANNON. With whom? Who has the authority to make it? Nobody but the President has the authority to make it, and now you are going to say——

Mr. HARDY. But, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman——

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the gentleman will have to excuse me, as I have only a moment longer. If somebody would go on his own motion, somebody from the Bureau of Mines, or would write a letter to Sam, Tom, Jim, or Jake that we are going to need pyrites and manganese and all that kind of thing under the law of October 5, 1918, the President, and the President only, had the power to make contracts, and I am informed that he never made a contract under that act and never authorized the Secretary of the Interior or any other person to make contracts for him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Let us cut this thing off right behind the ears. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, how does the time now stand?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has one minute remaining and the gentleman from Kentucky six minutes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield to me for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserved one minute in which to offer the motion to recommit, but I believe I have that privilege anyway, and I yield three-quarters of a minute to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, what I wanted the gentleman to yield for was to ask him a question. I see in this section 5 that it authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to adjust these contracts, express or implied, but it does not say with whom those contracts must have been made. If that provision of the section should state that the contracts must have been made with the United States Government, or with some authorized agent of the United States Government, then it would be hedged about with some desirable restrictions, but if the gentleman will read the language he will find it is broad enough to cover any express or implied agreement made with anybody in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Oh, no; it would not. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of discussion here predicated upon a false premise. Many gentlemen do not seem to understand the situation in which the owners of mining properties find themselves. These gentlemen who had properties containing manganese and chrome and pyrites had not been operating them for many years, because they could not operate them profitably against the competition of the producers in foreign countries. We were getting all those ores from Rhodesia and New Caledonia. The foreign supply was cut off or in danger of being cut off. I am informed that the Secretary of the Interior sent for the men personally who owned these properties and said to them that there was danger to the country if we did not continue to procure those ores so necessary to the production of ordnance and munitions. They replied to him: "We can not produce them in competition with the foreign producers," and were told that if they would go ahead and help save the country in that regard they would be taken care of by the Government. It was an implied agreement with the men who owned the mining properties when they were asked by authorized officers of our Government to put up their money to produce these ores. They knew that they could not produce them in competition with foreign producers. They were informed that every pound of chrome produced in this country would help release tonnage that was so necessary for the transportation of soldiers and supplies. They declined to go ahead until they were assured that if they did go ahead they would get remuneration from the Government, whose needs they were trying to supply. The entire amount involved in this matter is about four and a half million dollars. These people in good faith followed the request of an executive officer of this Government. They came to the aid of the Government, and in all decency, in all equity, and in all good faith they ought to be treated fairly by the Government.

Much sympathy is expressed for the farmers of the country. I believe that when any producer in any line of production in this country was told by the Government officials to go ahead and produce for the use of the Government in its efforts to win the war, an adjustment of his claim ought to be made. It is not fair to say to these men, after they have put up hundreds of thousands of dollars, "You have no claim, you must pocket your loss." I know one concern out in my community that put up many hundreds of thousands of dollars in developing a manganese plant. They had no need to do it; they did not have to put their money for that purpose, but they were requested by the Interior Department to do it; and now to deny them a fair compensation for the money they expended or even the return of their money in their investment, seems to me to be dishonest, even if it be done on the part of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. No; I can not yield. I was one of the conferees, and we heard a great deal about advertisements inducing men to put up their money. In order to prevent that class of claims being presented we expressly provide that there must have been an agreement, either express or implied, with the men who had the mining properties. Not a single case can be adjudicated unless there has been that kind of an agreement.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following motion to recommit, and on that I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] unless somebody more fully qualified demanded the right of recognition.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is satisfactory to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Wisconsin against the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am against the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Dead against it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Dead.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky on ordering the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers a motion to recommit, and on that demands the previous question. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD moves to recommit the conference report on the bill H. R. 13274 to the committee of conference, with instructions to the managers on the part of the House not to agree to section 7 of the Senate amendment in any form.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to recommit.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WINGO and Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes 47.

Mr. KAHN and Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The two gentlemen from California make the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 214, nays 117, answered "present" 6, not voting 92, as follows:

THE ARMY.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15835, with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Army appropriation bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15835) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday, a point of order had been reserved by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to this paragraph——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit a request if I can get the attention of the committee. I ask unanimous consent to pass for the present the items on the subject of Air Service and the Bureau of Aircraft Production, beginning on page 9 and ending on page 15, with the idea that I propose to offer a substitute a little later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to pass by the portions of the bill indicated for the present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we could not hear what the gentleman indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the sections proposed to be passed over.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DENT asks unanimous consent to pass the paragraph headed "Air Service (Aeronautics)," page 9, lines 6 to 25, inclusive, all of page 10, and lines 1 to 16, inclusive, on page 11; and "Bureau of Aircraft Production," beginning on line 17, page 11, and ending in line 10, page 15.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the request, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. That the sections indicated may be passed for the present. The chairman of the committee indicated that a substitute would be offered hereafter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What does "the present" mean? I am obliged to go away to attend a conference, and I would like to be here at the proper time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama mean after we have completed the bill?

Mr. DENT. I am perfectly willing to wait until the end of the bill and then return to it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to be here when it comes up. I am obliged to be away.

Mr. DENT. I will agree not to bring it up until we complete the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman enlarges his request that the sections be taken up at the conclusion of the reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I understand it is the purpose of the gentleman to pass over the language so as to formulate it in different shape?

Mr. DENT. Yes; to meet the objections made yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I desire to reserve points of order on the matter asked to be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves all points of order on the matter asked to be passed over. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

PROVOST MARSHAL GENERAL'S OFFICE.

COMPLETION, PRESERVATION, AND TRANSPORTATION OF THE RECORDS.

For all expenses necessary for the completion, preservation, and transportation of the records pertaining to the draft under the act of May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," $25,000.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There has just come over the wire and received by the press gallery the first draft of the constitution of the new league of nations. All of it has not been received, but a large portion has. I desire in my time to have read just two articles, the one touching arbitration and the other touching disarmament.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the matter sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

ART. VIII. The high contracting parties recognize the principle that the maintenance of peace will require the reduction of national armaments to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations, having special regard to the geographical situation and circumstances of each State; and the executive council shall formulate plans for effecting such reduction.

The executive council shall also determine for the consideration and action of the several Governments what military equipment and armament is fair and reasonable in proportion to the scale of forces laid down in the program of disarmament; and these limits, when adopted, shall not be exceeded without the permission of the executive council.

The high contracting parties agree that the manufacture by private enterprise of munitions and implements of war lends itself to grave objections, and direct the executive council to advise how the evil effects attendant upon such manufacture can be prevented, due regard being had to the necessities of these countries which are not able to manufacture for themselves the munitions and implements of war necessary for their safety.

The high contracting parties undertake in no way to conceal from each other the condition of such of their industries as are capable of being adapted to warlike purposes or the scale of their armaments, and agree that there shall be full and frank interchange of information as to their military and naval program.

ART. IX. A permanent commission shall be constituted to advise the league on the execution of the provisions of Article VIII and on military and naval questions generally.

ART. X. The high contracting parties undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all States members of the league. In case of any such aggression, or in case of any threat or danger of such aggression, the executive council shall advise upon the means by which the obligation shall be fulfilled.

ART. XI. Any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the high contracting parties or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the league, and the high contracting parties reserve the right to take any action to safeguard the peace of nations.

It is hereby also declared and agreed to be the friendly right of each of the high contracting parties to draw the attention of the body of delegates or of the executive council to any circumstances affecting international intercourse which threaten to disturb international peace or the good understanding between nations, upon which peace depends.

ART. XII. The high contracting parties agree that should disputes arise between them which can not be adjusted by the ordinary processes of diplomacy, they will in no case resort to war without previously submitting the questions and matters involved either to arbitration or to inquiry by the executive council and until three months after the award by the arbitrators or a recommendation by the executive council; and that they will not even then resort to war as against a member of the league which complies with the award of the arbitrators or the recommendation of the executive council.

In any case, under this article the award of the arbitrators shall be made within a reasonable time, and the recommendation of the executive council shall be made within six months after the submission of the dispute.

ART. XIII. The high contracting parties, whenever any dispute or difficulty shall arise between them which they recognize to be suitable for submission to arbitration, and which can not be satisfactorily settled by diplomacy, will submit the whole matter to arbitration. For this purpose the court of arbitration to which the case is referred shall be the court agreed on by the parties or stipulated in any convention existing between them. The high contracting parties agree that they will carry out in full good faith any award that may be rendered. In the event of any failure to carry out the award, the executive council shall propose what steps can best be taken to give effect thereto.

ART. XIV. The executive council shall formulate plans for the establishment of a permanent court of international justice, and this court shall, when established, be competent.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

PAY, ETC., OF THE ARMY—PAY OF OFFICERS.

For pay of officers of the line, $36,910,264.

For pay of the officers of staff corps and departments, $31,775,053.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to inquire whether this item was carried in former bills. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON]. He may have the information desired. The item is, "For pay of the officers of staff corps and departments, $31,775,053."

Mr. TILSON. I am not sure as to the form that was carried in. I thought the gentleman had reference to the pay of warrant officers in the mine-planter service.

Mr. KAHN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that there are two classes of officers—officers of the line, who have charge of the fighting forces of the Army, and the officers of the staff corps and departments, having charge of the administrative and supply branch of the Army. I am under the impression that we have appropriated for them heretofore separately.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am quite advised as to the distinction between the line and the staff. I did not find this item in last year's bill, and I am inquiring whether they were heretofore carried under a lump-sum appropriation in general phraseology.

Mr. DENT. They were appropriated for under a lump-sum appropriation, and the committee adopted this plan for this year.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a member of the committee who knows how many staff officers we have as compared with line officers. I know that you have pay for officers of the line $36,910,264, and pay of the staff corps and departments $31,775,053, nearly as much money for the staff officers as for the officers of the line.

Mr. DENT. I can give the gentleman the figures in one moment. Or I will supply them later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of the officers, Bureau of Insular Affairs, $15,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Can the chairman of the committee inform me how the $15,000 on page 16, lines 5 and 6, is distributed in that office? There are three—a chief, an assistant chief, and a chief clerk. How is the $15,000 divided between those three?

Mr. DENT. There is the chief of the bureau, who gets the pay of a brigadier general. There is an assistant chief, and there is a clerk.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. That does not define what the clerk gets. It is divided. I want to know what the clerk is paid.

Mr. DENT. The pay of a brigadier general is $6,000. The assistant chief, as I recollect, gets the pay of a colonel, which is $4,000. That makes $10,000. The remaining $5,000 goes to the clerk.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The balance goes to the clerk?

Mr. DENT. That is my recollection. I think I am right about that.

Mr. KAHN. The brigadier general gets $6,000 as base pay, but he is entitled to longevity pay, which would probably increase that amount somewhat.

Mr. DENT. In other words, we simply take care of the pay of a brigadier general, a colonel, and a clerk in the office.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he can inform the House as to how many instances there are in the War Department where officers are detailed to perform the work of chief clerk or to any other civilian position?

Mr. DENT. As to how many instances?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. DENT. No. I can not inform the gentleman how many instances

Mr. STAFFORD. It is the usual practice with other departments and bureaus to provide for a chief clerk and employ a chief clerk from the civilian roll. Even in the War Department we have a chief clerk provided for in the Inspector General's office and in the Judge Advocate General's office and in the Signal Office at salaries ranging from $2,000 to $2,500. Why should the distinction be made that in this office they detail an officer who draws a salary, maybe, of $5,000?

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman please repeat what particular section or paragraph he is calling attention to?

Mr. STAFFORD. In response to the inquiry made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON], I understood the gentleman to say that in the office of the Bureau of Insular Affairs there is an officer, a colonel or a general, detailed to the position of chief clerk.

Mr. DENT. Oh, no. I did not say that. I said that we provide for the pay of the chief of the bureau, who has the detail rank of a brigadier general, and an assistant, who has the rank of a colonel, and then a clerk in addition; and that covers the $15,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. What does the clerk receive?

Mr. DENT. The clerk would receive the difference between $15,000 and the aggregate pay of a brigadier general and a colonel.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think it is good legislative practice to provide for a departmental clerk in one bureau in this bill when we provide for most of the civilian force in the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman that that has been carried in this bill for so many years that I am surprised that somebody has not raised this question before. But it has been carried for years and years in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been carried in a form that was not detectable except to the eagle eye of perhaps some member of the Committee on Military Affairs who is advised in advance.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to.

Mr. KAHN. The Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, as I recall, is a member of the General Staff, and the General Staff has always had its clerks supplied in the Army appropriation bill. On the next page of the bill, on page 17, the gentleman will find near the bottom of the page a provision for the pay of those clerks, and I presume that the clerk in the office of the Insular Affairs Bureau is paid under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the very learned gentleman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], I beg to say to him and to the House that that is hardly an explanation of why a clerk should be carried in this Army appropriation bill. I wish to inform him, although I doubt whether this is information to him, even, that the office force of the Bureau of Insular Affairs consists of a law officer, chief clerk, and many clerks of class 4 and many clerks of class 3 and of class 2 and of class 1, and some at $1,000 are carried in the legislative appropriation bill.

The legislative appropriation bill covers all the civilian employees connected with the War Department. Here is an instance where you are paying for a civilian employee out of a lump sum, without any control by Congress as to the amount—none whatsoever. I hardly think the gentleman has given a reason why that should be continued.

Mr. MANN. Does this authorize the payment of a civilian? It says "officers."

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the explanation made by the chairman of the committee [Mr. DENT], as I understood it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that his time be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman can answer the query propounded by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. McKENZIE. As I understand it, and I believe I am correct in my understanding, this paragraph provides for the pay of officers of the staff in the department and has no reference to or anything to do with civilian employees, but is absolutely confined to the pay of officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I will direct the inquiry anew to the chairman of the committee, whether any amount of this money is paid to civilian employees?

Mr. DENT. I was mistaken about that. There are three officers.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then let the chairman explain why he changes the phraseology so as to provide generally for the pay of officers when last year he specified for the pay of three officers.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to making it three. I offer an amendment, in line 5, page 16, to strike out the word "the" and insert the word "three."

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 16, line 5, after the word "of," where is occurs the first time, strike out the word "the" and insert the word "three."

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question about that?

Mr. DENT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It was explained that the chief is a brigadier general, getting $6,000, but that, in addition to that, he is entitled to longevity pay, and no doubt that is true of the other officers there. Now, it will not necessarily be the same officers all the time.

Mr. DENT. No.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Another officer coming in would not have the same longevity pay.

Mr. DENT. I do not think this includes the longevity pay. That is provided for in a separate item.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question, for my information, about line 1, pay of officers of the Officers' Reserve Corps. Do the members of the Officers' Reserve Corps draw pay in time of peace?

Mr. DENT. Only when they are called into the service.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Is this for those officers of the Reserve Corps who were called into the service and are now in the service?

Mr. DENT. When they are detailed for some particular duty.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. They do not draw any pay otherwise?

Mr. DENT. No; not at all. They can not under the law.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The explanation was made of that item that the law contemplates that every year there will be a certain amount of training of reserve officers, and they may be called in for service in reconstruction during the year, and during that time they will be paid. That item was put in there to pay them in that event.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire in reference to the Aviation Service, and I move to strike out the last two words for that purpose.

First, I will say that I note that this bill provides for an Army of 28,579 officers. From my calculation and what little I know about the military service—I do not claim to have any special information—I can not figure out how they need that many officers for an Army of that size—28,579 officers for an Army of 509,909 enlisted men. I want to direct the attention of the committee to what I believe is growing up in the Army—the practice of having it top-heavy with officers. A minute ago the inquiry was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin as to whether there are not now in the War Department, holding strictly clerical positions, commissioned officers in uniform. Of course, we all know that the War Department is full to overflowing at this time with men sitting around in uniform, and in most cases doing very little, if any, work. In fact, they are interrupting the stenographers and taking their time, and they are not doing much work either but entertaining the officers, as a general rule.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that a great many bands are being maintained in different places down there that have nothing to do except play for the officers?

Mr. DYER. That may be true. I do not know about that. But, Mr. Chairman, I want to invite the attention of the committee to some figures that I have had prepared by the department itself with reference to the Bureau of Aeronautics.

I do not know whether they have too many officers, but it looks to me as though they have more officers than they need. I think the Committee on Military Affairs, in asking us to vote for an Army of 500,000 men with all of these officers, ought to be able to tell us whether they need all of them or whether or not they think some of them should not be left off.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The only information which the Committee on Military Affairs have is that we have a table of organization, and that a certain organization requires a specific number of officers. The statement was made to us by the Chief of Staff that an Army of 509,000 enlisted men, organized under the table adopted by the United States Army, requires exactly that number of officers.

Mr. DYER. I have no doubt the information was given to the committee, but I believe that if the committee will take the trouble to investigate the situation it will find that this is 6,000 or 7,000 more officers than they need for the strength of that sized Army.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Let me say for the information of the gentleman that we have now in the Regular Army 10,664 officers. These men are permanently in the service. If the House should decline to appropriate for, or to enact this legislation providing for the establishment of officers for an Army of 500,000 men, and stand squarely on the national-defense act they would only provide for 10,654 officers.

Mr. DYER. Then the committee does not expect us to authorize the commissioning of 28,570 officers, but they only ask for the difference between what they have and what they want. Is that the fact?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes.

Mr. DYER. I think still if you add them up you will find that you have too many officers. Now, with reference to aviation, I have a statement here showing the number of officers and number of men in some of these fields of aviation. I do not know whether the proportion is right or not. I am not a military man, and I know little about it. The gentlemen on the committee are all military men and understand, no doubt, whether there are too many or not. We have a little field over here called the Bolling Field, in Anacostia, where there are 34 officers and 189 enlisted men. Is that too many officers, or should we have an officer for every enlisted man? In Brooks Field, San Antonio, Tex., there are 44 officers to 249 men. Probably at this place there are not enough officers. I would be glad to have the committee investigate and say whether or not we have fields full of officers and whether or not the few men that are being kept there are to give these officers a chance to hold their commissions.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The gentleman is aware that in aviation most of the fliers are officers?

Mr. DYER. Are not the cadets fliers?

Mr. ANTHONY. Most of the fliers are officers.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman from Kansas is a very well posted man on this matter and I want to ask him a question. Take for instance the aviation general supply depots. Do they fly there?

Mr. ANTHONY. No; I agree with the gentleman that many of these branches are largely over-officered.

Mr. DYER. Aviation general supply depots—they do not do any flying, but they are supposed to look out and guard the little Government property which they have there. Now, down here at Little Rock, Ark., they have, according to the report of the War Department, 17 officers and 274 men. Most of those boys down there, or many of them, are from my home section of the country. I have had occasion, and others have had, to make inquiries in reference to their discharge, and they tell us that they can not let those boys go under any conditions until they are replaced by men enlisted under the new reorganized Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DYER. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Now, take this field at San Antonio, Tex. There are 13 officers and 299 men. Los Angeles has 5 officers and 45 men. I do not think there are enough officers there. There ought to be one for every man.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Has the gentleman any information as to the character of the work being done by these enlisted men at Little Rock?

Mr. DYER. They are doing mostly laboring work. As I understand it—I may be misinformed—but my information is that they are not doing any work except to look after and guard the property, clean up the grounds, and so forth, that the Government has there. They keep them there for that purpose only. The Government could hire laborers for that purpose. I do not know what else they are doing and why they are keeping them there is a question, unless it is to keep these officers in their positions. These men did not enlist for doing laboring work, but to fight the Germans.

The table I have here shows that at all these fields they have a total of 4,330 officers and 34,859 enlisted men. In other words, there are aviation fields of all kinds, including supply depots, where they are guarding property—soldiers working as common laborers—air-service depots, schools of military aeronautics, and so forth; at all of them they have an average of one officer to six men.

I ask the chairman of the committee or any other member of the committee if that is not too few officers for so many men? Only one officer is provided for each six men in the Bureau of Aeronautics. Should they not have more officers there?

Mr. DENT. I did not quite catch the question.

Mr. DYER. The table I have here of the Bureau of Aeronautics shows that in all the depots and stations and flying fields scattered throughout this country, there are 4,330 officers, 1,644 cadets, and 24,859 enlisted men. That provides one commissioned officer outside of the cadets for every six enlisted men. Are there enough officers in the Bureau of Aeronautics? Should there not be one officer for every enlisted man?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Missouri knows that this whole paragraph is comparatively a new proposition in this country. I can not tell the gentleman whether that is too many men or not. He can answer the question just as well as I can.

Mr. DYER. Let me ask the gentleman about lines 7 and 8, which have just been read. It is provided there that for aviation increase there shall be $1,000,000 appropriated. Why is it necessary to vote an increased amount of money? What is the necessity for that?

Mr. DENT. I will ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SHALLENBERGER] to answer that question.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, the military law provides that aviators who fly and are commissioned as military aviators, shall receive 25 per cent additional pay, because of the hazard of flying, and this million dollars is supposed to take care of that additional pay.

Mr. DYER. Can the gentleman tell me in how many fields in the United States now there is any flying going on?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The law would not be affected by that proposition anyway. I could not tell the gentleman. I presume that flying is going on more or less in all of the fields.

Mr. DYER. If we are going to increase the pay of those who fly, we ought to know whether anybody is flying.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When a man is once commissioned as a military aviator he receives his pay just the same as he would receive the pay if commissioned as any other officer.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to be understood as offering any criticism of the Bureau of Aeronautics or the War Department or the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. Like a great many other Members I have very little information about military matters. We are called upon to vote for these appropriations and for increases in the Army, and we ask for information from the War Department and get figures showing that in this bureau concerning which the item has just been read there is one officer now commissioned for every six enlisted men.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. I have asked for information as to what these fields are costing the Government at this time to maintain. Figures at Love Field, Tex., show that the cost per month now, since the armistice was signed, amounts to $100,312.72. They have there 50 officers and 700 enlisted men. I do not know whether they are doing any flying or not. Park Field, Tenn., is another one of these fields, but they do not give us the number of officers and men. I do not know why. Perhaps it is because of the comparison, which is worse than the one given above. The cost of maintaining Park Field, Tenn., to-day, since the armistice was signed, with a very few men, amounts to $94,856.48. They say they have 75 planes at Park Field, 75 at Love Field, and out in California, at Mather Field, where they have 75 planes, it is costing the Government $96,710.22 a month for operation. I call upon gentlemen representing those States to tell me whether or not in these days, when we are passing these enormous tax bills, they think we are justified in calling on the people, who are almost paying with blood these taxes, to maintain these expensive fields, where they have 50 officers to 700 enlisted men. Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment that there ought to be some investigation and inquiry by the Committee on Military Affairs to inform the House as to the Bureau of Aeronautics, whether they are operating economically now, as well as the other divisions of the War Department. We ought not to be asked to appropriate money with our eyes shut and with no information as to the needs touching these important matters.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman from Missouri understood that my request was that both the paragraphs here in regard to aeronautics should go over until the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would not the gentleman let this go over also?

Mr. DYER. I was addressing my remarks to lines 7 and 8, where it provides for aviation increase, believing that in view of the facts that I have received from the Bureau of Aeronautics in the last two days we are not justified in voting that increase for the pay of officers. How many officers there are in Washington sitting around at desks I do not know, but in the camps, in the field there is one officer for every six men, and they are keeping the enlisted men there to do laboring work and will not discharge them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman makes the point that we are overofficered in the Army?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And it may be due to that fact that there is so much hesitancy in discharging the men who serve under those officers.

Mr. DYER. That is my judgment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The inference being that the officers would like to remain and hold their jobs, and therefore they do not like to lose the Army.

Mr. DYER. That seems to be the trouble with the aviation camps. I am seeking light on the subject.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This million dollars to which the gentleman is objecting, as I have endeavored to state, is a matter fixed by law. When an aviator has proved that he is entitled to that flying pay, he gets it. If he does not prove that he is a flyer, he does not get it.

Mr. DYER. There is money already available for paying aviators.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. There is no money available for that extra pay unless you put it in the bill.

Mr. DYER. Have they not been paid all of the time?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They have been paid by an item carried in the general appropriation bill, the same as we are doing here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I include the memorandum referred to and furnished me yesterday by The Adjutant General of the Army, as follows:

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph, unless the gentleman will consent to have it go over and be considered with the other aviation paragraphs. I take it that this paragraph, increase of aviation officers, Signal Corps, $1,000,000, is in anticipation of the two $10,000,000 appropriations that have gone over for further consideration?

Mr. DENT. I do not think this has anything in the world to do with it.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. This is pay fixed by law for aviators.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. They are already in the service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They are commissioned as aviators. They do not get this pay unless they prove they are competent military aviators.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This $1,000,000 is to pay men who are already enlisted?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. For the extra hazard of flying.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And not in anticipation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion and move to strike out the last word. There is a great deal in what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] said a moment ago about these aviation fields in Texas. I have been getting considerable information on that line also, and had some difficulty in getting enlisted men released because the officers were obliged to keep an army in order to hold their status. Some of the tales which have been brought up from the Texas camps remind us of Hoyt's pretty comedy, "The Milk White Flag," where every man who came into the club and who drank Scotch was an officer, and only one private held the army of officers together. We are all in sympathy with what the Army as a whole has done and is trying to do, but when the mothers and the wives of our soldiers are crying out for them to return to their duties at home, and we find in many cases that some lieutenant or captain or major who desires to remain in the service in spite of the fact that the Government is incurring the greatest burden ever imposed upon it in all history, is standing in the way to hold down his job, we have reason to complain. If this were a new appropriation, contemplating new service, I certainly would move to strike it out, because, as I indicated the other day, in my judgment the time has come to stop these excessive appropriations for maintaining new and expensive establishments for war, now that we approach a time of peace.

Mr. DENT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman voted for the conscription bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I did.

Mr. DENT. And you have got that Army?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DENT. And you have got to get rid of that Army?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman suggest any way by which we can get rid of it more rapidly than the War Department is doing?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have been thinking over that very seriously, and, after reading the testimony taken by the Senate committee yesterday with regard to the barbarity of certain American officers, shame upon them, those of their kind, who have no regard for the flesh and blood of the sons of America! I would go so far as to impeach some of those in power [applause], and as one Member of Congress I pledge myself to keep an eye upon this situation, so that we may say to human brutes, those who are parading in the uniform of the United States, that we shall take them by the neck, even as they have taken our soldier-citizens——

Mr. DENT. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And, if need be, incarcerate them or give them the same kind of punishment they have been dealing out to these helpless men, these true, courageous young Americans whose lips have been shut because of military restrictions, and who will have no voice against inhuman treatment until the President proclaims peace or until they are discharged and can tell their Members of Congress what happened to them under a system which seems to have prevailed under the direction of certain brutal commanders. [Applause.] Of course, I do not say that this spirit of brutality, this inconsiderate autocracy, prevailed throughout the Army of the United States—that would be unfair and unjust—but I do say that when I voted a boy into the service of the United States through the conscription bill I did not vote him into voluntary slavery where he would be so controlled by the fellow who happened to be temporarily in command. I voted him into the service for his flag and for his country, where I expected the man in control, the man who wore the shoulder straps, to respect the sentiment and traditions of the United States and to give that boy a fighting chance. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I yield to my friend from Louisiana.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that officers who illtreat soldiers in the service ought to be punished.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am glad the gentleman indorses——

Mr. LAZARO. I also agree with the gentleman when he says the boys ought to come home as soon as possible. Now, the question I want to ask the gentleman is this: The gentleman voted for war and for the draft, did he not?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; because the President asked for it and said it was necessary to have our support.

Mr. LAZARO. Was the gentleman right in voting for war and for the draft?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not have voted for it if it had not been right.

Mr. LAZARO. Is the war over?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is not—legislatively.

Mr. LAZARO. What is the gentleman's judgment as to what our duty is over there as to bringing the men back?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman this: The gentleman and those who think as he does have an idea that they will put the "gentleman from Pennsylvania" on the rack by an interrogation like that. Let me ask the gentleman from Louisiana if he sat in a committee day by day, where he observed that as boys were being held in the ranks to bolster up the financial and internal differences of other nations while his own country was being gutted of its resources, would he stand for keeping American soldiers over there, or would he attempt to get them back to their own country to attend to their own business? What would he do under the circumstances? Would he stand for his own country or for the chimera of a world democracy?

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman permit me to anwswer his question now?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Of course.

Mr. LAZARO. I would not keep a boy in the service a minute longer than is necessary; but after having voted for the war and a draft I would not slander my Government and the War Department until this thing was settled right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman thinks I am slandering the War Department when I pick out human brutes in it, the gentleman is shooting over the mark. If an officer—a whisky-soaked colonel, for instance, having the American flag wrapped around him and with all the protection it affords him in a foreign clime—deliberately sends young men to the front under circumstances that mean certain death, while he runs to the rear, and then refuses promotion to those who were brave enough to do their duty, I think we might take that colonel to task. Or if good officers are held back and incompetent——

Mr. LAZARO. I would go as far as the gentleman——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then the gentleman would go as far as impeachment when the times comes?

Mr. LAZARO. I would certainly do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would not stop at the lieutenant over there, but I would go right up the line.

Mr. LAZARO. But I do not believe in indicting the whole Government or the War Department because some man does not do his duty.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Neither do I, and I have not done so. The gentleman, however, seems afraid to criticize. I am not afraid, and I will continue to do it when I think it proper in justice to the fighting man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we are under the general subject of the pay of officers of the Army, which is followed by the pay of enlisted men of the Army, two items containing a number of different paragraphs each. I would like to get a little information, if I can, upon what basis the appropriations proposed in the bill are made. What is the size of the Army as to officers on which is based $36,000,000 of an appropriation for line officers, $31,000,000 for staff and department officers and various other officers, and $137,000,000 for pay of enlisted men of the line and $61,000,000 for enlisted men of the staff corps and departments?

What is the basis as to the size of the Army and the number of officers and enlisted men upon which this appropriation is founded? Is it contemplated that there will have to be a large deficiency in the end to supply deficiencies in the pay?

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman, as I thought I stated in the report and in my opening speech——

Mr. MANN. I read the report and the gentleman's statement on the floor——

Mr. DENT. That there are to be 28,579 officers and 509,909 enlisted men.

Mr. MANN. Very well. Let us see. No one pretends, so far as I can learn—and I will be glad to be advised differently—that the Army will be reduced to the number of 28,000 officers and 509,000 men by the 1st of July.

Mr. DENT. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Well, then, if the appropriation proposed is based upon an Army of 28,000 officers and 510,000 enlisted men for the next fiscal year, and you have more than that at the beginning of the fiscal year, one of two things is quite evident—either that you will not appropriate money enough, or there will not be this number of officers and men at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. DENT. That is very true, and that is the theory upon which the War Department has suggested that we make this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Ah, not at all. Let us see if that is correct or not. If it is conceded that at the beginning of the fiscal year in the demobilization of the Army you will have more than 28,000 officers and more than 510,000 enlisted men, then if you are going to make this appropriation sufficient you could not have that many at the end of the year, and hence ought not to provide for that many at the end. If the Army is to be reduced, so that in the course of the fiscal year 1920 the average of officers shall be 28,000 and the average of enlisted men shall be 510,000, as is suggested by the appropriation offered, then there is no need of authorizing that number of officers and men to be in the Army at the end of the year, and yet that is what the legislative provision of this bill does. Now, how many officers and men are expected to be in the service at the end of the fiscal year?

Mr. DENT. Of course, nobody can answer that question.

Mr. MANN. Well, somebody has answered it by making an appropriation here which they say is sufficient. Of course, it may be a guess, but it is, nevertheless, an answer. Here is an appropriation based upon an average of 28,000 officers and 510,000 enlisted men. Now, we know that there will be more than that to begin with, and if there are more than that to begin with, the appropriation assumes that there will be less than that to end with. Now, it does not need an authorization to cut off a lot of the officers now in the Army and then gradually to have that number at the end of the fiscal year. It does not need this authorization to have them at the beginning of the fiscal year.

What I want to know is what is the proposed size of the Army? The two parts of this bill do not agree. If we are to have an Army with 28,000 officers and 510,000 men authorized and then fill the Army full, they will have that number at the end of the fiscal year, in which case the appropriation here is not sufficient. Hence, it is not a candid statement to the House. It would lead the House to believe that appropriations are being made here that will be sufficient to cover the expenses of the Army when it is supposed that it will not be sufficient in another provision of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to answer?

Mr. MANN. Yes. I am trying to get information from some gentleman who knows.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. You will understand that 500,000 enlisted men and so many officers are to be made up of voluntary enlistments. The men now in the service go out of it.

Mr. MANN. I understand all that.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Now, here: As soon as the men are enlisted under the voluntary enlistment the officers are called into the service, and not until then.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the officers are already in the service.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; you are mistaken.

Mr. MANN. They will have to be reappointed; but that is not material.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Under the voluntary enlistment plan, just as these men volunteer and are taken into the Army the officers are furnished to furnish that Army. This is providing for the volunteer Army after the men now in the service are discharged by the expiration of their enlistment. Of course, you can not tell how many you have at the beginning of that period.

Mr. MANN. You can tell how many you authorize.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. We authorize 500,000, and they are to be got just as fast and as rapidly as they can be got.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman will admit that if we get 500,000 the appropriation here is not sufficient to pay them?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes; because we can not go beyond 500,000.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that there will be more than 500,000 at the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman does not know that, he is not so well informed as I supposed he was.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is providing for the voluntary enlistment after the men in the Army now are discharged.

Mr. MANN. This bill provides for the period after this bill passes. It will be long before the Army now in existence is discharged. If they are discharged, they will never reenlist. The purpose of this bill is to induce men now in the service to enlist instead of being discharged—a proper purpose, I think. The gentleman knows that, although that is wholly beside the question that I raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I do not often do it, but I will ask for five minutes more, to see if I can get the information or the defense of the committee.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the error or disagreement, rather, in the interpretation of this bill has arisen from the fact that the War Department based their estimates upon one proposition, and the committee is asking an appropriation upon another idea.

Mr. MANN. I think very likely that is the case; but both propositions, which are conflicting, are carried in the bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The War Department came with a proposition asking for 509,000 enlisted men and twenty-eight thousand and odd officers, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] has stated, and asked for that number of men, with that program for a permanent organization. The committee did not see fit to grant that.

Mr. MANN. In the appropriation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. But they did in the legislation?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. They did, in a certain way, in the legislation.

Mr. MANN. That is what I am calling attention to.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The statement of Gen. Lord in the hearing is very definite. Asked if this appropriation was to pay for the Army in this country, he stated that it was. Asked if there would have to be provision for the Army that is now enlisted in Europe, if we did appropriate this money, he answered that this bill did not provide for the payment of the Army overseas, and he said:

If a larger force than 500,000 men are kept in service here or overseas, it means that there will be a deficiency later.

Mr. MANN. Now, let me make a remark in passing. The distinguished gentleman from Nebraska reads from the hearings before the committee, but he knows, and I know, that perhaps that is not what the officer stated before the committee, because these gentlemen who testify before the Military Committee have their testimony written up and sent to the War Department, and there it is gone over and censored. It never comes to the House the way it is given before the committee. They assume the right in the War Department to cut out what they do not like. After an officer has stated frankly before the committee what he knows, they do not permit it to go into the printed hearings unless somebody in the War Department wants it to go into the hearings. They assume the right to cut out what they do not want known publicly, a practice which ought to be frowned on and forbidden. But that is in passing. Nobody denies it.

Mr. DENT. That is done with every committee.

Mr. MANN. No, sir; not on your life, it is not. I have had experience enough in committees to know that that is not the case or the practice.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHERWOOD. With 28,000 officers for 500,000 men, how many men will that be to an officer—about 1 officer to 16 men?

Mr. MANN. That is a mere matter of computation. Probably the gentleman from Ohio knows how many officers they need. I do not know; but I want to know whether the committee is correct when I hear repeated statements made on the floor of this House that the committee is basing its appropriation and its authorization upon an average army of 500,000 men. That is what the appropriation is, but the legislation proposes not an average army of 500,000 men but an army at the end of the year of 510,000 enlisted men and at the beginning of the year of over 2,000,000 men. It makes a great difference.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I will state that if the legislative feature means that, then I am not in favor of it.

Mr. MANN. That is what the legislative feature means, as it seems to me, and it certainly says that. Why, the legislative feature authorizes the enlistment of 510,000 men to serve for a year. After they have raised that number you can not cut it down to less at the end of the year. Now, it may be desirable—I do not undertake to say—to have an army of 500,000 or 1,000,000 men at the end of the fiscal year 1920, but I never like to have my intellect imposed upon. I would like to know what we are doing while we are at it; and when they say in an appropriation bill, "We will appropriate so much money, which will cover the whole expense," and anybody with a pencil and paper can figure in a moment's time that it will not cover much more than half the expense, then I want to know about it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of the officers, Philippine Scouts, $624,004.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FIELDS: Page 16, at the end of line 9, insert:

"Provided, That no part of the funds herein appropriated shall be applied in payment of the salary of any officer of the Army of the United States who shall promulgate or cause to be promulgated any order prohibiting social intercourse between officers and enlisted men of the United States Army while not on military duty, or that will in any way establish or attempt to establish social or class distinctions between officers and men or between officers of different ranks while not on military duty: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to an officer whose only connection therewith is in obedience to an order of a superior officer."

Mr. DENT. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he offer that amendment at the end of the pay provision, instead of right following the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. FIELDS. I have inquired of some gentlemen who are better parliamentarians than myself, and they suggested that at the end of the pay of officers was the proper place, because it applies to officers only.

Mr. MANN. It might be all right there, but the gentleman does not offer it at the end of the pay of officers.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will turn to page 22, he will find a basket clause, which puts into one fund all the pay of the Army, and that seems to me to be the proper place. It says there:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous, except the appropriation for mileage to commissioned officers, contract surgeons, expert accountant, Inspector General's Department, Army field clerks, and field clerks of the Quartermaster Corps, when authorized by law, shall be disbursed and accounted for as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

If the gentleman wishes to offer his proviso at that point, it would cover all the pay items.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, at the suggestion of the gentleman, I will withhold my amendment until we reach line 11, page 22, of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I desire to offer an amendment to require the discharge of the men in the Army who prior to entering the Army were engaged in agricultural pursuits or on the farm, who make proper application for discharge on that ground. Would that sort of an amendment be in order if offered as a portion of the legislative portion of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not answer that question under a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest to the gentleman that he attach it to the seed item in the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. I want to know if I will lose the right to offer that amendment if we pass this portion of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not undertake to answer that on a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois raised an interesting question in his discussion in regard to the number of men appropriated for in this bill. It is a matter that gave the members of the committee a great deal of difficulty in trying to arrive at some satisfactory conclusion. I want to read a few paragraphs from the hearings, so that you can get the idea that the members of the committee were thinking about this matter. Gen. Lord was before the committee, and I asked him this question:

Mr. McKENZIE. Do you think we could properly provide an appropriation for a very much smaller Army in this country than 500,000 men, estimating on the pro rata basis you use, and then in addition make a lump-sum appropriation providing for the payment of men and officers in Europe? And use so much thereof as may be necessary. Would that be a proper thing to do if the committee saw fit to take that course?

Gen. LORD. That is, provide definitely for a fixed number——

Mr. McKENZIE (interposing). In this country.

Gen. LORD. And then provide for a contingent appropriation which shall be expended only for the particular purposes you enumerate, and that only such portions as were absolutely required by law for those purposes shall be expended?

Mr. McKENZIE. Yes. That would accomplish two things, the way I reason it out. First, it would limit the size of the Army in the country and require demobilization. Second, it would avoid bringing in a deficiency appropriation in order to take care of our troops in Europe. Would either of those purposes, in your judgment, meet with your approval?

Gen. LORD. I do not think I would wish to express approval or disapproval of a proposition of that sort.

Of course the general, knowing conditions in the War Department, declined to give the information on that subject. I want to say frankly to the Members of the House in regard to the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois that the Staff of the Army asked, hoped for, and desired that we fix the number of officers in the Regular Army for peace times at 28,579, and that we can provide for as many men as we see fit; but that number of officers will take care of an Army of 500,000 men.

The committee, in struggling with this proposition, fully realized that the country does not favor an Army of 500,000 men in peace times, and the members of the committee not favoring that proposition have undertaken in some way to provide temporarily for this force of 500,000 men, which they contend are necessary for the number of officers to take care of such an Army. But for one member of the committee, and I think I express the sentiments of the majority of the committee, we have undertaken, and I hope we have, such language as will limit the number of officers of the Regular Establishment to 10,664, the number now in the Regular Army as permanent officers of that establishment. If we have not, I am ready to take the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, or any other man in this House, who can bring to this committee any proposition that will make this subject so clear and definite that there will be no mistake as to what we are doing, so far as the size of the Army is concerned.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The Secretary of War came before the committee, as I now recall, in the early part of January and suggested that we would require an average army of 500,000 men for the fiscal year 1920 to keep up our engagements with foreign countries who cooperated with us in the war, and protect such fronts as are required to be protected, and for the forces needed in our insular possessions and the mainland of the United States.

The chairman of the committee and other members of the committee frequently called upon the officials of the War Department to prepare for the committee a complete statement and an estimate of what was required for the coming fiscal year. There was delay and delay and delay, and it was not until about the middle of January when we began to receive the estimates from the department. At that, the information that we received was exceedingly meager and indefinite. The committee spent hours in trying to arrive at results from the meager information we had. The committee discussed the matter of the size of our Army for the next fiscal year. It was the consensus of opinion that we ought to allow the War Department to have the 500,000 men they asked for, but only as a temporary force. Finally, I suggested to the committee that we raise such a force as the national-defense law authorized—that is, 175,000 men in peace times under the provisions of that law. That is to say, they could enlist volunteers for three-year periods of enlistment with the Regular Army to the extent of 175,000 men. The other soldiers who might be necessary to round out the number of volunteers to 500,000 could be brought into the service by volunteering under the act of May 18, 1917. I went to two men, one an active officer of the Army and another a retired officer of the Army, and told them of the suggestion. I do not think there are two men in this country familiar with military affairs who are better qualified to draft military legislation. After I had explained what I thought was the wish of the committee, the provision as we have it in the bill, or part of it at least, was drafted by one of those two officers. It was thereupon that the committee finally agreed to that provision of the bill. I think there is no difference of opinion in the committee as to what the language does. In my opinion it will be impossible to raise at any time in this country an army of 500,000 men by volunteering. I do not think it is possible to raise such an army.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If it is not possible to raise it, what is the necessity for authorizing it by legislation?

Mr. KAHN. Simply this: We will have to have a certain number of men to perform our share of the work of policing the German front for some time to come. It is the desire to bring home those men who are over there under existing laws as speedily as possible. To take their places we want volunteers. We feel that probably 200,000 or 300,000 of the men who are now on the other side of the ocean will volunteer to remain over there until this emergency is seen through, but I doubt whether we can get more than that at any time by this legislation.

Mr. MANN. If we can not get more than 200,000 or 300,000 enlisted men, is there any need of authorizing the larger number, and will there be any difficulty in getting any number of officers that we authorize, no matter if we make it 150,000?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, you can get all of the officers you want; there is no doubt about that. But under the provisions of this rider you can not appoint an officer to command until you have the men. That is one of the provisions of this legislation. It may be that we will get the entire number by volunteering. I have my doubts; but in the meantime you have got to provide their pay in this legislation, because it will be impossible to bring back from France enough men within the next two or three months to reduce the number we have over there below 1,200,000 men; and you have got to pay them in the next fiscal year. You will have to pay large numbers of our men for some time to come. We hope finally to get down to a low number of men, and the average will be about 500,000 for the year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. If I may pursue the inquiry a little further, if the average is to be 500,000 men, and if the War Department is correct in assuming that it will have at least a million men in the service on July 1, and I think they are very much lower than what the number will be, is there any need of having 500,000 men on that basis at the end of the fiscal year; and if it is not expected to have them at the end of the fiscal year, is it desirable to authorize one-year enlistments for the whole number?

Mr. KAHN. The Secretary of War, as I recall, told the committee that the average would be 500,000 men during the fiscal year, and that the pay of that average will be about the amount provided in this bill. It may be that we would not be able to continue our work on the other side at all unless we allowed volunteers to remain over there, because undoubtedly under the law of June 15, 1917, known as the Stone amendment, the War Department is bound to bring back to this country within four months after the definitive terms of peace have been agreed upon, all the men we have on the other side.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask a further question, and I have not been able as yet to get any gentleman to frankly answer my question.

Mr. KAHN. I want to answer it frankly, if I can.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman does, but the gentleman knows so much about the subject, and so much more than I do, that he gets off on something that I do not understand. The War Department in making its request to the Committee on Military Affairs said it based its request for the amount of appropriation upon the average of 500,000 men in the Army, and that it based its request upon the supposition that during the last three months of the fiscal year there would be only 200,000 enlisted men. If that be the case——

Mr. KAHN. Two hundred thousand?

Mr. MANN. Two hundred thousand; I hold the figures in my hand.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; but they would be drafted men.

Mr. MANN. Any kind of men in the Army, enlisted or drafted men, whatever you call them. If the Army is to be only 200,000 men a year from the coming April, what is the necessity of authorizing the enlistment of 510,000 men to serve for not less than a year?

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the only reason that I can give the gentleman is this: That during part of that time there will probably be many more than 200,000 under the flag of the Union, and that finally, at the end of the fiscal year, there will be only 200,000, but in order to carry out the plans of the department it will be necessary at the beginning of the fiscal year to have many more than 1,200,000 men.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think all of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs are so well posted about the provisions of this bill that they naturally confuse the appropriations and the legislative provisions. No one has as yet proposed to reduce the amount of the appropriation, which is based upon an average of 500,000 men, but if that is to be the pay for the Army and it is not to be supplied by a deficiency, what I want to get at is the necessity for authorizing an enlistment of 510,000 men to be in the service at the end of the year, when the appropriation is based on only 200,000 at that time.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that I can give a little information there, or at least my idea on one point. If we proceed now to enlist a number of men toward this 500,000, their one year would run out long before the end of the fiscal year 1920, and it may be that we shall never get the 500,000 here authorized. Now, there may be a number of drafted men or enlisted men who will serve beyond the 1st of July. We shall not be able to bring all of them home or to have other men take their places until after the 1st of July, 1919, and they will have to be paid out of this appropriation. If we get only a part of the full strength of 500,000, they will help make up the average. If we could get the 500,000 to-morrow or the day after this bill is passed, then having the 500,000 men, we should gradually discharge them as their time runs out and thus average up to 500,000 for the whole year and——

Mr. MANN. If we could get them to-morrow, which, of course, nobody believes we can—we know we can not get them to-morrow—and if we could get them the day after this bill becomes a law, which will not be before 12 o'clock on the 4th of March, and if we can get 500,000 within 30 days' time, which we know we can not do, what is the use of dealing in such idle terms? Then we would make an Army in excess of the average proposed by the War Department.

Mr. TILSON. We probably would——

Mr. MANN. It certainly would.

Mr. TILSON. Nevertheless we should be in a position so that if the men came forward we would be able to do it, and——

Mr. MANN. Whether the committee admits that the appropriation is not sufficient for the Army we propose to raise, or whether they admit that they propose to raise an army larger than the average of 500,000 men——

Mr. TILSON. No; neither of those, but we propose to be able to raise the entire Army that we have proposed——

Mr. MANN. Then the appropriation is utterly insufficient.

Mr. TILSON. I do not believe that we shall be able to raise that number, but we should be ready if they should come.

Mr. MANN. When you authorize a thing to be done you proceed on the theory that it is to be done as far as appropriations are concerned. If you do not expect it to be done, what in the world is the use of authorizing it? If you do not want it to be done, why do you permit somebody to do it? As legislators we proceed on the theory that when we authorize a department to do something it wants to do it will do it. I do not know whether they will, and nobody else knows.

Mr. TILSON. We have authorized a certain army for many years, and yet we have never had an army up to the authorization. We have paid the Army year after year by appropriations in the Army bill, but we have never made the appropriation sufficient to pay the entire authorized Army, at least not since I have been here.

Mr. MANN. We have frequently refused a large increase of the Regular Army, although it never came quite up to the authorization. We have increased the authorization; we have increased the size of the Regular Army and the number of enlisted men until it comes pretty close to the top.

Mr. TILSON. We have never appropriated pay in full for the authorized strength of the Army.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with this question. We propose now to authorize an army of half a million men, and if we do let us put a provision in here sufficient to pay them.

Mr. TILSON. We propose to authorize such an army, but not a permanent army, only a temporary, stop-gap army.

Mr. KAHN. For one year.

Mr. TILSON. Not over one year.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask a question. I would like to ask the gentleman from California if any money this bill seeks to appropriate will be used to pay the present Army and will be used to pay an Army of 500,000 men?

Mr. KAHN. It will pay those men who are in the present Army after the 1st of July, 1919.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question? I would like to ask the gentleman from California——

Mr. KNUTSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAER. If the War Department says that 200,000 are all that are necessary at the end of the fiscal year, why is it necessary to have 500,000 after that? What are you going to do with them—what is the purpose?

Mr. KAHN. We will not have 500,000, because you only enlist for one year, and their term of enlistment will expire at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BAER. There are the 200,000——

Mr. KAHN. The 200,000 will be part of that enlisted force. Now, the idea of the War Department is this: The War Department is anxious, just as the committee and membership of this House are anxious, to bring back as speedily as possible the men who are on the other side. In fact we have to bring them back under the Stone amendment——

Mr. BAER. When the treaty is signed.

Mr. KAHN. Four months after the treaty is signed. Now, it is generally believed that it is a physical impossibility to do that because we have not the tonnage. We have not the ships to do it, and therefore it is hoped by this legislation to induce a sufficient number of men over there to enlist by voluntary enlistment, so that the enlisted man will continue a little longer than the man who has been over there in the drafted Army. The hope is that those volunteers will continue their services to the country till the last man can be brought home. Under the provisions of the bill you can only enlist 325,000 of them for one year; that is, for one year at the latest with the beginning of the next fiscal year.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. KAHN. One moment. I want to answer this question first.

And this Volunteer Army practically goes out of existence, or the greater part of it—that is to say, all in excess of 175,000, who would be enlisted under the——

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can hardly say.

Mr. BAER. I am using the time of the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota had the time, and the Chair understands that he yielded to these other gentlemen.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BAER] asked me a question, which I was trying to answer.

Mr. BAER. Pardon me; but I asked the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] if he would yield the time to me.

Mr. KNUTSON. I gave up the balance of my time. I yielded the rest of it back, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to vote for every dollar that it takes to pay and maintain the soldiers that we have now in Europe and to bring them home. I would like to express the desire that they be brought home as quickly as ships can be provided to bring them. I want to vote to look after those soldiers and take care of them in every way that is desirable, if I am given a chance, but I do not seem to be given a chance under this bill. A cloud of words has been emitted on that point, but I do not think very much can be gathered from what has been said, at least it is not binding on the War Department. We have got to look at the bill to find out what the money is going to be used for, and I am unable to learn from the bill that a single dollar that is appropriated by it is going to pay and maintain our soldiers that are now in Europe.

Now, what are the circumstances under which the bill is drawn? The War Department is asked to estimate for 500,000 men and the necessary officers. This is the new Army that the department desires—the Volunteer Army which they say is to take the place of our boys in Europe. They are asked to make an estimate for this Volunteer Army of 500,000 men, and they go out and they bring in these figures that we have in this bill. And that is all they have estimated for. It is all they had in calculation; it is what the money will be spent for, and that is absolutely everything that there is to it.

As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] well says, we must assume that the War Department will do the thing that we are instructing and authorizing them to do by this bill, and that is to proceed to enlist an Army of 500,000 men under the volunteer system. And if they do that thing they will consume every dollar carried by this bill in taking care of that Army, and there will not be a dollar left to take care of our soldiers in Europe. If they do not do that thing, they will evidently do all they can toward it, and will enlist a greater or smaller number—how many I can not tell, and nobody else can. We do know, whether they enlist anybody or not, that we will have 1,200,000 men in Europe at the beginning of the next fiscal year. Only 270,000 soldiers have been brought home since the armistice was signed, over three months ago; and we also know that, proceeding as they have in the past, they will not bring back more than 100,000 to 150,000 men each month hereafter. The average up to this time is not 100,000 a month. That is my understanding. I noticed last month that it was less than 100,000.

Now, if they bring back 150,000 a month it is going to take them eight months to bring back the soldiers we will have over there on July 1, without regard to any more, and it will take an average of two months longer to discharge them out of service. So it will be 10 months that some of these men are going to be in service, without any regard to the new Army.

There is not a man among us who does not know that the appropriation made by this bill is not half enough to pay our soldiers and take care of them in Europe and raise this new Army and transport it over there to take their place when they are discharged. Why, everybody knows that. There is not a Member that will deny that fact. Are we to stultify ourselves and vote for this bill under the pretense of taking care of our boys in Europe and provide for the new Army when we know it will not half do it? And do we not further know that there is nothing in this bill that requires the discharge of anybody that is in Europe before the expiration of his enlistment under the conscription law? We know that perfectly well, and we know that they will be kept in service, if there is any need for them, until their enlistments do expire under that law. And we know they have got to be paid. Do we contemplate that a deficiency bill will be brought in here for a billion and a half dollars for taking care of our Army in Europe? Is it possible that we propose to pass an Army appropriation bill knowing in our hearts that it is only half enough and that at the next Congress there must be a deficiency appropriation of at least an equal amount in order to take care of the Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Does the gentleman know the expectation is that the largest proportion of these enlistments of 500,000 men will come from the men that are at present in Europe, and therefore we simply take and put them in another place?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Whose expectation is that? It certainly is not mine. I do not think anybody who knows much about the feeling of the boys in Europe, and reads the letters the boys are writing back from over there, that knows the sentiments of the people at home, of the fathers, mothers, and wives that have been bereft during this year and a half—I do not think anybody that understands those sentiments can have any such absurd expectation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You want to get the boys back?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do, and I want to say to the gentleman that these boys will not reenlist in Europe. It may be if you bring them back here and let them go home and stay a while and see the folks, and when they stay around a while and see that they can not get jobs, as I very much fear they can not, a good many of them will go back in the Army. But the gentleman should not indulge the foolish expectation that these boys, homesick as they are, clamoring to get back, as they are, wanting to see father and mother and sweetheart here in America—do not let anybody cherish the foolish expectation that they are going to consent, for the pittance of a soldier's pay, to stay longer in Europe to police the Rhine, or go into Russia, or on some other wild-goose chase.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If any man entertains such an expectation, it is time for him to wake up. What have you been taking, gentlemen? What have you been smoking? [Laughter.] Wake up, gentlemen. If you have any such idea, you are in an unnatural sleep, such as would indicate that you have been taking something. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I will.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman believe that by this provision a year's voluntary enlistment is meant, or a year more of conscripted service of the soldiers in France?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I believe that the Army authorities want to conscript the boys in Europe, to make them stay a year longer.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I think there is considerable sentiment in certain militarist circles in this country backing up that proposition, and I think it is time for it to be uncovered here in this House. I want to say to you, gentlemen, that if there is such an idea, the plain people of the United States, the fathers and mothers of the boys, are not going to tolerate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DENT. Very well. I rise in opposition to the proposition. Mr. Chairman, it seems that there is no disagreement among the members of the committee who have been considering this bill as to the proposition that we should proceed to appropriate a sum of money sufficient to support an Army of 500,000 men. I believe I am correct in stating that proposition, after listening to the different remarks that have been made upon this subject. The only question that seems to be disturbing the Members of this House—and we have not yet reached that provision of the bill—is the language in the legislative provision. I have repeatedly stated, and other members of the Committee on Military Affairs have agreed with me, that if the language of the bill was such as to provide for a standing Army of 500,000 men, we would not be in favor of it; that that was not the intention of the committee. Personally in the committee I thought that the best thing we could do would be to provide for the pay of an Army of 500,000, and then provide for the restoration of voluntary enlistments, and stop.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Let me make my statement first, because every time I start to make a statement somebody stops me and asks me a question, and then I never get my statement completed.

Personally those were my views. If we had done that we would have accomplished the purpose that was necessary in order to demobilize the Army during the next fiscal year. The proposition that the committee finally adopted, on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], which was prepared in the Judge Advocate General's office, I thought could not possibly do any harm. The committee therefore finally agreed to it. That is to have a temporary force, purely by voluntary enlistment—because the language is so plain that he who runs may read—in the event that we needed a larger regular force than was provided for under the national-defense act.

Now, I can not see, to save my life, how any harm can be done in providing that men may voluntarily enlist in a temporary force which shall not exceed a certain number of men. You can not get that number unless the men are willing to enlist. I can not see how any harm can be done if we adopt the method of the gentleman from California, although my own view was that if you appropriated for just an Army of 500,000 men and provided for the restoration of voluntary enlistment, you would have accomplished everything that was desired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman feel that, irrespective of the adoption of the legislative program provided for in the bill, the Army can possibly be reduced below an average of 500,000 for the next fiscal year?

Mr. DENT. I do not; and the provision for the pay of an Army of that size would take care of that, if nobody makes a point of order on it.

Mr. GOOD. I was wondering what would become of the 100,000 or more men who had enlisted before the war under the regular provision of law, whose term of enlistment in most cases would not expire until after the close of the year.

Mr. DENT. The committee is in possession of information on that subject which leads them to believe that the number of men enlisted under the provisions of law prior to the declaration of war would amount to only about 30,000 men.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does not the gentleman admit that this bill does not provide for more than half enough money to cover 500,000 men?

Mr. DENT. Does my friend from Alabama desire to increase the appropriation by another billion dollars?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am not in favor of providing for an expenditure without making an appropriation for it. I do not want a deficiency appropriation to come in here of a billion and a half dollars.

Mr. DENT. I will state now to my colleague from Alabama, that of course in fixing the amount of the appropriation it is to a large extent guesswork. It is bound to be guesswork, especially under these circumstances. We know how much it costs for officers. We make an average. The pay of the officers used to be about $2,300, but in this bill about $2,100. We know the average pay of an enlisted man.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENT. We know that the average pay of a man under this increased pay that we have provided for in the bill is about $394, so that we can figure accurately on that. But when it comes to subsistence, when it comes to general supplies, when it comes to the amount of equipment under the Engineer Department, you have got to guess more or less as to the sum of money necessary for that purpose. We have made the very best guess we could under the circumstances, demobilizing the Army as we do; and I do not think that the Committee on Military Affairs, with the information that we have, should be abused further by the House upon the proposition unless some Member of the House is willing to give us a little more information and make it a little more accurate than we have made it.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Another answer, and most important of all, is that nobody knows how long it will be necessary to keep this Army in Europe, because nobody knows when the treaty of peace will be ratified and its ratification proclaimed. There is an uncertainty that no one can answer.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Would it not make a great deal of difference whether the nations had combined themselves together in the form of plunderbund or a league of nations?

Mr. GORDON. We are not appropriating upon the theory that there is going to be any plunderbund. We are appropriating here, and attempting to guess at the average number of men that will be in the Army for the period of the next fiscal year; and the number of men in the Army and the period of their service is entirely dependent upon the date of the ratification of the treaty of peace.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. My understanding of this bill was that it was to relieve the soldiers who are now in Europe and bring them home, and put these other men in their places, without regard to the date of the signing of the treaty of peace.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman intend to keep them there, peace or no peace, and to send these others over there, too?

Mr. GORDON. No; but if it becomes necessary to bring these men back before their terms of enlistment expire, then we are providing an Army to replace them.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The gentleman says "an Army to replace them." What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. GORDON. Almost everybody is demanding that that Army be brought back, regardless of when this war ends.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Is not the war ended now?

Mr. GORDON. No; not exactly, and it will not be, either, until the treaty of peace is ratified; and by the terms of the enlistment contract of the men they can be held four months after the ratification of the treaty of peace.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. This bill is based on an average Army of 500,000 men.

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then it must be that the Army will average 750,000 or 1,000,000 men.

Mr. GORDON. It must not be any such thing. The size of the Army under the old law will depend entirely upon the time when the period of enlistment of these men expires and when they can be brought home.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. If peace were signed to-morrow, still the Army for the next fiscal year would average in excess of 750,000 men under this bill.

Mr. GORDON. How do you know?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Because we can not get them back here from Europe fast enough.

Mr. GORDON. You do not know that.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I do know it.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield?

Mr. GORDON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Will any man who is enlisted under this provision of this bill increase the number of men actually in the Army by one single individual? Is it not the intention simply to replace the men who come out, or at least to take out one man anyway from the number of men now in the service for every one that we enlist under this provision?

Mr. GORDON. Of course that was the theory upon which this legislation was recommended, that these men were intended to take the place of the men now in the service who would be discharged.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There is nothing in the bill that calls for that.

Mr. GORDON. The draft law by its terms expires with the signing of the treaty of peace, and it provides that the men in the service must be discharged within four months if they can be returned.

Mr. DENT. If the gentleman will allow me, it is a little stronger than that. Everybody is discharged immediately upon the signing of the treaty of peace.

Mr. GORDON. Yes, except that although all men who enlisted or were drafted since the declaration of war are by the terms of the law "for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise," the same act declares that within four months after the date of the President's proclamation of peace, or as soon thereafter as it may be practicable to transport the forces then serving without the United States to their home station, compulsory service shall cease.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. Suppose this plan fails?

Mr. GORDON. Which plan?

Mr. GOOD. The plan to raise an Army of 500,000 men by enlistments for one year to take the place of men now in Europe. Suppose that fails and you do not get any enlistments?

Mr. GORDON. Then we will not have any.

Mr. GOOD. How are you going to do the necessary policing over there?

Mr. GORDON. If the terms of enlistment of the men who are over there have not expired and their services are needed, they will have to be kept there; that is all there is about it.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has well said that it was not the intention of the committee to provide for a permanent Army of 500,000 men and 28,000 officers. I am confident, as a result of personal contact and of discussion on this subject with the members of the committee, that there is not one member of the committee who advocates a permanent standing Army of 500,000 men. For myself, it was my opinion that it was unnecessary and unwise to carry a legislative provision in this bill. When peace comes the act of 1917 becomes inoperative. It dies. The men who are in the Army under that act go out of the Army. And here is the situation before us: There will be left about 20,000 men in the Regular Establishment whose terms will not have expired. I think that number is correct. If I am not stating the number correctly, I stand to be corrected.

Mr. SHERWOOD. It was stated yesterday on the floor by a member of the Military Committee—I think the gentleman from Arkansas—that we would not have any Regular Army. It was stated by the chairman of the committee a few minutes ago that we would have an Army of 30,000 men. Now the gentleman says we will have a Regular Army of 20,000 men. I would like to have some information as to which of those statements is correct.

Mr. FIELDS. It is a guess as to just exactly how many men we would have at any given time. We might have 30,000 men one month, and the next month we might have 20,000, because of the expiration of the terms of enlistment of men in the service.

I would say from information that it would run from 20,000 to 30,000 men, but we have a commissioned personnel, provided for under the act of 1916. It seemed to me that all that was necessary was to restore the voluntary enlistment, because when the present emergency defense act goes out of existence the act of 1916 automatically becomes operative, and will be in full force and effect. The act of 1917 does not go out of existence so long as the country is at war. It can not go out of existence until peace comes. But the act of 1916 provides for a peace establishment, and, as I have said, will again become effective as the current temporary act goes out of existence.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Has the committee any information from the War Department as to how many hundred thousand men they will require in the United States, without any regard to Europe?

Mr. FIELDS. At what time?

Mr. IGOE. During the next fiscal year. They have seven hundred and some odd thousand now.

Mr. FIELDS. No.

Mr. IGOE. Did the committee inquire about it?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. What does the War Department say about it?

Mr. FIELDS. They say a good many things with regard to the demobilization of the Army that I do not agree with. They claim, of course, that it takes time to subject men to physical examinations that they must necessarily undergo before they are discharged, and that is correct. As to whether it requires as much time as gentlemen in charge of these examinations claim I do not know, but, in my opinion, examinations could be made more rapidly. They claim that the cantonments throughout the country must be maintained for demobilizing purposes, and I agree with them, but I do not agree with them on the number that it takes to maintain the cantonments. Fort Thomas, Ky., is not used extensively for demobilization, as Camp Taylor is on the one side and Camp Sherman on the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FIELDS. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. There is Camp Taylor on one side and Camp Sherman on the other, where there will be large demobilization of the forces, and at Fort Thomas I am informed that they have 25 men in the hospital and 100 men in the medical branch of the service looking after them. I do not believe that it is necessary to keep 100 men there, and, to be frank with you, I believe there are commissioned officers of the lower ranks throughout the continental United States who have better positions now, many of them, than they ever had before, and who are doing everything in their power to delay demobilization and hold the organization intact for the purpose of perpetuating their commissions.

Mr. KEARNS. The gentleman says he believes it is a fact. Does not he know it is a fact?

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman heard what I said. No; I do not know it.

Mr. KEARNS. It is common knowledge all over the country.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I have consistently supported the War Department, and I am still doing it when it is right. I have raised no question about bringing the men back from Europe.

I have two boys there and would be glad to see them return, but I realize that gentlemen might be made to blush by the record if they should advocate the return of the men from Europe before the war is over and then have some condition develop because of the rapid demobilization that would cause hostilities to reopen. But so far as the forces in this country are concerned, I maintain that it is not necessary to hold in the camps the large numbers that they are maintaining. It is not necessary to hold them for the maintenance of the camps, I know, because if that were true we would never have had any fighting forces from the men now in the cantonments. If that were true, these men now being held to maintain the cantonments would never have been considered fighting forces. They would have been held as repair gangs and as upkeepers of the cantonments.

So now that we are not going to send them across they should be demobilized and demobilized speedily and sent back to the farms and industries.

Another thought. In 1917, prior to the reclassification, a great many men were drafted into the service who had wives and children or other dependents. I have asked the Secretary of War to make a blanket order dismissing from service all men in this country who have dependents at home. But the Chief of Staff says that to do so would interfere with demobilization. I do not understand how a blanket order that every man in the country who has dependents at home should appear for his medical examination and be discharged would interfere with demobilization. As constant as I have been in my support of the War Department, I can not support them in such a doctrine as that, and I refuse to do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a separate paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IGOE: Page 16, after line 9, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"Immediately upon the approval of this act every man in the Army service within the United States, who shall have entered the service since April 6, 1917, shall be permitted to file an application for discharge from the military service. If such application is disapproved by the superior officer authorized to grant such discharge, the application shall be forwarded immediately by such superior officer with the reasons of such disapproval to the Secretary of War for review."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not make the point of order. Members of the Military Committee have been asking us what we can do to bring about the discharge of these men in the United States. I stated to the chairman of the committee that I thought that many of them could be relieved if we would appropriate enough money to employ civilians in some of these positions. But there is another difficulty about securing the discharge of men in the United States. First, let me say that I want to see all of these men brought back from Europe as soon as possible, but I realize that transportation and other questions stand in the way. The chairman of the committee inserted in the RECORD as of February 11 the figures showing that on that date there were in the United States in the Army 48,676 officers and 767,000 men. It was stated at the same time that the department was down to bedrock, but that statement was afterwards corrected by one member of the committee upon the floor yesterday. No member of the committee can tell this House how many men we really need to take care of these cantonments and do the other necessary military work in this country. The trouble about the thing is, as far as my observation and experience go, that under an order of the Secretary of War the commanding officers are in complete authority to act on these applications. I do not blame the commanding officers personally, but I do blame some of their subordinates, for the action that has been taken in many of these cases. One Member of this House inserted in the RECORD an order that was promulgated in one of these camps, stating that letters from outsiders, particularly politicians, would result to the detriment of the applicant. I have a letter from a young man up in one of these places in New Jersey, who was told by his captain, the whole organization was told, that they could file applications, but that if they had any letters sent from the outside, particularly from men who were politicians, as he called them, the application would go to the bottom of the list, and that was the last that would be heard of it. In other camps when applications have been filed they have absolutely been ignored. I have a letter from an officer, saying that an application could not be granted because the regulation provided for the discharge only of men where there was the greatest distress in the family. The order made by the Secretary of War did not read in any such way. The Tenth Division was ordered demobilized at Camp Funston. A regiment of Engineers belonging to that division at the time the armistice was signed was up here at Camp Merritt, or some place, ready to go across. The regiment was sent to another camp, and, as far as the Tenth Division was concerned, that regiment is lost. The order for the demobilization of the Tenth Division is not in existence, as far as these men are concerned, and they are being transferred to some other organization.

Out in another camp when an application was filed and a letter written by some one on the outside, the sergeant told the mother that because influence was being brought to bear that that was the last that would be heard of that application. I have gone to the department and have had them send to find out what has been done with certain of these applications, and I say that when this Congress adjourns on the 4th of March, unless we pass some legislation in respect to it, if we do not have an extra session before July, in my judgment there will be hundreds of thousands of these men in the service, and the Lord help the men, for they will get no assistance from anybody; and I want to have some amendment written into the law under which these applications can be filed as of right, and directing these commanding officers to indorse their reasons for disapproval, and to send them to the Secretary of War, so that the officials of the department may know what is going on. If these men are needed, I am in favor of their being retained, but I do object to some subordinate pigeonholing these applications. Let me tell you what happened in a case that I had the other day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGOE. A young man from my city happens to be up here in one of these camps, assigned to the fire department. I think they had about 8 men there when the armistice was signed, but they need 15 now, since the war is over. He filed an application for discharge. He has a wife. They could not release him because he was needed. His wife has been employed, but became physically incompetent to work, for she was about to give birth to a child. When the man went to the officer and told him the situation, the officer said, "Well, you are neither a midwife nor a doctor."

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would put that officer's name in the RECORD.

Mr. IGOE. I will see to that some other time. In another camp there was a young man who had a brother who was killed in France. The word came to that effect shortly after the signing of the armistice. When I saw him in the latter part of November the young man had asked for a furlough, but was told by an officer that he could not do any good at home, that his brother died in France. He wanted to go home to see his widowed mother and to comfort her.

He was refused. He filed an application for discharge. Both of these boys had been making allotments. The officer certified that his services were necessary and that he could not be discharged. I wrote and wanted to know why he could not be discharged, and they simply said that he was necessary. I had seen the young man, and his duties consisted in taking care of an officers' club. That was the necessary duty he had to perform. I went up and had the case investigated, and the man was discharged.

The other day down in a field in Texas—and by the way it seems that they must have a lot of men from St. Louis down in Texas, and a terrible time they have getting out, from the correspondence I have—a case came to my attention. A man who was married had himself inducted into the service. He would never have been drafted. His wife went to work, but she became ill with tuberculosis and had to quit. He filed application and supplied the affidavits in January, and the officer at that field said that they were going to send some 600 cadets there, and while the first lieutenant and the second lieutenant approved the application the commanding officer would not approve it. The man was held. When I went up the other day and had them wire about it, word came back that the man had been discharged. I sent word to the woman, and got a letter back that she had not seen her husband. I do not know whether the man has been discharged or not. The Secretary of War is trying to find out, but in any event he was not discharged for a month after this proof was supplied that his wife, who had been employed and was working, trying to support herself, was ill with tuberculosis and was unable to work. I hope this committee will not make the point of order against this amendment.

I do not want to have the Army turn men out if they need them; but when Members of Congress can not get satisfaction from these camps, what satisfaction can parents or wives get from them? [Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. I do.

Mr. DENT. From a practical standpoint, as I understand the gentleman's amendment, all that it will accomplish is that the papers in each case shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of War?

Mr. IGOE. If they are disapproved, the officer must send his reason, and that is what I want.

Mr. DENT. But from a practical standpoint, the effect of the gentleman's amendment will simply be to have the papers filed in the Secretary's office?

Mr. IGOE. They are to be sent to the Secretary of War for review.

Mr. DENT. It does not necessarily mean it is going to get the man discharged?

Mr. IGOE. Oh, I will tell you what it means. It means the commanding officer will have to certify the reasons for holding him.

Mr. DENT. I am not going to make the point of order.

Mr. IGOE. I hope the gentleman will not.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the War Department hold that a private soldier has no right to appeal to his Representative to see that his application gets just attention?

Mr. IGOE. The War Department does not say that, but I will tell you the practice. Some of these subordinate officers say that Members of Congress have no right to send letters to a camp; it takes up too much of their time.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. IGOE. I will.

Mr. DENISON. A young man came into my office who had made application to be discharged from St. Elizabeths Hospital, where he was a guard. The subordinate officer there told him when he came to town not to go and call on any of his Congressmen at all.

Mr. IGOE. I will tell you what happened here the other day. I went to see about the discharge of a young man—he is not doing a blessed thing right now, not a thing—and the officer said, "I am working 15 hours a day, and I do not let anybody out." That is the spirit. I want these applications to come to the Secretary of War, so that they may be open to Members of Congress and to the Secretary. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist on his point of order?

Mr. DENT. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I want to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of five minutes debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman would make it 10 minutes. I would like to speak for five minutes.

Mr. DENT. I will make it for 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman consent to my offering an amendment to this amendment if I so desire?

Mr. DENT. I do not intend to cut off any right to offer amendments, but simply to close up debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto at the expiration, say, of 11 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I wish to confer with the gentleman from Missouri about it while debate goes on, and I should like to have opportunity to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. DENT. I do not want to cut off any right to offer an amendment, but simply to close debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the present request?

Mr. DENT. At the expiration of 11 minutes, that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close.

Mr. LITTLE. And I will get five minutes?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that at the termination of 11 minutes all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto shall be terminated. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Alabama permit me, I desire to offer an amendment which will take four or five minutes to explain. It does not have to do with this amendment, and is an amendment to line 9, with reference to the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. DENT. I hope the gentleman will wait until we read that.

Mr. DYER. If the unanimous-consent request is granted I would not have opportunity. It only applies to this item.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment, and we ought not to shut ourselves off. We have spent a great deal of time on things which are not practical, and now we have got a practical matter that is very important, and I do not think we ought to shut all debate off. Some amendment might be offered which ought to be voted down, but some amendment might be proposed which will be practical, and therefore I object.

Mr. DENT. Then I move at the expiration of 11 minutes all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto be closed.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman will not make time by that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves to terminate debate on this amendment, and all amendments thereto at the expiration of 11 minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will that prevent the offering of an amendment now?

Mr. DENT. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. WINGO) there were—ayes 40, noes 3.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-seven Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. DENT and Mr. TILSON took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 103.

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present, and the committee refuses to rise. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I have been very much amazed to hear members of the majority party, who are supposed to be supporting the administration, get up here and denounce the War Department, one after another, and not only amazed at that but amazed that here is an amendment that has been offered from that side of the House which would give the Secretary of War infinite embarrassment if it should be passed; and yet nobody on that side of the House has the guts to raise a point against it, not even the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill.

The proposed amendment would give the Secretary of War more embarrassment than anything else you could do. We all get these complaints from the boys who want to be discharged, but a lot of men——

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Of course, it would be subject to a point of order, and if the gentleman wants to take care of the Secretary of War why does he not make the point of order?

Mr. PLATT. I hold no brief for the Secretary of War, and I want to get an opportunity to say a few words first, as the chairman of the committee did not raise the point of order——

Mr. GORDON. What is your objection to it?

Mr. PLATT. It is perfectly obvious that if you require the applications for discharge of a million men to the commanding officers, to be sent to the Secretary of War, he would be overwhelmed with them, and there would be a whole lot more employees in the War Department than there are now, as the Secretary of War could not give them his personal attention. The Secretary of War already has thousands of letters, whole sacks of them, on this subject.

What was the matter with Circular No. 77, allowing individual discharges for specific reasons of necessity at home? If it had been properly guarded, it would have been a very good circular and a good general order, but it was apparently given out that anybody in the Army could get his discharge by making application and stating that he could get a job. The result was that all the commanding officers in all the cantonments were overwhelmed with applications for discharge, and the thing defeated itself. Then the Secretary of War tried to take it back and said, as I understand his attitude, that he did not see why a married man with a job should get out ahead of an unmarried man without a job, his position being that an unmarried man has got to hunt both a job and a wife, and therefore ought not to be handicapped. That may seem humorous, but, after all, a man with a job, whose job will wait for him, is perhaps more entitled to a discharge immediately than others. The whole question is whether the country needs the services of these men. If it does not, they should be let out.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman think they need them?

Mr. PLATT. If it does need them, Members of Congress ought not to be interfering all the while. If gentlemen, particularly Democrats, want to criticize the War Department, why do they not criticize the Commander in Chief and his Secretary of War, who make the policies under which these things are done?

Gentlemen get up here in the House and say that subordinate officers, lieutenants, and so forth, are getting more money in the Army than they ever got in private life, and that they are interfering with the discharge of soldiers, so as to hold their own jobs. That is absurd, and they know it. I do not know how it is with other Members of Congress, but I get more letters, far more in proportion to the number, from officers who want to be released than I do from enlisted men.

Mr. IGOE. This includes officers as well as men, as I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. PLATT. Officers can resign.

Mr. IGOE. They can not get out when they want to.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, they can not all get out when they want to, but their applications come to the War Department, anyway.

Mr. IGOE. Just recently the War Department made an order that any man in the service abroad could file an application for discharge, and that the papers were to be sent to Gen. Pershing. Is he not as busy as the Secretary of War?

Mr. PLATT. That order is pretty carefully guarded. It refers only to cases of severe illness and extreme necessity at home. It can properly apply only to very few men. If they are going to allow everybody to make application for discharge, you might as well disband the Army at once and say to the Germans: "Come on back. We are going to get out at once. We are tired of defending democracy, and we are going to disband our Army."

The war is not over. It is over in one sense, but not in another. Obviously we have got to have an Army for some time yet. I do not think our liberties would be seriously in peril if we had a standing Army of one-half of 1 per cent of our population, 500,000. I do not think we ought to denounce such an Army as if it were going to upset the liberties of the country. As a matter of fact, these men who are importuning us to get out of the Army now and out of the Navy, quite a proportion of them, when they get out will turn around and enlist. How do I know it? Because they are doing it now. Men coming out of the Army are reenlisting in the Marine Corps,

Mr. DYER. And that is the best place to enlist.

Mr. PLATT. That is the only place they can enlist at present, except in the Navy, which is said to be enlisting 1,600 men a week. Many of the complaints of the soldiers are just, but many of them should not be taken too seriously. We do not want to create the impression that Congress is in favor of disbanding the whole Army all at once, and that is just what many Members are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PLATT. I will ask for two minutes more.

Mr. DYER. I ask that the gentleman have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The time agreed upon was 11 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] was to have 5 of that, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] was to have 5.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. That agreement was objected to, and the debate closed on the motion, without any limitation at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is right about that. It was closed by vote. The Chair had in mind what the agreement was. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] for five minutes. That is making effective what the Chair understood the agreement would be if it were carried out.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, we have just heard it stated that a great many soldiers are leaving the Army and going into the Marine Corps as fast as they can get out of the Army. The reason for that, I suspect, is because the officers of the Marine Corps have more sense of appreciation of the demands and necessities of the American people than have the officers in charge of the organization of the Army. If you make out a good case with the Marine Corps you can get your man out. The trouble in the Army is that the final power to decide whether a farmer needs his boy worse than the Army does is lodged with some little chap somewhere who thinks he is an irresponsible autocrat and who is going to decide for himself that question without regard to consequences unless we enact the consequences. They have gone so far as to issue orders, some of which I read here January 29, that if any boy who wanted to get out had the support of a Member of Congress that knew him and certified to the facts in his case he would be the last one on the list, and he would have more trouble than anybody else. That is the kind of trouble we are up against.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I received a letter from a lieutenant colonel a day or two since in which he stated that it was his observation that all applications that were indorsed by Members of Congress and other prominent men were very poorly founded; that they had submitted very poor grounds for relief in such cases.

Mr. LITTLE. The reason why Congress ought to pass this provision is that the men whose discharges they recommend are discriminated against by these irresponsibles. The case out in the naval training station near Chicago I called attention to, and in a few days the Bureau of Navigation issued an order to the effect that all men desiring to get out should be discharged upon their applications, providing they are in certain detachments named. Now, I find to my regret that that order is not obeyed. Twice I have received letters from officers who had not evidently heard of it, officers who wrote to me that the man's application was on file and would be examined, and if the facts warranted it the man who had made the application would be discharged.

A law should be made and the officers called to its obedience. There is no reason on earth why a little petty officer in a little or big place who writes from down in New York that anybody who has the recommendation of a Congressman has a bad case, should be allowed to hold his place. The war is over, and every boy in the United States who has a job, whose father needs him, or whose school is open for him ought to be discharged on his application, as the Navy has indicated. And yet we find fellows like this lieutenant colonel writing to the gentleman, a Member of Congress, that he can not think of such a thing as giving his reasons consideration. There is one remedy in such a case, and that is to have a review somewhere. That review should probably rest with the Secretary of War.

If he needs more clerks to perform the clerical work involved in such reviews, he could command the services of some of these soldiers who are going around and doing nothing. I would rather have these petty officers, who have no sense of responsibility, relieved anyway. The law should reach these feudal despots. The other day a boy was acquitted by a court-martial, and when the acquittal went before Maj. Gen. Thomas

Barry, up at Chicago, who is about the best example of the typical autocrat we have, he disapproved it, although the law and the evidence said it ought to be sustained. But he could not help himself, and the boy was released. That is the class of people that we are up against—petty autocrats, with no idea of the necessities of the American farmer or the boy in the shop or the schoolboy.

Now, gentlemen, we ought to have a review by somebody with some sense of responsibility, with some views broader than those of a petty officer or even of an officer higher up. Let the Secretary of War review these cases. He is an American civilian citizen, at least, and he ought to understand these things. Let him have a proper board of review before a body of civilians.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. I fully agree with the gentleman that in the case of an officer who acts as the gentleman stated officers did a while ago, he ought to be called down.

Mr. LITTLE. This is the only way to do it.

Mr. LAZARO. But I do not think you ought to undertake to indict the whole War Department because some officers do not do their duty. The gentleman said the war is over. Is it over?

Mr. LITTLE. It is over over there, even if it is not over over here. [Laughter.] We are not indicting the department. We are reposing confidence in it instead of in the irresponsibles.

Mr. LAZARO. Do you mean to say that the peace treaty is signed?

Mr. LITTLE. No. We have nearly 2,000,000 men over there, and to-day they are arranging to raise 500,000 more men in order to let them out over there. I am not in favor of quitting before the end is reached, but this bill arranges for that. Why should these men be held unnecessarily? It is not necessary to keep those who are ready to go to school or work. We have been informed a few moments ago that often boys released from the Army in the United States go right away and enlist in the marines. The marine officers have generally seemed to realize that the needs of civil life now are superior to theirs for the moment. They have comported themselves with reason instead of insulting our taxpayers and their Representatives. If you treat these boys well and act with comprehension of the country's needs you will have no trouble in filling up the ranks, as the experience of the Marine Corps shows. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES to the amendment offered by Mr. IGOE: In line 9 of said amendment, after the word "application," insert the following: "together with any affidavits and all other proofs which may have been submitted with such application," so that as amended the amendment will read, "If such application is approved by the superior officer authorized to grant such discharge, the application, together with any affidavits and all other proofs which may have been submitted with such application, shall be forwarded immediately by such superior officer, with the reasons for such disapproval, to the Secretary of War for review."

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make a speech on that. I think the amendment is self-evident and should be adopted along with the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BAER offers the following amendment to the amendment of Mr. IGOE: At the close of the amendment add:

"That it shall be the duty of officers to notify and instruct men under their commands as to the method of procedure prescribed by the regulations for securing an honorable discharge from the service."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I have two or three amendments for which I desire recognition. I will read the first one and then send it to the Clerk's desk. It is as follows:

Page 16, after the figures "$624,004," insert:

"All officers and enlisted men who in actual combat or while in actual service at any front shall have performed the duties of an officer or enlistment man of higher grade or rank shall, for the period during which such duties were performed and until relieved by competent authority, receive the same pay and allowances as the officer or enlisted man of the grade or rank whose duties were assumed. Such payment and record of service shall appear on the discharge certificate of each officer and man affected. For pay of such officers and enlisted men, $2,000,000."

Mr. KAHN. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has not been offered yet.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I offer the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I suggest that the amendment be reported at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Dakota offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Page 16, after the figures "$624,004," insert:

"All officers and enlisted men who in actual combat or while in actual service at any front shall have performed the duties of an officer or enlisted man of higher grade or rank shall, for the period during which such duties were performed and until relieved by competent authority, receive the same pay and allowances as the officer or enlisted man of the grade or rank whose duties were assumed. Such payment and record of service shall appear on the discharge certificate of each officer and man affected. For pay of such officers and enlisted men, $2,000,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I must admit that if the point of order is made against this amendment it is well taken, but I hope that the gentleman may be induced not to make it. It is a well-known fact that two things in combat at the front during the late war were always present and expendable and need not be accounted for. One was the supply of first and second lieutenants and the other was ammunition. A great percentage of the lieutenants and officers were incapacitated for service. Many of you may not have realized that immediately upon the incapacitation of those officers, sergeants, corporals, and enlisted men at once assumed command of the different companies and performed the duties of the officers. No provision has ever been made for recognition of their services, and no provision has ever been made for their payment. The payment amounts to nothing for the services that were performed. It is the recognition that should be given. I can call to mind one particular case in a company with which I am personally familiar, and could mention many other cases, where every officer was either killed or wounded. In this company immediately after disappearance from the field of action of the officers seven sergeants in succession assumed command of that company. The sergeants were killed or wounded, and the company was taken from the line with a corporal in charge, with 90 men. Now, something should show upon the records that those inducted or enlisted men did the work that officers had been performing and did it just as well, performed the service just as well, as any officer could have performed it.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. For one question.

Mr. LITTLE. Was not that second lieutenant a Member of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not at that time.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will.

Mr. KAHN. I agree with the gentleman that something ought to be done for these men, but can the gentleman give the House or the committee any information as to how many of these men there were who took this advanced rank and led their men?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that there is no man in the world that could give him the complete information he desires. All of it could not be secured perhaps for 15 years, because all of the cases will not develop by that time. There are many thousands of cases where some buck private or first-class private or corporal or sergeant performed the duties, and I desire that they may receive one day's payment and have the record made, and have it appear on their discharge certificate, so that their parents may know that they performed services of the highest rank and performed them well.

I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that my amendment provides and applies only to men who performed these services under actual battle conditions at the front. It does not apply to any man or officer who did not perform the services under actual battle conditions.

Mr. KAHN. May I ask the gentleman another question? Does not the gentleman know that there are claims now pending growing out of exactly that kind of condition in the Civil War? There was some legislation of this kind passed, without information, and claims are coming up now, fifty-odd years after the war is over—claims for additional pay. Does not the gentleman candidly think that this matter ought to be investigated and full information given to the House before he proposes an amendment of this kind?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I would say not. The matter is of little expense for the pay for each man for a day or two. It makes little difference, and I would accept an amendment providing that all of these claims must be presented within six months or one year, if the gentleman desires to propose one.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from California, let me say that those claims mentioned by the gentleman from California are not claims at all of the character the gentleman is now discusing. Those claims, and I think I speak advisedly, are of men who commanded companies, not under battle conditions, but during the period after the war was over.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I believe we are all in sympathy with the gentleman's proposition, but I do hope that this bill will not be loaded down with too much legislation, and for that reason I make the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Will not the gentleman reserve his point of order and let the gentleman from South Dakota have five minutes more?

Mr. DENT. I will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from South Dakota be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I understand the gentleman's amendment provides simply this, that these men who in actual battle, by reason of the incapacity of the superior officer, takes the position of the superior officer and performs his duty, limited to battle conditions, are to be recognized by having the pay of that officer whose duties they assume, for a short period of time and that that would in most cases be a day or two days or two weeks?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I thank the gentleman for his observations, which are helpful in the presentation of the facts. I am not familiar with the claims growing out of the Civil War, because I had very little to do with that particular war. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Are the cases that the gentleman has in mind those in which the commanding officer have in their reports commended the soldiers for performing services of that kind?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes. The records will show that captains were incapacitated and the lieutenant had gone and the sergeant or corporal took his place.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the official reports of the battle show it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Absolutely, and they will show that corporals and sergeants have had charge of companies, and they never will get the recognition unless the gentleman abstains from making the point of order and allows this to go into the bill. There is no great amount of money involved.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit another question? That meets the objection raised by the gentleman from California, because the reports of the general commanding the battle that they rendered the services ought to be ample proof of the fact?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I think so.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. One other suggestion. The gentleman from California turned to me and said that the general would not make such a report. The gentleman from California forgets the historic case in which Gen. Gibbons, in his report after the Battle of Gettysburg, says that after he was wounded and Gen. Hancock was wounded, Lieut. Col. Frank Haskell, of a Wisconsin regiment, performed the duties of a general in command of the division, and as such rendered heroic and vitally important service on the third day at the Bloody Angle and clump of trees. His name is mentioned in the report of the general.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The reports the gentleman speaks of were undoubtedly made by the captains of the companies where the sergeant performed the services of the second lieutenant.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Not necessarily by the captain of the company, but by the commanding officer.

Mr. KAHN. Of the immediate unit.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. That would not probably be the general, would it?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. As a matter of fact, the reports would not be necessary, because the casualty lists as they came out would show that certain men were incapacitated, and therefore the next junior man in rank must have taken charge of the company.

Mr. KAHN. That is true; but who would make the report? Would it be the general in charge of the division or of the brigade, or would the report be made by the captain of the company or the lieutenant of the company, or the major of the battalion, whichever the case may be?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. It would be made by the commanding officer of the company through military channels to the major of the battalion and the colonel of the regiment.

Mr. KAHN. Exactly so.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Exactly. We agree upon that proposition entirely. The report would be forwarded to the general of the brigade and then of the division, but I want to emphasize this fact, that if you do not recognize these enlisted men, these privates, corporals, sergeants at this time in this bill they will never get the recognition. I should dislike myself to be the man who would take the attitude that these enlisted men who performed this service should not secure the little three or four dollars a day and the statement on their record that they were big enough to take command of a company in some of the greatest battles of this war, and I plead with the Members of this House not to make the point of order, because I know of my own personal knowledge that they are entitled to that recognition, and they ought to receive it. [Applause.]

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, is my colleague's amendment so phrased that it will be retroactive?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Yes. It is so phrased. It says, "who shall have," and so forth.

Mr. REED. I wanted to be certain of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired. Does the gentleman withdraw his reservation of the point of order?

Mr. KAHN. I do.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee made a point of order, or reserved it, and left the floor in my charge.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. FIELDS. It has already been made by the chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Oh, no; the point of order has not been made. I ask the gentleman not to make it upon the theory that the chairman desired it, when he is not present.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If it is the gentleman's intention to make the point of order, before he makes it I would like to make a request of him.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I am unwilling to assume the responsibility of making the point of order. I understood the point of order was made, and I was about to call the Chair's attention to that fact; but if the point of order has not been made I am unwilling to assume responsibility for making it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the situation to be this: The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] said that he would make the point of order——

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve it for a moment?

Mr. GORDON. I will reserve it for a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. If the gentleman will so amend his amendment as to strike out the money feature, so that the fact of this particular service may be indorsed upon the man's discharge, would the gentleman then withdraw the point of order?

Mr. GORDON. No. The money feature is not material with me, but the point is this, that in such an important matter I believe it ought to be done in the regular way by legislation. The reason that makes this subject to the point of order is the reason why a bill ought to be introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota, and referred to a committee, and that it ought to be sent to the War Department for their recommendation, so that it will be done properly. This evidence is all retained, as the gentleman from South Dakota has pointed out, in the reports of the officers of these different units, and the fact that it is not tacked on this appropriation bill as a rider does not necessarily preclude its being enacted into law.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. LITTLE. My point of order is that the gentleman from Ohio reserved no point of order, and he gets in too late after discussion.

Mr. GORDON. The chairman of the committee made it and then he reserved it and went out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio did not lose any right, because the moment it was apparent that it would not be made by the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Ohio made the point of order and reserved it——

Mr. GORDON. I reserve it at the request of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to make an appeal to my friend and our friend from Ohio, and I am sorry he is not going to be with us in the next House. [Applause.] Here is the situation: These enlisted men—and this applies in the main to enlisted men; it may apply to some officers—are soon all to be discharged from the Army. I was disposed to feel when the amendment was introduced that a point of order ought to be made upon it, because I fully sympathized with the position of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman in charge of the bill that legislation of this sort really ought to be brought before the appropriate committee at the appropriate time and considered, but, after all, that can not be done at this session of Congress. The Committee on Military Affairs if they wanted to would have no opportunity to pass a bill on this subject at this session of Congress now apart from the appropriation bill, so that practically the only way we can do this at all is to do it now on this bill. After they receive their discharges it is probably too late to show anything of this sort on the discharge. Now, there is this feeling in the Army to-day, and I think we all know it. The enlisted men are sore very largely at the officers and at the Government, a natural condition produced probably by natural causes, not intentional. It seems as though we might at this time, when comes the only opportunity when we can do it, to do this little tribute to the enlisted man in the Army who in the face of fire marched to the front and took command of his company and led them probably in many cases to his own death. I hope, sympathizing as I do with the position of the gentleman from Ohio, being very much opposed to the average piece of legislation being offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill, that under the circumstances the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Alabama will feel at liberty to let the House express itself upon the merits of the proposition. [Applause.] I think it would be a graceful and a gracious attitude to take and would very much help the morale and spirit in the Army. [Applause.]

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman—well, I made the point in the absence of the chairman who has returned——

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 16, after the figures "624,004" insert: "In all cases where officers or enlisted men have been promoted to higher grade or rank and through no fault of their own have not received notice of such promotion for a period of more than three days after the date of the order thereof, the pay, and allowance of the officer or enlisted man so promoted shall in the higher rank or grade commence on the date of the issuance of the order of promotion. For the pay of such officers and enlisted men, $2,000,000."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that. I hope the gentleman will withhold that and offer it when we reach the legislative portion of the bill, where it would more properly come in.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that one amendment has been adopted, one of my amendments has been offered at this place, and I feel that an amendment of this kind fits as well into one place in the bill as another, and in the congestion that will come at the close of debate on this bill it will be impossible to be heard, and I would like to have the gentleman allow the committee to express itself on this amendment.

In a very few moments, if the gentleman will permit me, I could give him the reason for this amendment.

Mr. DENT. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Owing to the defective mail service in the American Expeditionary Forces, a great many officers and enlisted men who had been promoted and had been wounded did not receive the notice of their promotion for two or three months.

I have been careful about criticizing the administration or the War Department about anything that occurred during the course of this war, as I shall continue to be. It is very easy to criticize, and I notice that many of the men who indulge in criticism do not mention names, dates, or places. If I have any criticism now or at any other time I shall give the names and the dates and the places. I simply want to call attention to the fact that through the fault of some one, I do not know who, we did not get any mail in the American Expeditionary Forces. Many men went into action; they were wounded; they were promoted on the field and then wounded; and they did not get notice of their promotion from sergeant to second lieutenant for, say, two or three or four months, and they never received the pay that they should have received. I can name some of them. There was Lieut. Evern Jones, from Mississippi. I can not remember the place in which he lives, but I can find it. There was Second Lieut. Arthur Smith, of the Thirty-seventh Division, who was wounded in the Argonne Forest with a machine-gun bullet, and who for two months never received notice of his promotion; there was Lieut. Towson, of the Three hundred and thirteenth Infantry, who was wounded in action at Verdun, was promoted on the field, and after his promotion, because he was wounded, sent to a hospital, and did not receive any mail, he never had a chance to accept the commission. And there were perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 cases of wounded men who, because of the fault of the War Department or the Post Office Department, did not receive notice of their promotion and did not receive the increased pay, and they are equitably entitled to it. [Applause.]

Now, the only way they will get this pay for the next 10 or 15 years will be by the adoption of this amendment. And I say at this time that if the Military Committee of this House, representing this administration, want them to get the pay they will only have to give this House an opportunity to vote, because I know the feeling of the House in this matter.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is the state of the military records such that very likely by consulting them they could arrive at a way of adjudicating these matters?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Absolutely, because there is the date the men were promoted. They are mailed a notice of promotion. These notices followed these men all over France. They are at the hospitals, and I suppose some of those notices have not been received yet. The men were performing the duties of the higher grades and they were entitled to receive the pay, and the records are clear and plain. There can be no dispute about the facts in the case.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not mean by my question to doubt the proposition of the gentleman, but merely to ascertain whether the facts were available so that the intent of the amendment could be carried out.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Absolutely.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And that condition does not become effective until the man accepts?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. Until the man accepts; and he can not accept until he receives a notice, and men did not receive it because of the defective mail service. I would say, in conclusion, that my proposal is that the promotion of each man shall become effective on the date where, through no fault of his own and that is expressly provided in the enlistment, he did not receive notice of his promotion. It applies to enlisted men and sergeants who were promoted, and second lieutenants who were promoted to first lieutenants, and so forth. The amendment is aimed to meet the needs of the lower grades only.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LITTLE. Is it not a fact that there is an appropriation to pay men from the time they are promoted?

Mr. GORDON. A man is entitled to it as a matter of law whether it is received by him or not.

Mr. LITTLE. If that is true, this is not subject to a point of order. There is merely an appropriation.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. He does not get his pay until he files his acceptance of the commission, and the action of the chairman of the committee in not allowing this to go through means that thousands and thousands of young officers and enlisted men who were wounded and sent back to the hospitals will not get their pay.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is incorrect about that. It can always be corrected by subsequent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. All of this discussion is out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that the rule I have given was the one in force in our Army.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of the officers, Philippine Scouts, $624,004.
Additional pay to officers for length of service, $4,506,933.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. What part of the bill have we read?

The CHAIRMAN. We have just finished lines 10 and 11.

Mr. DYER. I called the attention of the chairman of the committee to an amendment I desire to offer at the end of line 9, which I could not offer until the discussion was finished on these other amendments. I have an amendment that goes directly to that line, and I ask permission to present it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DYER: Page 16, at the end of line 9, insert:

"Provided, That captains and lieutenants of Philippine Scouts who are citizens of the United States shall hereafter be retired in the grade held by them at the date of retirement and shall be retired for disability under the same conditions, including pay, as officers of the Regular Army, and that they shall receive as retired pay 2½ per cent a year for each year of service, to a maximum of 75 per cent of the active pay of their grades at date of retirement and retired pay being increased for the additional years of service up to the maximum of 75 per cent of the active pay: Provided, That hereafter when an officer of Philippine Scouts has served 20 years he shall be eligible for retirement under the provisions of this act: Provided further, That all officers of Philippine Scouts on the date of the passage of this act be commissioned, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and not examined after entrance except upon promotion to the next higher grade: And provided further, That all officers of Philippine Scouts now borne on the retired list as such shall be transferred to the retired list created by this section and shall thereafter receive the retired pay and allowances provided by this section for other officers of Philippine Scouts: And provided further, That any former officer of Philippine Scouts who vacated his office in the Philippine Scouts by discharge or resignation on account of disability contracted in line of duty shall be placed on the retired list created by this section and shall thereafter receive the retired pay and allowances authorized by this section: And provided further, That officers of Philippine Scouts retired under the provisions of this act shall not form part of the limited retired list now authorized by law."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. WINGO rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. Every time we have anything really important before us, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], in charge of the bill, tries to drive through. I am one of those who want to have full consideration of these matters. When we had up a proposition involving 750,000 men an attempt was made to shut off debate. The gentleman wants to shut out amendments.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, is this to come out of my time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not to come out of the gentleman's time. None of this is in order.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think that this amendment will be considered and voted on?

Mr. DYER. I trust so. The gentleman from Alabama, in charge of this bill——

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman from Alabama is going to play this way, fast and loose——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] has the floor.

Mr. WINGO. I know it, and I want him to have a sufficient audience to hear him. Therefore I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-three gentlemen are present—not a sufficient number, not a quorum.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. DENT. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chairman appointed Mr. DENT and Mr. BARKLEY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 6, noes 93.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is present. The Chair counts himself, as he has the right to do, and that makes 100, a quorum.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEARNS. When a point of no quorum is made and the vote is being taken by tellers, if there are gentlemen in the Chamber who do not pass through the tellers, can the Chair count those?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes. If the gentleman has in mind anyone who did not pass through the Chair will count him. But that is not relevant in this connection. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KEARNS. I wanted to know the parliamentary fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the parliamentary fact. A quorum is present. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has reserved a point of order on this amendment. I trust that he will not make it. The officers of the Philippine Scouts have long sought from the Congress relief that they are, in my judgment, thoroughly entitled to. The amendment which I have presented is a bill that is now pending in Congress. I trust that in case a point of order is made and granted to this amendment in the House that the Senate will add it as an amendment to this appropriation bill when it reaches the Senate. A favorable report has been had upon it by the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, and which is as follows:

It is assumed that the Members of the Senate are familiar, in a general way, with the organization and history of the Philippine Scouts. For the proper explanation of this bill it is sufficient to say that since the substantial withdrawal of the Army from the Philippine Islands the Philippine Scouts have been the armed force, or constabulary, for the maintenance of order in the islands. Their duties have been important, their work severe, and they have always been noted for both fidelity and efficiency. The officers of the scouts have been in the main citizens of the United States taken from civil life. They are not permitted to go above the rank of captain. Above that rank command has been with the officers of the Regular Army. These captains and lieutenants have been appointed after rigid examination, and they are required to be examined at stated periods, whether promoted or not. Barring short leaves of absence at long intervals, they are required to live continuously in the islands, although Regular Army officers have short tours of duty on account of the climate and other unhealthy conditions. These captains and lieutenants of the Philippine Scouts are very competent men, for no others could take the natives of the islands and train them into an orderly, effective soldiery.

At this time there are about 165 scout officers. The bill under consideration relates to the conditions under which these officers may be retired, their retiring pay, and suitable provisions for appointment, confirmation by the Senate, and commission.

Under the existing law scout officers are retired under the conditions which govern the retirement of enlisted men of the Regular Army, except in the case of disability, and are given the retiring pay and allowances of master signal electricians of the United States Army. The present bill seeks to change the existing law, as follows:

First. These officers are to be permitted to retire after 20 years of service, instead of 30.

Second. The retired pay is fixed at 2½ per cent per year for each year of service, not exceeding, however, 75 per cent of the active pay.

Third. The officers now on the retired list are to be given the pay and allowances provided in this bill.

Fourth. That any such officer who has heretofore been discharged or resigned on account of disability contracted in the line of his duty is to receive the pay and allowances authorized by the bill.

The justice of awarding this further recognition to these men has been established to the entire satisfaction of the committee. It is not necessary to recapitulate the showing, for everyone who is acquainted with conditions in the Philippine Islands, and who knows the value of the service which these men have rendered, will at once concur in the conclusion we have reported.
